One important thing you want to know about a trade paper is that its circulation is in the trade; of the trade—any other kind is waste for a trade advertisement.

We have told you that Motion Picture News circulation is "hand-picked." Here is a letter that shows one of the ways we keep it so:

San Francisco News Company,
747 Howard Street,
San Francisco, Calif.

Gentlemen:

“We are returning herewith your check No. 1624 for $38.40 which you sent for 24 yearly subscriptions to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

“We are very sorry to state that we cannot accept these subscriptions unless we know to whom they are going as it is our policy to accept subscriptions only from those connected in some way with the motion picture industry.

“If you care to send us the names of these prospective subscribers, together with their connection with the motion picture industry, we will be very glad to place their names on our list, and quote you the same rate as is covered by your check.”

A William S. Hart Production

"The greatest picture I have ever produced" says William S. Hart.

Why? Because it's the story he's wanted to do for three years. And now, producing with his own company, he has let nothing stand in the way of making "The Toll Gate" his greatest work.

A wonderful story, six months in the making, sixteen hundred miles for locations. No expense, no trouble, no detail, no time spared.

That's why!

brings to the screen an exquisite creation.

The drama-world of two continents knows that Doris Keane is "Romance"—and "Romance" is Doris Keane.

The play, especially written for Miss Keane by Edward Sheldon, played a year in New York, a whole season in Chicago, a special engagement in Boston and three and a half years in London. And always the artistry, the charm, the rare beauty of Miss Keane made "Romance" a vivid memory-haunting creation.

Of all the plays of recent years, none has been more sought after for screen presentation than "Romance." United Artists Corporation is to bring it to motion picture audiences, with Doris Keane herself in the role that has made her beloved the world over.

PEARL LAEMMLE PRESENTS

PRISCILLA DEAN in "The VIRGIN of STAMBUL"
ALTHOUGH the first public showing of "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" will not be held until Sunday, March 21st, at The Broadway Theatre, New York City, the stupendous success of the production is just as sure as the sunrise of tomorrow morning. This is simply because TOD BROWNING took H. H. Van Loan's big, human, romantic story of the glowing East and painted in his wonder-pictures with the sure and sweeping strokes of a master hand. Because BROWNING, the Director—the Master Producer—had, for his heroine, an electrifying actress who lives her gloriously appealing part in every move and word and gesture. And because CARL LAEMMLE spared neither money nor time nor the country's best brains in an investiture which is nothing short of gorgeous. Gentlemen! The year's biggest picture is here! We said this two years ago of "The Kaiser"—we said it a year later of "The Heart of Humanity" we say it again now of Titles Tell You Why!

These captions in the picture will show you how intensely interesting are its problems of love, home, marriage and divorce to every woman. It is worth your while to read them.

Statistics prove that a majority of divorces are due to woman’s failure at her own job—the business of marriage.

The woman—a clinging vine in the hot-house variety of girls—and innocently dreaming in her cocoon of love.

The man—of that brand of men who claims to know women yet has never tried matrimony.

To the average husband marriage is only an incident—each woman thinks her husband will prove the exception.

The male is the master of the home and tries to prove it.

After a few months of constant association—mere man prefers the acid of the grape fruit to the honeyed words of his wife.

There is a woman for you—always imagining her husband’s business an excuse for getting away from her—instead of realizing that the harder he goes after it, the more wonderful things she can have.

"Your domineering manner is typical of most husbands. They respect every woman except the one they marry."

"That's it, you women hold a council of war and decide that a man should devote all of his time to ekingling you."

"Oh—men are all alike after they are married!"

"She sure enough does love that man."

"Yes, dis house jus plumb full o' love—trouble is, it is so lop sided, it is going to fall and bust itself wide open some day."

"Romeo must have fallen off the balcony—he ain't showed up this morning and it's about time for Juliet to flash in her morning call."

Of course every married woman realizes her husband is not perfect—seeing other men opens her eyes to that fact.

It really is surprising that so many adorable men have remained single.

Wondering if she has grown to tolerate him only as necessary—but scarcely interesting part of her life.

Before marriage woman is sought—and therefore Superior. After marriage she becomes the seeker and fails to understand why her modern husband’s love works in eight hour shifts, while hers demands a twenty-four hour day. She is therefore—?

"I want you to write a note of endearment on several cards and each day enclose one of them with flowers to be sent to this address."

How difficult it is to punish those we love, though our future happiness may depend upon it.

"I told you before that I don't know—and if I did, I wouldn't tell a woman."

"Be fair—aren't you just as much to blame for this constant bickering?"

"Because you are so loyal to your husband, of course—that gives you the right to advise how I should act toward my wife."

"Don't dare tell that you met me with him this afternoon, he is terribly suspicious."

"With my own eyes I saw him bringing her home."

Believing that husbands have a right to know, he speaks his mind.

"He loves me! he loves me! the jealous old darling."

"Aren't you different from most wives whose husbands must constantly watch them—can't I trust you?"

A dab of flower on her nose, the sort of woman a man likes to come home to.

"Lord—Lord—if I was just as sure of heaven's honey—the only way to get along with men is to make them happy—the only way to make them happy is to make them unhappy—keep them guessing and they will be unhappy—then they will love you and be happy."

"You all make too much fuss over this man. You wouldn't catch me doing that. I'd keep them guessing."

Love is like a security that soon burns out and marriage is the demi-tasse of all that remains.

If he had stepped on his accelerator and arrived home a minute earlier, the shadow of suspicion would have been cast in another direction.

"During business hours you must take love for granted and stop calling me up at the office."

Possibly his husbandlike attentions are not unwelcome to her.

"He is neglecting you and you must put your foot down now."

Not hesitating to cluck her intrigue in the protective presence of her brother and his wife, even though the penalty might mean ruin for two men.

A game that has paid him royally, employing courtesy and attention to gain vital business secrets from unhappy wives.

To him women are only a means to an end.

Helplessly unable to deny the accusation without exposing his wife's guilt.

"You cannot go on living with that man. You know I love you. Will you come?"

"Fine! Now is the time to assert your superiority and come with me."

He capitalizes the situation to assume the dual role of social parasite and home breaker.

"You ill bred hoo! To insult a guest in the house of your hostess."

"I would rather pay too little attention to her than too much to the wife of another man."

He will never know how an inferior being saved him from the chasm of divorce.

"My little wife, I have learned tonight how dear and wonderful you are."

"My presence here with him is just a game to arouse your jealousy and devotion."

Greater love hath no woman than to risk her reputation for another.

"'From Hand to Mouth' is an extremely funny Harold Lloyd Comedy." Horriet Underhill in N. Y. Tribune.

"The Harold Lloyd Comedy 'Captain Kidd's Kids' is very funny."

"Harold Lloyd is certainly carrying a beacon light and showing the way to his contemporaries. He has a neater bag of tricks than all the other mirth provokers combined."

Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News.
Lucky the woman who has no past to rise up and smite her! Here was one, innocent of evil, who found herself almost powerless in the grip of circumstances having their origin in the misdeeds of others. But she refused to be the puppet of Fate and became its master. A strong picture based on a timely theme.

What Do You Want in Comedies?

Are you looking for comedies carrying every week the same little cast of “so-called” stars—whose names mean nothing at your box office—whose peculiar type fits them for only a certain type or kind of comedy story, so that the same situations and stories must be rehashed, week after week, to fit that little cast? If so—we have nothing for you.

Each "Comedyart" Production proves the real practical picture-making brains of Ward Lascelle. He needs no introduction to exhibitors who keep pace with the times. "Comedyart" is just another instance where Mr. Lascelle has brought into reality a common-sense, practical idea, a two-reel combination of diversified subject and class.

So starts the story. And thereupon are we introduced to the wonderful land of make-believe—to the child whose happiness comes, not from life, but from the pleasures which she conjures up in her own mind.

Are You a "Stay-at-Home"?

If a market place has any value at all to enable you to reach your customers and prospects it has that value every day it is "open for business."

The day you "stay-at-home" is a day taken from your sales effort. The "minus" sign never did the work of the dollar mark.

The medium that puts your advertisements before the live exhibitors of the field is "open for business" every week—and is read every week.

And it's the every week advertiser who sells his point. He is in the market place every time a customer appears.

HALF of the old-timers will never be able to adjust their sights if present plans go through and P. A. Powers steps out of Universal.

Isn't it by all odds the most interesting story of the week—and of many moons?

What recollections arise as we travel the years back through Universal's history—passing Warner's Features on the way—and back to the fighting days of the industry.

As we think over those early days the thought often comes to us that Universal has never received the full credit it should get for the battles fought in those early days.

It can truly be said that Universal cast the shackles off the industry, that Universal was truly "the liberator."

Those were surely hectic days when an independent film man broke ninety-seven different rules, regulations and laws every time he turned a camera crank or glanced inside a projector.

"Expansion" seems to be the word if we may judge from this week's news pages. Educational announces some big moves; Robertson-Cole's convention brings some hints forth; Selznick's Prima deal gives news of five and six color subjects to come; and First National breaks the ice on the year's "new star" stories with the capture of Lionel Barrymore.

Altogether "some week,"—hardly one when you can afford to miss a page.

ROLLER SKATES COST MUCH LESS THAN AUTOMOBILES BUT THEY AREN'T NEARLY SO GOOD IF ONE WANTS TO GET VERY FAR!

Certain motion picture distributors could save vast amounts of money annually by using posters other than RITCHEY posters. Despite that fact they continue to use RITCHEY posters. Why?

Because they positively know that RITCHEY posters pay! Because they know that for the increased cost greatly increased box-office receipts accrue! They order RITCHEY posters for the same reason that causes shrewd men to purchase profitable investments rather than gold bricks! Experience also counts heavily in their preference for RITCHEY posters, for the one thing that all experience teaches us is this—the best is always the cheapest in the long run!

That the RITCHEY poster is the best is an undeniable fact. As practically all of the men capable of contributing anything toward the making of a really great poster are in this organization all working harmoniously under a splendid leadership, it is impossible for any one else to produce posters of equal merit.

A motion picture poster should be judged by its box-office returns, and so judged the RITCHEY poster is the best poster investment that it is possible to make!

A Convention That Inspired Utica—and the Commuting Legislators—Now
For a Real National Organization at Last

THE Utica Convention was much more than a personal triumph for the league leaders back of it. They deserve much credit; so, in the same measure do those Utica exhibitors who sent out sixty thousand pieces of mail matter to bring the exhibitors in—who, in other words advertised and "put over" their convention just as the modern exhibitor puts over his own "special" show.

The convention was unlike any other thus far held; and every exhibitor will do well to look under the surface with us and realize what really happened.

In the first place it was conclusively proven that a big solid organization of exhibitors can be built up and a large business-like convention held. * * *

The membership of the New York State League exceeds the thousand mark. And these are real—not paper—memberships. The organization is well-knit, alive and doing business right along—not designed to meet once a year for the primary purpose of electing a set of officers.

Politics were completely lacking at this convention; or, if present in the spirit, they were promptly smothered by the serious business routine of a meeting which had things to do and did them.

Two afternoons were busily occupied with the transactions of the convention; only twenty minutes, at the end, were required to re-elect officers without a dissenting vote.

So, for the first time in the annals of exhibitor organization, so far as the writer's impression goes, we saw and felt exhibitor strength—an accomplished fact, a tangible thing, a real power for the good of the picture theatre and the picture industry.

If we within the industry do not realize this fact the political leaders of the state do.

It was certainly gratifying to witness the big guns of the State legislature dashing up from busy Albany and back on midnight trains.

It was still more pleasing to hear them indicate, without hesitation, their sympathetic interest in the picture, their conception of its place and power and their confidence in an organization which has helped them to legislate in the public's best interests.

THIS is a vital matter, this cordial confidence and understanding back and forth, between the exhibitor and the lawmaker. It can't be had without an organization—one in whose strength and in whose spokesmen the lawmaker has confidence, one, furthermore fully equipped at all times with complete facts and figures upon which fair and intelligent legislation may be based. It is this information—not speeches, not lobbying—that the lawmaker wants.

There is no reason why this remarkably large, well-knit and constantly active organization of the New York State League cannot be duplicated in every single state of the Union.

And there is no reason why a National organization of Exhibitors thus made up of powerful state units cannot, in conjunction with the National Association establish headquarters at Washington; and through these headquarters maintain with Congress the same cordial and intelligent cooperation which has been so successful in New York State.

There is no reason. And we are glad to say that the undertone of the Utica Convention was a genuine desire for and a freely expressed intention to bring about just such a National organization.

We trust that no one and no present organization will decide otherwise hastily and without a sound knowledge of the facts; and that all sincere believers in the complete organization of this industry will lend their individual efforts to bring about just such a body.
This page lay-out might aptly be headed "The Eternal Triangle" but the news of the current week indicates that the three men whose names have been linked almost since the beginning of the industry are to travel two separate roads in the future. For P. A. Powers' other interests are demanding so much of his time that an option on his Universal stock has been given to Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochran, and it will be exercised in the near future, according to announcement.

Carl Laemmle is shown above on the right, with R. H. Cochran facing him. P. A. Powers is the gentleman at the apex of the triangle. The step that has been announced will leave Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochran the sole stockholders in the Universal, marking an important page in the history of the organization that shares with Vitagraph the honor of being "daddy of them all" and whose "specials" during the past two years and announced for next year show that "age"—as counted in film years—has in no way halted its steps.
Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane Buy Out P. A. Powers
Control of Universal Company Centered in President and Vice-President

In a deal said to involve several million dollars, one of the largest in the history of the moving picture industry, control of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will be centered within the next day or so in the hands of its president, Carl Laemmle, and its vice-president, R. H. Cochrane. This will be brought about by the purchase by these two officials of the holdings of P. A. Powers, at present the treasurer of the concern and its second largest stockholder.

Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane have held an option on Mr. Powers’ stock, which still has a month to run, but it became known recently that they will exercise this option and acquire the stock. Mr. Powers has been the heaviest stockholder in the Universal since Mr. Laemmle, and was one of the company’s original stockholders when the firm was organized in May, 1912.

Reports have been circulated in moving picture circles for several weeks that there was a possibility of such a deal being consummated, but no statement could be obtained from any of the principals until recently, when Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane in admitting that they held an option of the Powers stock, announced that they would exercise this option as soon as the papers could be drawn up.

Mr. Laemmle stated that by acquiring the Powers stock he and Mr. Cochrane would be the sole owners of Universal. It was further announced that there will be no changes in the personnel of the organization except the retirement of Mr. Powers as treasurer. The freundliest feeling is said to exist between all parties involved.

Mr. Powers has considered this move for several months. In discussing the option and the proposed sale, he explained that his other business interests have assumed such proportions that he desired to be relieved of his duties with the Universal company.

The three principals of this deal have been associated throughout the history of the Universal and were original stockholders. The company was formed in May, 1912, by a consolidation of several independent film manufacturers, the most important of which was the Laemmle Film Company, owned and operated by Mr. Laemmle. Among others interested in the new company were Charles Bauman of the New York Picture Company, and W. H. Swanson, the manufacturer of Rex pictures.

The new combine was formed to wage war against the Patents Company, an organization endeavoring to prevent the independent manufacturing and sale of moving pictures in the United States. It

Chaplin’s Next Six Reels; Release Reports Conflict

DISPATCHES from the coast indicate that Charlie Chaplin has made a complete turn about in his production methods, and that instead of turning out his usual two-reeler, his next release will be six reels in length. It probably will be titled "The Kid," and tends to give Chaplin a sympathetic role throughout. A background of heavy drama is dominant throughout the piece, indicating that Chaplin finally has given in to the desire hinted at in several of his comedies by brief excursions into the dramatic realm. A boy actor touted to become as popular as Wesley Barry, in Chaplin’s latest find.

J. D. Williams is quoted as declaring the production will be handled by First National. On the other hand rumor has it that United Artists will get the picture.

Other late wire information tells of the departure of Fred Quimby for New York, and the engagement by Winchell Smith of William H. Crane to play his original stage part in "New Henrietta." Buster Keaton has been borrowed by Roscoe Arbuckle for the role originally played by Douglas Fairbanks in the stage production. Smith is producing for Metro.

Associated Producers Deny Rumor of Deal

Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., left for California Monday, at which time they emphasized the fact that the Associated Producers had no announcement to make regarding distribution plans of the organization. Notwithstanding the rumors that have been current, Mr. Ince and Mr. Read declared that no negotiations of any nature had been closed between the Associated Producers and any organization or individuals.

"There are no definite plans of importation, and no communiques of any import have been received." Mr. Ince said. "We are not interested in bringing picture exchanges into New York at this time, and any statements to the contrary have been made by unknown parties.

Americanization Office Opened in New York

The Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Hon. Francis K. Lane, formerly Secretary of the Interior, is chairman, has opened New York headquarters in Room No. 1, 1526 Broadway. William A. Ryan, who has been associated with Secretary Lane for a long time, has been appointed executive secretary of the committee, and will be in charge of the New York headquarters.
Eugene Roth, of San Francisco's California, breaks into the news in other guise than that of exhibitor, with the announcement that he is to join with Sam Rock, of the Katherine MacDonald organisation, in the production of all-star specials.

Lt. Orner Locklear, shown to the right, in addition to the sensational success of "The Great Air Robbery" brings forth another reason for news space with the formation of Locklear Productions. Joe Brandt is the busy boy handling the business end. Already negotiations have been closed for one of the year's "best sellers"—"The Sky Pilot," and Isadore Bernstein, having resigned from National, has left for Los Angeles to begin production activity.

Sam Morris, who appears on our left, is the latest sales manager to issue a convention call. Within a few weeks the Selznick and Select exchange men will be gathering in New York to discuss the coming year's plans.

High Spots in Speech of Mr. R. S. Cole

"Robertson-Cole is in the motion picture business for the money which good pictures are bound to bring us. A fair investment and the following operation between the exhibitor and the distributing company.

The men behind Robertson-Cole have a set standard, and pictures not meeting the requirements of that standard will have no place on the Robertson-Cole program.

"Robertson-Cole will not purchase theaters for the release of their productions unless forced to do so by conditions which shall band together to usurp all the trade.

"Robertson-Cole should give the exhibitor the best pictures money and time can buy.

"Robertson-Cole shall do everything within its power to help the exhibitor, for unless the exhibitor lives, Robertson-Cole must die.

"Business principles are the backbone of the Robertson-Cole policy.

"The series of announcements made in the past ninety days overshadow what is to come in the future. The men behind Robertson-Cole are men of sound business judgment and well equipped to fight the battles in the motion picture world.

"Robertson-Cole makes no promises which cannot be carried out.

"The Robertson-Cole trademark stands for justice, fair play and quality of production."

8:15 P.M.-The entire delegation will be guests of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation at the Winter Garden, to witness "The Passing Show of 1919." Ticket is attached.

Friday, March 19th, the day was spent largely in general business and discussions. The following was the order of events assigned for the day:

9 A.M.-Assembly at Home Office for general business discussion, in which full details and final instructions will be taken up. This will be an open meeting in which each Branch Manager will be called upon to answer questions pertaining to their respective territories. Individual discussions with each Branch Manager will be entered into. Have all your data ready to avoid delays.

2:30 P.M.-Luncheon in North Ballroom, Hotel Astor, after which there will be a general discussion and final instructions given to the entire organization.

5:30 P.M.-Convention will disband and managers will make preparations to return to their respective branches. The date of the next convention will be determined by the results as demonstrated by our entire organization.

In conjunction with the Convention, members prominent in the industry forwarded statements some laudatory of the work achieved by Robertson-Cole and others offering suggestions, the adoption of which was intended to further a more efficient organization. The following statement was submitted by the Brentwood Film Corporation and addressed to the members of the Robertson-Cole organization:

"Gentlemen:

"We feel it to be particularly fitting that Brentwood should address a word of greeting to the members of the Robertson-Cole Distributing organization on this 16th day of March, 1920, because this day is the anniversary of the release of Brentwood's first picture, "The Turn in the Road," the continued success of which production is so largely due to the consistent efforts of you gentleman now assembled here.

"Whatever it may have been in the early days of its existence, the Picture Industry today is being run on business lines. And since its continued development depends upon the sale of its product at a profit, the salesman has come into his own as the very real foundation of the entire structure.

"It is of course unnecessary to tell you that the successful salesman must add to his talent, enthusiasm for, and thorough knowledge of the product he is offering.

"And since the projection of a picture upon the screen involves the choice of a type of story and the method of treatment of that story, the product of a picture producing organization comes to reflect more of the minds, hearts and principles of the man who made the picture than does the output, say, of an automobile or breakfast food factory of which each machine or package can be judged as it is seen and handled, purely on its own merits.

"Numerous suggestions were received from some of the branch managers of Robertson-Cole. Louis Klahr, of Milwaukee, stated that Robertson-Cole productions were gaining rapid recognition in the territory served by the Milwaukee exchange. An instance of this was the booking of "The Beloved Cheater" by the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, a 100 per cent Paramount house. This was also true of the Strand theatre, Madison.

"From J. S. Nelson, of Denver, came word that Robertson-Cole has maintained a reputation with exhibitors of honesty of purpose, and fair dealing, and that the new press books were in constant demand by exhibitors, large or small. M. A. Levy, of Cleveland reported as follows: "The Robertson-Cole Company has (Continued on following page)

Busy Season for Censorship Committee

Censorship Agitation in Various States and Cities Requires Prompt Action

There is no denial and burial of one John Barleycorn having now become an accomplished fact, though tremors of suspended animation from the spirit or spirits of the late-departed John are occasionally apparent from the depths, the reformers must needs have practice for their reformatory proclivities, and so the "movies" have engaged their attention for a pace. At least that is the reason, according to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, for the unusual activity this year of the Censorship Committee of the National Association, for this is the "off year" for legislative sessions, and ordinarily censorship problems would amount to very little.

The first legislative battle was staged in Virginia. A public hearing on the bill was arranged, and at the request of the National Association, David Wark Griffith went to Richmond and made the principal argument against censorship. Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, and Jake Wells were in charge of the fight in Richmond, and the committee reported against censorship in favor of a bill which would cut teeth in the penal law which prevents the showing of an indecent or immoral film. The National Association has at all times supported the strengthening of the penal law so as to punish for the exhibition of improper pictures.

Just as the Virginia fight was won the National Association received the information that without a hearing the Education Committee of the South Carolina House of Representatives had made a favorable report on a censorship bill. A hearing was asked for by wire, and Royal K. Fuller, executive secretary of the Censorship Committee, went to Columbia to represent the industry. Within a half-hour after the hearing on the bill was over the Education Committee, which had reported the bill, voted unanimously against censorship. The bill was held under plea for more than two weeks, and when it finally came to a vote it was overwhelmingly defeated.

After the hearing in South Carolina Mr. Fuller went to Atlanta for a conference with the members of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of that city as to the means of opposing the censorship bill, which it is anticipated will be introduced when the Georgia Legislature convenes in June.

The Governor of Mississippi recommended a censorship law, and the first bill introduced was amended so as to make it a crime to exhibit an indecent or improper film. The people who were supporting censorship expected that the motion picture industry would oppose that bill, and it would give them an excuse to introduce one which provided for a censorship of all films. E. H. Clarke, special representative of the Sænger Amusement Company, who was working in cooperation with the exchange managers of New Orleans, supported the bill. It was thought that this had disposed of censorship in the state, but recently a straight censorship bill has been introduced. It is believed that this bill can be defeated in view of the amendment which has been made to the penal law.

A censorship bill was introduced in Kentucky, but the Legislature adjourned last week without taking the bill up. The hardest fight of the year has been in Massachusetts, and the issue is still in doubt. There have been two hearings on the bill, and the joint committee on Mercantile affairs has named a sub-committee to consider the matter and it is thought advisable to report an amended bill.

In addition to the state fights the National Association and the Censorship Committee have been interested in several municipal contests, where an effort has been made to impose unfair and restrictive ordinances for municipal censorship.

been making such rapid strides since its birthday, that exhibitors throughout Ohio are beginning to realize that we are going to attain the highest standard in the motion picture industry. This has been proven in the way our current releases have been received and exploited with emphasis on "The Beloved Cheat." Exhibitors in New England are also commenting on the rapid growth of Robertson-Cole organization, according to F. F. Kimmerer, of Boston. He said they were impressed with the advertising campaign, both in the trade papers and in the material supplied to the exchanges for distribution. E. J. Hayes, of Buffalo, also told of how the organization was praised for its advertising. I. F. Manzke, of Minneapolis, reported that the "Beloved Cheat" was breaking all house records in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and that exhibitors had nothing but the highest praise for Robertson-Cole pictures.

Oklahoma showmen look on Robertson-Cole pictures as one of the most consistent programs they run, as far as the series are concerned, stated P. R. Rich-
Educational Films Laying Plans for Wide Expansion

Announces Important Acquisitions in the Short-Subject Field

E. W. HAMMONS, vice president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, this week announced the completion of contracts, said to involve more than $750,000, which will place the noted distributors of short subjects in a position of dominance in its chosen field.

As large amount as these negotiations represent, they are said to form but the first of a series of interesting announcements that will follow the determination of the company to devote a vast amount of capital and a world-wide organization to the exclusive handling of short subjects.

Acquired during the past week is the entire product of the C. L. Chester interest, including the Chester-Outings, the Chester Comedies and the Chester Screenics. Contracts were also signed with Johnson and Hopkins for the exclusive control of pictures made by the "Stereospeed" camera, a recent invention of Earle Emlay.

Exclusive control of the American and foreign markets is provided for in the agreements that have just been signed. Recent announcements told of the organization by Educational Films of its own exchanges throughout the United States which will be devoted exclusively to the distribution of short subjects. Educational has for some time controlled the foreign distribution of Chester-Outings, in addition to its own product, and its organization in the foreign field is now being further developed.

During months past Mr. Hammons has been carefully laying the plans for the increase in short subject product, and from time to time the Motion Picture News has carried announcements indicating the progress of this development. There has now been an adjustment of the organization to provide for the fullest development of short subject possibilities, and the amplest capital to carry forward all of the plans. These arrangements for distribution have been supplemented by the fullest possible exploitation of these pictures, which will be given the same attention as the so-called "features." By confining itself to this class of film product, Educational promises a degree of specialization which is not possible with companies dealing with films of all kinds.

Acquisition of the short subjects announced this week, and of others for which negotiations are pending, will in no way affect the product heretofore distributed by Educational. In fact, expeditions controlled by the company which will, it is said, penetrate every corner of the earth, literally, are now under way, and there are said to be now in the vaults of the company in the Godfrey building thousands of feet of unusual adventure and scenic product which will shortly be ready for release. In addition to the material obtained by its own staff of creators and photographers, Educational will continue in the market for superior product of independent cameramen.

Because C. L. Chester has been generally regarded as the chief rival of Educational in the production of scenic pictures, it is especially significant that he should be the first to contract for the acquisition of his entire product by Educational. It is stated that he was led to take this step because he recognized the perfection of the plan laid before him by Mr. Hammons, which convinced him that the future development of the short subject depends on the exploitation and distribution specialization that Mr. Hammons has been carefully planning and perfecting for months past.

Theatre managers everywhere are familiar with Chester-Outings Scenics. They have been popular in this country, and Educational Films has been successful in their distribution in the foreign markets. They will continue to be released weekly.

First of the new Chester Comedies was recently shown at the Rivoli. This was "Four Times Foiled" and it was given a reception that few of the fun products have been accorded. Mr. Chester has proved to the officials of Educational that he will be able to maintain the same high standard in his future creations, which are being produced by W. B. Campbell, and that these pictures will afford a degree of humor and cleanliness that will appeal to all audiences. Thirteen of these comedies are to be produced a year.

Chester Screenics is a recently announced creation. Each of these will be in 500 feet of animal pictures and 300 feet of carefully selected scientific matter, so arranged as to have a popular appeal. It is said that this red, which will be produced weekly, will mark a distinct departure in cinema entertainment.

Following the recent announcement of the perfection of the "Stereospeed" camera, an invention of Earle Emlay, controlled by the Johnson and Hopkins Company, there has been unusual interest in the product. This camera makes it possible to photograph pictures at the rate of 304 per second. Mr. Emlay has been able to create an almost endless number of novelties with his camera, both comedies and scientific subjects which, it is stated, have never before been used. It is said that the new invention opens up such a wide field that both the exhibitors and his patrons will be afforded surprise after surprise for months to come.

Negotiations for the acquisition of much other short subject product, including several brands of comedies, are in progress and announcement of several of these sales is expected at any moment. Mr. Hammons authorizes the statement that Educational will continue to devote its entire resources to handling short subjects of all sorts and that it is ready to consider the acquisition of further matter that meets the high standard of quality that is demanded by his organization.

A further announcement of the week is that Poll Mitchell, one of the best news reel editors in the industry, has been added to the Educational staff. Mr. Mitchell organized Fox News and attracted much attention by his work as news editor of the Gaumont Weekly. Mr. Hammons intimated that he expected to have an interesting announcement to make within a short time as to the special work that would come under the direct supervision of Mr. Mitchell.

A Drew-Barrymore Bill for Theatrical Post

For the first time in the history of New York theatricals, Ethel, Lionel and John Barrymore are to appear on the same bill. This will be at the benefit performance for S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340, American Legion, at the New Amsterdam Theatre, Sunday evening, April 11.
Schnitzer Gives His Views on Percentage
Equity Pictures Manager Believes System More Equitable Than Rental

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, who before becoming treasurer and general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, was for seven years division manager, exchange manager, exhibitor and associate of exhibitors and later exchange manager for Universal, has a few views on percentage engagements which he has gleaned from his experience, both at Universal, and during his past eight months at Equity.

"Percentage engagements in which both producer and exhibitor share responsibilities and profits are the nearest possible approach to equitable playing arrangements," said Mr. Schnitzer. As a concrete example, let us take the instance of "Eyes of Youth" at the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis. The franchise holder in this territory could not get a rental, which he considered commensurate with the importance of the picture and rejected several rental offers which seemed to him fair below what the picture warranted. Arrangements were therefore entered into with the Ohio Theatre to exploit the film and run it as long as it stood up.

"A special man was sent into the city, newspaper space and stunts resorted to, in no more lavish manner than was the custom in the city among the first class houses, and the picture played almost two weeks and the franchise holder received two hundred percent more than his best rental offer and the theatre achieved its very biggest two weeks business."

If a theatre has a weekly overhead of two thousand dollars and a picture which cost more than $15,000 is booked, then, if the picture box-office cost one thousand dollars on exploitation etc., the net proceeds can be split fifty-fifty, and the sharing terms are absolutely equitable to both parties, for surely the cost of the picture represents, in the instance of playing this one house, at least one percent of its original cost.

"Legitimate houses rarely pay rental for attractions. Occasionally they purchase the gross receipts for a stipulated sum, but rarely do they pay an outright amount for an attraction. How then, does the percentage plan work a hardship on the film exhibitor? Surely the one night stand manager whose house runs legitimate plays, parallels the film theatre, in expenditure overhead, etc.

"Eyes of Youth" playing Indianapolis, at English's Opera House, in its legitimate form, would receive at least sixty percent of the gross receipts and would expend less than five hundred dollars on exploitation. Paper would be furnished which the house would post, and the theatre would do its usual amount of advertising. 'Eyes of Youth' as a film play should be able to do anything that 'Eyes of Youth' as a stage play did, for the same conditions apply to its playing dates.

A film which is seeking percentage engagements at theatres must be an individual film, handled as an individual film, exploited in unique manner so as to attract extra business, as well as to appeal to the house's regular following, and show at least a twenty-five percent increase in business.

"But an exhibitor can easily drive away from his door, in one week, all the following he has established in a year—by lack of discretion in selecting subject. He should pick his pictures from trades paper reviews and reports from fellow exhibitors and then he can't go wrong. Pick them from the billboards and you can't go right. Any man who has the price of a feature, surely has the price of a billboard and electric sign campaign and it is when films are below standard that these superficial methods are resorted to."

Schlesinger Analyzes The Foreign Market
Inter-Ocean Official Urges Producers to Export Despite Low Exchange

Of the many important and perplexing problems which the motion picture industry has had to contend with since the cessation of hostilities, one of the most pressing and acute is the present outlook in foreign film circles. While everywhere in the world the cry is being made and fostered for the stabilization of foreign trade between the United States and other countries, the present economic upheaval—the inevitable result of the war—has caused a radical depreciation of foreign exchange and according to some exporters, is threatening to strangle the very life of commercial enterprise. In fact the exchange has reached such an astounding low rate that a feeling of grave uncertainty is held by many in financial circles.

The period of readjustment in foreign markets, recent advices pointedly indicate, has been rather slow in getting started. Still, the American exporter of motion pictures has continued exporting American motion pictures in spite of the difficulties in foreign exchange. At present there is a spirited discussion in foreign film circles as to the wisdom of this continuance of export. Many exporters deplore the present state of affairs, and see in it the demise of American supremacy in foreign film markets. There are others who maintain in more emphatic terms than words that the same policy to pursue is to export American motion pictures now in greater volume than at any other time.

In view of the heated discussion that is now being waged among American exporters, and because of the momentous importance of the subject to American motion picture producers, Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has expressed his views on the foreign situation.

"While speculation is rife in the industry as to the outcome of the problems that at present beset the foreign market," said Mr. Schlesinger, "it is obviously apparent that the situation is only temporary, and that in the course of time, conditions will return to normal. While the export situation is in a critical stage, its effect on the trade has been grossly exaggerated. I arrive at this conclusion after a thorough study of the foreign market, and on the counsel of merchants who are financially involved in other commercial pursuits, and who have experienced the same difficulties in exports."

"Foreign exchange, according to its financial definition, is the bridge over which payments for trade between different countries is effected. The bridge to my mind has had to bear a larger burden than it could safely carry, and consequently, has bent beneath the strain. As soon as the bridge is rebuilt things will assume a different aspect. We are at present going through the reconstruction period, and must continue to do business as if the bridge were strengthened."

"I personally believe that we should continue to export motion pictures, and the fact that Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is doing as large an export business now as ever in its history, confirms my belief in this respect. I do not believe that the foreign outlook is as terrible as it has been painted, and I repeat that while I am cognizant of the fact that we are passing through a critical period, I am positively certain that it will soon be over with, and that exports will resume their natural course."

"Partly counterbalancing this abnormal situation are the statements from American producers that they will make fewer and bigger productions during the year of 1920. This necessarily means that the motion picture supply will be materially reduced. Better pictures will undeniably insure a permanent market for the American product."
Lionel Barrymore to Make Pictures for First National

Whitman Bennett and

LIONEL BARRYMORE will be starred in a series of four independent productions to be released through Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and to be made by Whitman Bennett, who recently resigned as production manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company after two years in charge of that concern's studio activities.

The contract with Mr. Bennett and Mr. Barrymore is the first to be signed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as an organization, and as one of the two new companies created by the exhibitor members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit at their convention in Atlantic City in January of this year.

The event marks the beginning of activities by First National members to increase the number of productions to be available to owners of sub-franchises now being allotted to independent theatre owners throughout the country for circuit attractions. In addition, it brings to the field of independent producers, Mr. Bennett, who, for two years, has been the managing executive of the Famous Players-Lasky production forces. Mr. Bennett announced his resignation last week. It will become effective as soon as arrangements are completed for someone to succeed him.

The negotiations between Associated First National Pictures officials and Mr. Bennett and Mr. Barrymore were conducted by Larry Giffen, of the Alice Kauser organization, who also represented the producer and star in arranging details of the contract.

Mr. Barrymore will begin production work soon after May 1. The first picture in the series is scheduled for release through Associated First National early next fall. The last screen appearance of the famous actor was in the character part of "Milt Shanks" in "The Copperhead." Mr. Barrymore has just completed a very successful engagement as a co-star with his brother, John, in "The Jest" and is now starring in "The Letter of the Law" at the Criterion theatre in New York.

It has been announced that his four productions for Associated First National will be made in the East so that he can continue his theatrical work on the spoken stage. The stories will be announced soon, according to First National officials, and each will be from a famous novel or a famous play.

The star's stage career included theatrical engagements with Nance O'Neill, James Herne and John Drew in such plays as "The Best of Friends" and "Fanciful." After an absence of three years from the stage because of ill health, he returned in 1906 in "Fires of Faith," later touring in "The Still Voices" and "The Copperhead."

His screen career began with Biograph. He appeared in the Pathé picture, "Exploits of Elaine," and later was starred in comedy and dramatic parts by Metro, one of his most notable vehicles being "The Yellow Streak." One of the more recent pictures in which Mr. Barrymore was starred was "Making Good," "Great Green Eye" and "The Millionaire's Double."

Officials of Associated First National Pictures regard the signing of the celebrated actor as a great achievement. "We predict a phenomenal success for Mr. Barrymore in the series to be produced by Mr. Bennett because of his rare ability to do such exceptionally clever character work," says a statement issued by Associated First National officials. "His return to motion pictures brings another strong ally to the ranks of independent producers and independent stars. With Mr. Bennett he has accepted the tenants of our policy that each star and producer shall stand or fall strictly on his or her own ability."

"This is the only just fair way to extend unmeasured opportunity to producers and stars who have ability not yet tested to the maximum. Mr. Barrymore's four productions will have no specified release dates. Mr. Bennett will have all the time he requires to obtain a degree of screen quality that will satisfy his standards as an independent producer. We have found, in our experience with other producers and stars now affiliated with us by contracts, that the absence of any need for haste and time restrictions, which make quality and result secondary consideration, has done much to encourage greater entertainment values."

In leaving the Famous Players, Mr. Bennett wishes to make it especially clear that there has been no friction of any kind whatsoever between the executive officials of the corporation and himself. Mr. Bennett merely feels that after five and one-half years of constant office work, attending to innumerable production details, and other business and artistic affairs of the concern, he is no longer capable of continuing to bear the burden in the same way. For some time past he has felt that it was necessary for him to make a change and he has arranged, through the courtesy of the officials of the Company, to be relieved of his obligations to the Corporation at the present time, as it is "between seasons" and the connection can be severed more readily than at any other period in the year.

Three Houses Bought by Amusement Company

Purchase of three motion picture playhouses, the Princess and Dixie theatres of Mayfield and the Savoy theatre of Princeton, by the Strand Amusement Company of Louisville, composed of Leo F. Keller and John W. Keller of this city, and Lee Goldberg and Fred Levy of Louisville, has been announced.

Incorporation of the company for the management of the new theatres and a chain of others to be purchased at an early date took place with capitalization of $50,000.
Mrs. J. R. Bray, Back from Europe, Describes Film Conditions

Related Many Interesting Observations of Industry in Fields Abroad

Mrs. J. R. Bray, wife of the president of Bray Pictures Corp., who recently returned to this country after an extended tour of England, France and Germany on an investigation of educational film conditions abroad, reports that American feature photoplays and educational films are in greater demand now than at any former period in the history of the motion picture.

"We have shown the world what America can do with the photoplay," said Mrs. Bray, "and Europe realizes the technical proficiency we have attained."

Mrs. Bray, it is stated, was the first woman to leave occupied German territory for the interior unaccompanied. She traveled to Berlin alone, and from there to Vienna; but the sight of the stricken, starving people there decided her to return at once to Berlin.

"In Vienna, I walked two blocks from my hotel and picked up three fainting women who could not stand because they were half starved. I could not think of talking pictures to the Viennese, so I came back. But train service is so inadequate that the next train to Germany left four days after my arrival in Vienna."

The impressions Mrs. Bray received in each of the countries visited may best be told in chronological order. Her first visit abroad was to London, where she met Mr. A. George Smith, Goldwyn's European representative, who is in charge of the distribution of Goldwyn feature pictures and the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph in England and on the continent.

While in London, Mrs. Bray made her headquarters at the Goldwyn offices and renewed her old acquaintance with Mr. Charles Lapworth and Mr. Ralph Block, who are at present organizing the advertising and publicity departments of Goldwyn's European distributing organization.

"The English people are wildly enthusiastic about photoplays these days. They have been 'served for entertainment,'" said Mrs. Bray, "and now you will find crowds a block long in front of almost every motion picture theatre every evening. There are not nearly enough theatres in England to supply the demand for motion picture entertainment. There are perhaps 4,000 theatres in England, and builders are trying their best to obtain materials to erect more. In the meantime, shows are being held in converted stores, in halls, and in any place available."

Mrs. Bray has several interesting comments to make on the Educational films in England.

"You have no idea how enthusiastic they are in England over the Bray pictures. I gave a private showing to the London Local Board of Education, and the members wanted to use our pictures in their schools immediately. The animated technical drawings fascinated them. They had never seen entire courses of instruction so clearly and entertainingly presented, they told me."

From England Mrs. Bray went to France, and after visiting some of the smaller cities made her headquarters in Paris. There she found that only the larger distributors had a keen sense of fair dealing with their exhibitors.

"It seems that the rights of distributors are not sufficiently protected, and the authorities make few and futile attempts to guard stolen pictures from being sold to irresponsible, if not dishonest, exhibitors. During my stay in Paris I traced a stolen 'Mary Pickford' picture, but the authorities did nothing to establish the rights of the real owners of the pictures."

Mrs. Bray was astonished at the appearance of the motion picture theatres.

"They are not nearly so well kept as those in England or in America," she said. "And as for presentation, Paris is far behind us. France needs more motion picture theatres than any country in Europe. The lack of them is seen in the social life of the people. For in every country where a large proportion of the people attend the picture shows I have found a public more enlightened on general matters than in territories where few people have the opportunity to attend them."

After a short sojourn in Paris, Mrs. Bray went to Cologne, where she found the officers and men of the English army of occupation. They told her, though, that she would never reach Berlin, alone, as no woman had ventured on the journey before her, unaccompanied.

The chaotic conditions in Berlin are ascribed partly to the maladjustment of the population to the kaleidoscopic changes in the value of the exchange rates. Mrs. Bray continues:

"There is little beef in the interior of Germany, though it can be obtained in Cologne. Nevertheless, after spending six weeks in Berlin, things were beginning to look brighter. Foods were somewhat easier to obtain, and the necessaries were more plentiful. I believe that in six months the terrible stringency of the past winter will be greatly reduced and the people once more be strong enough to do a day's work without experiencing complete exhaustion."

The drama," she said, "has always been the mirror of a nation's thoughts. In Berlin the theatre is quite pessimistic. All plays are joyless, hopeless, tragic. Comedy is rarely played because the people are not in the mood to enjoy it. Nevertheless, the theatrical performances in Germany today are the most finished and artistic that I have ever witnessed anywhere."

"Everywhere in Germany, educational films—American educational films—are in great demand. I gave a private showing of some of the Bray educational films to several professors of the University of Berlin, and they immediately wanted to take our entire product for the local schools and for the university. They also offered to cooperate with the Goldwyn-Bray production staff in the making of scientific subjects."

"But motion picture production in Germany is about ten years behind that in America. The German wants our pictures badly. So eager are the people to see motion picture entertainments that they flock to the theatres whenever they can afford the luxury, and enjoy whatever is presented. It is also a way of forgetting a hungry stomach."

Memorial Ceremony for Stanley Mastbaum

The Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Committee announce that the annual exercises in commemoration of the birthday of the late Mr. Mastbaum will be held at the Eaglesville Sanitarium, near Norris-town, Pa., on Sunday afternoon, March 28, at 2 o'clock.
Select Pictures Will Distribute All Prizma Subjects

Prizma Will Also Make Multi-Reel Subjects in Colors It Is Reported

nnouncement of importance and interest to the motion picture industry is contained in the statement of Lewis J. Selznick that he has acquired the sole and exclusive right to not alone distribute the products of Prizma natural color pictures but also that Prizma will invade the field of screen drama by producing in colors long subjects of five or more reels as well as feature subjects of one and two reels. Further, that Myron Selznick will have active supervision of the color interpretations of famous novels and plays made by the Prizma process.

Contracts were entered into by Lewis J. Selznick and Lee Beroult, president of the Prizma company, whereby Select Pictures will take over the distribution of all Prizma subjects heretofore handled by the Republic, and will serve the theatres with these and such other Prizma subjects now in process of production.

Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, in discussing the transaction, whereby his company secures the advantages of the Prizma color process, said:

I have watched with great interest the progress of the Prizma color pictures since their introduction on the market and the evolution of improvement was so marked that I realized that it was color photography which would register the high water mark in the field of achievement of motion photography. This is an epoch that has been awaited by all who have in any way been connected with the business. That it only needed natural color to give to pictures the final impetus that would mark the character of entertainment—one of lasting and substantial permanency. That color, with its multitudinous variations gave to the celluloid strip the stimulating interest that goes with never ending changes and provides a suspense which the spoken drama holds for an audience by means of the different tones of the actor's voice.

When, the other day, William Van Doren Kelly, the inventor of the Prizma color process, told me that he had at last perfected his camera to that state of efficiency where the fringing of colors had been eliminated and besides the filtering through the lens of the seven primary colors together with shade variation had been accomplished as evidenced by test pictures, I knew the psychological moment had arrived to secure this wonder of wonders as a fitting accompaniment to my studies in color. Kelly's invention is as far in advance of the ordinary process as tungsten is to the carbon filament of the incandescent lamp—so is Prizma to the black and white.

Georges Carpentier to Produce in East

With the arrival of Georges Carpentier, "the idol of France," imminent, the rather significant announcement is made, that the mighty European "Champ" will work in an Eastern studio. This would seem to indicate a desire to be near the centre of picturesque activities and the probability of an early meeting with Dempsey, although nothing definite can be learned on that subject.

The story to be produced has been completed by Willard Mack, and negotiations will be consummated within a few days, for one of the industry's greatest directors, it is stated. Production will be started at once on the big Robertson-Cole special, but whether the work will be done in a New York City or Jersey studio, is not made known.

"No man in the industry has been a greater scooper of color photography as applied to motion pictures than I. I have seen them come and go, but when the Prizma officials showed me a two-reel dramatic picture, "The Little Match Girl," with Madge Evans as the star, every doubt and every one of my pet arguments against color motion pictures were swept into a cocked hat. Here was a picture that not alone had all the strength of the black and white, but the highly added novelty of perfectly applied color through a natural process. In addition thereto it disclosed the solving of the secret of the third dimension in picture depth, or what is more generally known as the stereoscopic effect. The evidence disclosed by this two-reel picture was sufficient to convince any jury that there was nothing left to be desired or hoped for in motion picture productions."

Although no changes have been announced in the personnel of the Prizma organization, following the statement that Mr. Selznick has acquired the Prizma product, it is made known this week that George Meeker, who has been general sales manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to the Prizma forces, where he will serve in an executive sales capacity. Mr. Meeker takes with him a record considered enviable in the sales end of the industry, and it is expected that the Prizma product will profit greatly through his addition to the staff. In selecting Mr. Meeker for this post, Mr. Selznick was guided by the fact that he had "lived" with the Prizma subjects, insofar as sales are concerned, for the past year and is thoroughly familiar with Mr. Selznick's methods.

Prizma Pictures, it is cited in the Selznick statement this week, can be projected through the regulation projection machines used in all theatres. No special equipment or apparatus is necessary, as the Keying invention is applied in the film when it is put into the projector. That this fact is appreciated is evidenced by the large number of theatres which have been selecting the Prizma color reels to present preceding the feature, or long picture of the program, thus lending the whole package a more colorful appearance. Titles of this have been cited in all parts of the country, one of the most recent being the Rialto theatre, New York, presentation the week of March 7, when Managing Director Hugo Reisenfeld used the Prizma, "The Ghost of John Barleycorn," with a feature called "The Six Best Cellars."

Samuel I. Rothapfel, considered one of the premiere picture showmen of this country, is quoted as being much in favor of the Prizma reels to color and lend added interest to the program. He selects a subject that blends with his five-reel feature. This method is being used extensively by exhibitors, according to reports.

In closing his announcement, Mr. Selznick said: "Prizma holds a unique and distinct place in the programs of the country, and we intend to make it still more valuable to exhibitors. If there is an improvement of any kind possible, the industry can rest assured we will not neglect it—and I believe there is much that can be done and accomplished for the exhibitor and the public."

That the Selznick-Prizma deal is as substantial as can possibly be confirmed by the fact that a group of bankers, convinced that the Prizma process is beyond the experimental stage, is lack of the proposition with unlimited capital, it is declared.

National Association to Move Offices

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will on March 31 remove its offices to a suite in the New York Theatre Building, 1520 Broadway, from its present headquarters in the Times Building, where it has had a home since its organization in 1916. The increased activity of the association in all the phases of the industry made it imperative that larger offices be obtained. The new offices are on the Forty-fourth street side of the New York Theatre Building, and are admirably arranged for the purposes of the association.
Pathé Distribution for Associated Exhibitors

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has made definite and final arrangements with Pathé Exchange, Inc., for the distribution of the Associated product. This move on the part of Associated Exhibitors comes as the result of an exhaustive consideration of every distributing organization in the industry. The Associated Exhibitors found that Pathé, headed by Paul Brunet, offered the most complete distributing service to be found. With branch offices in more than thirty-two film centers, it is believed that Pathé has efficient forces and facilities to handle any number of pictures.

While this new arrangement is merely to provide for the distribution of the Associated product throughout the United States and Canada, Paul Brunet will act as one of the directors of the new organization. This will give the Associated the benefit, in an advisory capacity, of the knowledge and experience of this trained film executive.

No pictures have been turned over to Pathé as yet for distribution. There have been false rumors of several important deals in which the name of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has figured.

Film Not to Blame for Juvenile Misdeeds

"The motion picture is not guilty." This is the verdict based on reports from chief probation officers of juvenile courts throughout the United States on the relation of motion pictures to juvenile delinquency, according to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, which has just issued in pamphlet form the results of its inquiry into this mooted subject. Every now and then the charge is made and sensationalized that motion pictures are responsible for some juvenile misdeeds. The National Board has investigated many such cases and found them almost without exception to be gross misstatements. The National Board, last year, with the assistance of the American Probation Association, addressed a letter to the chief probation officers of the principal cities of the country having juvenile courts, asking for a frank statement of their experience and convictions in the matter.

These confirm the impressions of the National Board. As one probation officer put it: "I have been in this work for fourteen years, and have had occasion to deal with thousands of delinquents. Of the thousands of boys and girls arraigned in our court, there have been very few who testified, or of whom our investigators could learn, that they committed the wrong in question because of the so-called bad pictures. We have pictures they had seen. Of course, there are certain pictures which stir the imagination of youngsters, but there are other things which they see in their everyday life which have the same effect."

United States Holds Lively Session in Chicago

COMPLETE harmony and enthusiasm marked the quarterly meeting of the United States of America distributors held last week in Chicago. Plans were adopted for a line of productions for the next six months, which it is estimated, will cost more than two million dollars. The Triangle and Lynch acquisitions were approved, and full power delegated to the executives to negotiate the purchase of another large distributing company. A resolution was adopted to the end that each franchise holder pay for at least three pictures in advance. Steps were taken to establish United Boards of Trade at the exchange centers so as to assure full representation of the United Theatres in all districts. Six hundred thousand dollar billboard contract announced. More than two thousand theatres are reported to be now franchise and stock holders in United Theatres.

The executive committee elected to act until the next quarterly meeting includes Harry Hall, T. R. E., George Schade, Sandusky, Ohio; C. M. C. McCloseky, Uniontown, Pa.; W. G. Hartwell, Patuckets, New England; and President Berenst and Treasurer Goldsmith, ex officio. Los Angeles is expected to be next meeting place of the board.

Another Theatre "De Luxe" for Chicago

Chicago is to have another theatre which will be "de Luxe" in every sense that the word implies, according to an announcement just made by Herman Schoenstadt, head of H. Schoenstadt & Sons Theatrical Enterprises, owners of a powerful string of Windy City theatres.

The new theatre will be in the heart of the fashionable south side hotel and country club district, at the corner of Hyde Park Boulevard and Blackstone, where a lot 150 feet by 225 feet has been purchased by the Schoenstadt interests for a consideration of $250,000. Mr. Schoenstadt proposes to erect a 450-room hotel at a cost of $2,000,000 and a 3,500-seat theatre which will cost approximately $1,500,000. It is the determination of the Schoenstads to make a theatre equal to any in the United States, regardless of expense.

Exhibitors May Have to Fear Church Movies

Buffalo, N. Y., exhibitors may soon have another problem on their hands—the competition of downtown churches on Sunday evenings.

Sunday evening, March 7th, the East Presbyterian Church, South Division street, presented a five-reel feature entitled "As a Man Thinks," instead of the usual sermon and on Sunday evening, March 14th, the fashionable Calvary Presbyterian Church on Delaware avenue did away with the usual Sunday evening sermon and showed nothing less than Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

At Calvary Church the Pickford feature was shown in place of the preaching of a sermon, although the Rev. Gardner E. Eldridge briefly drew a moral before dismissing the congregation. Mr. Eldridge has shown films for the past several Sunday evenings, and he says the plan is meeting with unusual success. The chief difficulty, he says, is in getting the right kind of film.

"I think the motion pictures are sure to come as a permanent part of church work," said the clergyman. "They are the common language of the people. The movies can serve to teach the truth in a most forceful way."

"Our only difficulty so far has been in getting the right kind of films. The motion picture producers have not yet realized the value of pictures to the Church, and there are few films of just the kind we would like.""

"Evangeline" Shown at Illinois University

According to a report from the offices of the William Fox Film Corporation, the picturization of "Evangeline," Longfellow's master poem, has registered another victory in educational circles as an artistic achievement.

From the Chicago Exchange of Fox Film Corporation, presided over by Clyde W. Eckhardt, comes a detailed report of how the Y. M. C. A. of the University of Illinois put over three big performances of "Evangeline" before audiences comprised for the most part of the students, male and female.

First National Men Tour Throughout Territory

Col. Fred Levy, president of the First National Exhbitors' exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, and Lee L. Goldberg, the secretary, have just completed a "swing around the circle" in their territory.

Col. Levy is president of the National Association of Retail Clothiers, and as such was booked to attend the state convention of retail clothiers of Ohio, held in Cincinnati. He had also to attend the convention of Tennessee clothiers in Knoxville the same week. In his talks to the clothing men of the two states he digressed sufficiently to tell about the picture industry

Another Independent Combine Hinte

JOSEPH FRIEDMAN, of the Celebrated Players, Chicago, is in New York this week and report has it that plans are under way for another combination of independent exchanges and producers which it is declared will be a rival to the body formed in Chicago recently. While efforts to get in touch with Mr. Friedman were unsuccessful, it is understood that the proposed gathering is scheduled for the early part of next week in Chicago.
A Few Facts and Figures

The paid subscriptions to Motion Picture News now total 10,128. And every subscriber of the ten thousand odd is in the trade.

"Copies distributed" and "Paid subscriptions" never did mean the same thing—and never will. Cash subscriptions mean a paper that is read; else it would not be bought.

Since January 1st the renewals and new subscriptions to Motion Picture News have totaled 1550.

These are just a few of the facts and figures that a visit to our circulation department will give you. Call and see us. The latch-key is out; the books are open.
Two scenes of S. Barrett McCormick's spectacular stage masterpiece presented under the title of "The Palace of Delusion" on the bill with the feature picture "The River's End" at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, during the week of March 7th. The production was divided into two scenes: the first showing a palace interior in which an incense dance was presented. The lower cut shows a scene from an elaborate Arabian Knight's spectacle with ballet songs and Bagdad fashion parade.

Clancy of Hartford Cashes In with Exploitation Idea

How an Entire Public School System Advertised "Pollyanna" Feature

Unusual Stage Setting at Capitol Theatre

ARTIST JOHN WENGER at the Capitol theatre is giving the patrons of the house something different in the way of stage settings for the overture in use, "Martha." Description of the scene would be impossible, therefore we can but announce that the creation is of futurist design and has its principal use as a background for the flooding and blending of various colored lights on it as the rendition of the overture progresses. It is in the arrangement and artistic manner in which the floods are used that the setting recommends something unusual. The effect is very pleasing to the eye gives the classic musical composition an added feature.

A page was printed Miss Pickford's letter to Mr. Clancy which was used on the day previous by the Sundate Courant.

In one day the "Pollyanna" contest became the talk of the town. "Kids" from all sections of the city came to the Palace box office for a copy of the rules and those who were too young to make the distance sent their parents. Even the teachers became infected with the fever and many took away with them ten to fifty copies. The competition grew, not only among the kiddies, but the teachers themselves, each school striving to have a representation in the final award. Special classes were conducted in some of the schools after the regular hours, for the kiddies who had entered the competition. For three weeks the schools hummed with excitement.

Finally the day for the closing of the contest arrived. Three hundred juvenile conceptions of Mary Pickford as "Pollyanna" done in all the colors of the rainbow, were turned over to the judges, Miss Frances Hope Bachelor and Miss Isabelle Bachelor of the art department of the Hartford High School who had kindly consented to pass upon the work of the youngsters of the lower grade schools. The prize winners were: First prize, Miss Evelyn Ljongquist, a pupil of the New Park School; second prize, Joseph Habich, a pupil of the Channce; Harris School; third prize, Samuel Berman, a pupil of the Arsenal School.

After the awards had been made the drawings were placed in several giant frames made of strips of beaver board for boards and suspended in conspicuous places in the lobby. During the showing of the picture of "Pollyanna" this miniature art gallery was visited by thousands. The work of the prize winners which Miss Pickford now has in her possession were very excellent representations of her "Pollyanna." What used of them reminded one of the comic valetunics which used to adorn the shop window in the not too-far distant past. This added a comedy touch to the whole affair and some of the teachers who had signed the drawings in a moment of pedagogical exuberance brought into the theatre老虎机 armed with erasers, one for ink and the other for pencil, obliterating their names from those responsible for most of the laughter.

After reading the above you will doubtlessly conclude that this was a pretty fine piece of publicity but this is not all. A week before the coming of "Pollyanna," Mr. Clancy induced the Hartford Times to give a "Pollyanna" party to all of the unfortunate children in Hartford. Six front-page stories, each carrying a two-column head, were devoted to the telling of how the Times hoped to brighten the lives of these special children introducing them to the "Glad Game." For the cripples and those too young to make the journey to the theatre, the Times called upon owners of automobiles to donate their cars and they came in so fast that there was a big surplus. Two thousand children crowded into the theatre, many of them to look at a motion picture for the first time in their lives.

From out in Newington came about sixty youngsters from the Home for the Crippled Children, most of whom had to be carried into the theatre. There were 250 from the American School for the Deaf; from the Watkinson Farm School about seventy; from the Hartford Orphan Asylum there were 300 kiddies whose ages ranged from three to fifteen. The Village Street Mission sent 100 as did the United Jewish Charities. There were other groups of from ten to twenty-five rounded up by settlement workers making up what was probably the most unique gathering ever assembled in a Hartford theatre.

When the audience was dismissed the crippled children remained behind. One by one they were carried by strong arms to the automobiles that had brought them down from the home. Tenderly they were placed upon the upholstered seats—little bodies that no Doctor Chilton would ever cure. And away went twelve cars of them—back to the home, faces wreathed in smiles and full of their troubles, for at least one day, forgotten because they had seen "Pollyanna."
Novelty in Lobby Display For “His Royal Slyness”

These two illustrations show a very cleverly designed cut-out advertising Harold Lloyd's "His Royal Slyness" at the Virginian theatre, Charleston, West Virginia. The display attracted a great deal of attention and was the means of adding many dollars to the box office of the house during the picture's engagement.
Press Books Divided Into Distinct and Definite Classes

Gus Schneider Condemns Producers' Aids Which "Tout" Somebody

THERE are two kinds of criticism in this world. One is known as destructive, and is generally condemned as having no right to exist, because it fails to remedy the things or conditions it rails at. The other, named constructive, is popularly supposed to possess many virtues and much merit. It is my firm belief that the press books issued by film producers are the cause of more destructive criticism than any one single element in the film firmament. After a publicity manager has struggled with three or four of these collections of funny stories about stars and staresses, in vain attempts to determine just what the plot of the play might be, he is hardly in a position to do much more than gurgle in despair, and expire.

For five years I have been responsible for the advertising and publicity of the Providence Strand theatre. The crimes I committed in the beginning of my experience in this field have probably been atoned for by the product of the past three years or so. The Strand advertising has been commented upon pleasantly by friend and foe alike, and not a little of it has adorned these pages of this publication. Perhaps that gives me the license to speak as I shall on the subject of press material.

Press books furnished by film producers may be divided into two general classes: those which aim to tout the star, the author, the producer, the scenarist, the photographer, the title author, the stage director, and the pet poodle of the president of the company; and those which make an honest endeavor to help the exhibitor. Unhappily, the latter class seems the more unpopular with the producers, who seem not to be able to take from advertisers in the merchandise field the lessons they have learned in furnishing what is known as dealer helps, to retail merchants who sell their product.

To be specific: A press book should be prepared by a man, or men, who can sit at a desk and place Mr. Exhibitor alongside for consultation. It is infinitely more important that the exhibitor should be able to use the press material to maintain the personality of his house, than to herald each picture of each producer, and every production of every star, as the greatest thing that ever happened. It is infinitely more important that the sample mount house, and it is usually quite easy to design their advertising, with the material the press books contain. Occasionally some outside bookings are made, and then our troubles begin.

In the first place, halftone cuts, as any—one who has ever breathed near a newspaper ought to know, print horribly on news stock, unless they are expensively treated with fancy screens and hand work. Yet most of the illustrations I have seen in press books, except those I have given honorable mention above, are poorly made of halftones, squared up, with no attempt at art or decoration. Usually they are made from stills and show a whole group of characters, impossible to translate into terms of human figures when they appear in the newspaper.

And the copy! Banal, insipid, uninformative and useless, most of it. A word or two about the producer, the director and the star, and, at the bottom, a very small space where the exhibitor may have the privilege of inserting the name of his theatre.

Two weeks ago the Strand had a non-Paramount show. The press books of the two features on the hill were typical of the sort at which I am throwing mud.

One was printed on a four-sheet newspaper-size folder and showed several stills, lithos and lobby stands; but it did not contain a single coherent story of the film on which our local stories could be based. Neither was there a single cut illustrating this feature, nor interest. We had to take the whole thing from lobby photos, and it cost the house a pretty penny to do it. The book on the other feature was almost as bad. It was printed in 8 x 10 size, with a very handsome cover in two colors, but not a single illustration inside that could be used in our advertising. The result was that our whole week's publicity was all type, without a cut to brighten it up.

Now for something constructive: Producers and producers' publicity departments, attention! When you get out a press book, remember that the exhibitor wants to use it, not throw it in the waste basket. Hear in mind that exhibitors throughout this glorious and progressive land are learning to appreciate the value of good advertising materials.

Remember that in Oshkosh you don't amount to nearly as much as the fellow who shows your pictures; and his name ought to appear in type at least as large as that in which the name of the star or play is set. Yours ought not to show at all, maybe. If you make good pictures, and help the exhibitor to put them over properly—you'll paint by—no matter whether your name shows in the advertising or not. Give them line cuts—not halftones. Spend twice the money on the inside of your press books as you do on the covers. Don't call each picture the best ever made, and don't call each one of your stars the best in the world. If they are even good—they'll sell by tag. Take a look at the folders, booklets and other dealer helps that are furnished by manufacturers of advertised merchandise. These manufacturers learned long ago that if their trade mark was plastered all over everything, the dealer would not use the stuff. It is not a case of "Blank's Soap is the best in the world and Smith's store is permitted to sell it," but "Smith's is a darned good store and they sell Blank's Soap, which is also good." The advertiser who knows what he is about when he designs dealer helps remembers that his dealer has a relationship with the people in his locality that must be capitalized by linking it up with the goods made by the manufacturer. So the manufacturer's name is made small and the dealer's name BIG! The result is—everybody happy—business good.

"Peacock Kalogram" Contest Excites Detroit

George Guise Grabs Press Book Idea for Louise Glaum Picture

The Louise Glaum "Peacock Kalogram" idea for the exploitation of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" has been put over in Detroit in great shape.

The Glaum picture was booked for Charles H. Miles' Majestic Theatre last week and George Guise, press representative for the house, looked about for something unique and new in the way of exploitation. He found it in the "Peacock Kalogram."

Mr. Guise soon interested Marjorie Daw, who conducts the daily photoplay section in the Detroit Journal, a newspaper of more than 250,000 daily circulation, and who welcomed the "Kalogram" as a decidedly novel addition to her bright page of current film news and agreed to use it for six consecutive days.

Announcement was carried with the cut offering $10 in cash and 50 pairs of theatre tickets for those who solved the "Kalogram," giving the name of the screen star which the mystic peacock spelled and accompanying the solution with a neatly drawn copy of the "Kalogram," the prizes to be awarded to those who named the star and presented the nearest drawn copies of the peacock.

On the seventh day, on the eve of the opening date of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," a drawing made by "Lou" Tower, the cartoonist, of the "Kalogram" showing the letters l-o-u-i-s-e-g-l-a-u-m plainly deciphered and announcing the full list of prize winners, was used in the Journal.

Best Yet in Novelty Stage Settings

Perhaps the most artistic vocal number presentation ever staged in a New York motion picture theatre is on the bill at the Rivoli this week.

Cutting directly from a Pathe newsweekly strip showing a big ship hulling off the Canadian coast, with only a slight pause to allow the lifting of the stage curtain, "The Bell in the Lighthouse Rings" is shown that is a marvel of ingenuity and realism. Through set scenery representing towering cliffs of a rock-bound coast, the spectator looks through an apparent cleft in the rocks out on a stormy sea and sky.

High up on the top of one of the cliffs the lighthouse winks its warning to those on the sea. Lower town and masquerade is given to the whole scene proper, the singer, Emanuel List, basso profundo, in the greatest of costumes, sits on a half reclines as he sings the familiar selection. The exceptional feature of the setting is that the part of the sea shown is apparently the real thing. To get this effect the designers have blocked cut a "picture curtain" on the back drop, or, in this case, we think, the back wall of the theatre where the ordinary painted sea would blend with the sky line, and then found several hundred feet of film showing the ocean breaking on a sandy shore. By using a properly cut aperture in front of the lens of the projection machine the image is framed to cut into the V-shaped opening between the set pieces mentioned and the result is absolutely real.

The initiated will soon figure out how the illusion is created by the slight unsteadiness of the projection, but we are of the opinion that most of any audience will not believe that part of the setting they are viewing is a "moving picture."

During the appearance of the "Kalogram" in the Journal, Miss Daw received 1873 replies. Gueses varied from Mac Marsh to Theda Bara, the "Kalogram's" real value lying in the fact that it was entirely different from any other similar schemes in being actually difficult to solve.

Not only were the mail to the Journal's photoplay editor literally swamped with letters directed to "The Kalogram Editor" but the editorial department of the newspaper was invaded by an army of "Kalogram" guessers.

The answers showed that great pains had been taken both in solving the mystic letters and copying the peacock, some of the drawings being of truly artistic merit and others being done in water colors. According to Stanley Rushston, assistant city editor of the Journal, telephone inquiries concerning the "Kalogram" came in the same volume which usually accompanies the eve of an election day or a World's Series game.

Simultaneous with the "Kalogram" contest, a superb millinery creation, an exact duplicate of one worn by Miss Glaum during one of the scenes in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," was placed in the window of the Parisian Company's exclusive hat and gown shop. A display card under the hat announced that it would be given to the holder of the lucky number among the coupons to be distributed at the Majestic theatre during the week's run of the feature.

This stunt also proved of inestimable value. The interest the Louise Glaum hat aroused is shown by the fact that the Parisian Company during the display received orders to make seven duplicates of the hat for customers who were delighted with the chic design.

Both of these exploitation stunts proved miles above anything ever attempted in that line in Detroit. Both were extremely simple and put over without expense except for the cash prizes for the "Kalogram" and the small cost of the hat. The results were shown in the Majestic Theatre's box office statement for the week and the generous amount the theatre saved in advertising, which could not have brought the results regardless of space used.

The first and last ad carried by the Journal on the "Kalogram" contest are reproduced herewith.
"Bride" Advertises "The Spite Bride" in Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., has a number of live Exchange exploitation men who are doing good work in aiding exhibitors to put over pictures in that city. This is a picture of the new car and the "bride" who helped "The Spite Bride" make money for the Strand theatre as described on the opposite page.
Buffalo Advertises “Spite Bride” in Novel Manner

A Beautiful Girl in Bride’s Garments Rides

The Strand theatre, Buffalo, put over some excellent stunts on “The Spite Bride” during its presentation recently, the best of which however was the parading of a new limousine in the downtown streets, in which was a beautiful girl arrayed in bride’s garments and with signs in the windows behind this inscription, “Married to Spite the Other Girl—See About It Today at the Strand Theatre. Olive Thomas in ‘The Spite Bride.’” Through the co-operation of “Andy” Sharick, Select exploitation man, Manager E. O. Weinberg procured a new Overland light four, which was being shown at the Automobilist show. The machine was decorated with streamers with an Overland ad on them. The car was also trimmed with large white ribbons and bows. The auto, which was loaned without cost, was used Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Saturday, preceding the opening day of the picture, the machine was driven about town with a large card in the window upon which was “Watch This Car for the Spite Bride.” Stretched over the extra wheel in the rear of the car was a canvas, bearing the ad “The Spite Bride, Strand theatre, February 29, March 1, 2 and 3.”

On Monday the Strand brought to Buf-falo Sadie Lynn, a vaudeville artist, who alomed herself in a bridal costume and rode around the downtown sections afternoon and evening. This was continued Tuesday and Wednesday. A splendid fur wrap was procured from the New York Fur Store for the showing of a slide on the Strand screen and fresh flowers were obtained daily for the use of a small card in the front window of the auto boosting the florist. The Overland display at the Auto show in the 74th Armory carried a card advertising “The Spite Bride.” Inasmuch as the average attendance at the Auto show was 15,000 the value of this publicity can easily be seen. The car with the “spite bride” inside was marked in front of the Strand for a time each afternoon and evening and attracted no end of attention. The stunt was decided original and brought many new patrons to the box office.

Another good stunt was the arrangement whereby a window was turned over to “The Spite Bride” by the H. A. Meldrum Company’s department store in return for distribution of heralds with the Strand ad on one side and the store ad on the other. The company gave out one of these heralds with every package sent out of the store. A good display was obtained in one of the large candy stores by advertising Olive Thomas kisses. A dozen good displays were also obtained on office buildings, news stands and the Ellicott square lobby through the showing of a large card advertising Classic magazine which contained a big story on Olive Thomas. Displays were also obtained by a tie-up with stands handling the mid-winter number of Pictorial Review which had a full page painting of Olive Thomas by Haskel Collin.

A three sheet cut out of Miss Thomas was made and mounted in a red curtained shadow box, arranged with red and white lights to give a most attractive effect. This with a life-sized cut-out of dog was used all week in the lobby. Another lobby stunt was the placing of a small table upon which was placed a number of money bags and a sign reading “$1,000 to Spite the Other Girl—See ‘The Spite Bride.’” The week of the showing this display was fixed on the front of the theatre, second floor, and the lights connected with an alternating switch which flashed, resulting in an unusual display.

Mr. Weinberg had the assistance in the exploitation of “Andy” Sharick, Select exploitation man, who is meeting with unusual success in his work in the Buffalo territory.

How Hewitt Stirred Things Up In Robinson

“Gay Old Dog” Exploitation Which Is Good in Any Town Where Film Is Played

Manager Hewitt, of the Strand theatre, Robinson, Ill., is one of the real high-stepping exploitation exhibitors in the section of the country and when news is slow in his neighborhood he can be found stirring things up to the advantage of the Strand theatre. He recently booked “The Gay Old Dog,” and decided that he might just as well have them standing in a long line waiting for tickets, he started to work.

As a preliminary he went to a nearby city and sent a telegram to John Cumberland, suggesting that all hotels in the city be tried by the messengers. That night every hotel was paced for the mysterious John Cumberland. He sent other wires from day to day suggesting that different stores and business places be tried. At the end of a week he had the entire town looking for John Cumberland.

By way of variety he called up a laundry and asked that Mr. Cumberland’s laundry be sent to the hotel. A vain search for the laundry followed and each day the manager called up the laundry, stating that he was Mr. Cumberland, and demanding his laundry. After the identity of Mr. Cumberland became known, it may be explained, the manager of the laundry gathered together all the old lost laundry in his place and sent it to the theatre marked collect. It was taken and the bill paid. The story of the joke found its way into the papers (more exploitation and publicity).

As a finishing touch on the campaign, personal were inserted in the newspapers advertising for information of Mr. Cumberland, who was described as a gay old dog, was very much wanted. Replies were directed to a Post Office Box. Before the announcement of the picture the Eads was made in the newspapers the Police Department, the hotel clerks, merchants, and all sorts of amateur sleuths were aroused by the mystery of the man named Cumberland who was such a gay old dog.

Crowded houses marked the opening day of the showing and the wisdom of the manager was rewarded to the fullest measure. Mr. Hewitt is keeping quiet for a few days while business is good but the people of Robinson are waiting for the next thrill he is due to give them.

Gives Photos of Murray At Chicago Party.

In conjunction with the showing of “On With the Dance,” at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, Daniel Roche, Exploitation Representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Chicago, arranged an excellent advertising plan with Guyon’s Paradise, one of the leading dancing academies of Chicago, that can well be followed in any other city.

Guyon’s Paradise is the most fashionable dancing academy in Chicago and the average evening attendance is 1600 persons. A waltz contest was being conducted by the management of the academy, and Mr. Guyon was invited to set aside two Thursday nights as “On With the Dance” nights, when photos of Mae Murray would be given to each woman attending the academy.

Chicago Exploitation of "Great Air Robbery" Unusual

Unique Tie-up with Newspaper and Packing

During the week of February 21st, continuing well up into the second week of the first run at the Band Box theatre, Chicago has witnessed some of the most unique and concentrating exploitations ever given a production in Chicago. The subject of the exploitation was "The Great Air Robbery."

Two days before the opening of this great production full page advertisements were run in the Chicago Examiner, half page, quarter page, full column and other large copy was spread through the amusement sections of the various Chicago papers. A unique tie-up was arranged between Universal Film Exchange, the Chicago Evening American, Morris & Company, and the Curtiss Aeroplane agency. This particular stunt was the dropping of literature advertising the showing of "The Great Air Robbery" at the Band Box, from an aeroplane which flew over the loop and neighborhood districts of Chicago every day during the first week's showing of this production. One hundred thousand circulars containing an advertisement of Morris & Company, Supreme Ham and Bacon were distributed—several thousand of which were redeemable at the Chicago Evening American circulation office for either a slab of Bacon or one of Morris & Company's Supreme Hams. Morris & Company had redeemed these coupons to the amount of $15,000 up until the fourth day. Each time one of the lucky finders reported to the Chicago American they were given a ham or bacon—their picture was taken and published in the Chicago American during the week. On the first day of this stunt there was a different story with a different picture in each edition.

Another unique tie-up with Morris & Company was the parading through the loop of Morris & Company's prize twelve-horse show team carrying "Queen Locklear," a $10,000 prize short horn named in honor of the aviator. This stunt caused much excitement in Chicago's crowded loop district when it made its daily rounds. Signs on the wagon announced that this Prize Cow was no bull. Every day the wagon came to the loop with the prize short horn aboard different signs were used.

The most important feature of the exploitation campaign was the coming of Locklear to Chicago for the express purpose of thrilling the Windy City residents with his aeroplane stunts. In the presence of 15,000 people lined along Chicago lake front—while flying at a height of only 200 feet—Locklear mounted to the top plane and while standing erect ordered his pilot to make a complete loop. He seemed to like the sensation of this particular stunt, for within three minutes his performance was again repeated. It may be said at this point that this is absolutely the first time that any man ever attempted and performed such a daring and death defying stunt. Locklear explained that he figured that centrifugal force would keep him glued to the top plane. He said that he had it figured out—and quite properly so—as the result shows, as Mr. Locklear is still with us. After completing the loop, a gust of wind carried the plane over the loop—coming within fifteen feet of the tops of the buildings. As a matter of fact, the daring aviator was compelled to dodge in and about several towers and flag staffs. He was seen to climb quickly into the cockpit of the plane, which he afterward explained was for the purpose of permitting the machine to gain altitude. This was his only narrow escape while performing.

After Locklear descended this flight, by pre-arrangement several feature writers of the various newspapers in Chicago were taken for a spin over Chicago's Lake front and loop. By this arrangement, feature articles some of which covered two columns in length were run in Chicago's leading papers. The Locklear plane visited Aurora, Elgin, Wheaton, Gary, Joliet, Hammond, East Chicago, South Chicago, Chicago Heights, Blue Island, distributing dogners and free passes to local theatres showing "The Great Air Robbery."

Last but not least was the novel lobby display provided by John Kane, Manager of the Band Box theatre. Outside of giving great prominence to the name Locklear the lobby was decorated with handsomely colored lobby photos covering almost every phase of "The Great Air Robbery." A miniature aeroplane propelled by a small electric motor was suspended from the end of the overhanging electric sign, and attracted a great deal of attention while spinning through the air.

All in all it has been a great week for Chicago.

This campaign was supervised by Harry Rice, Chicago's new director of publicity, formerly in charge of Universal's publicity and exploitation department.

Hyman Buys Large Newspaper Space

Extensive exploitation for pictures is at last invading the metropolis or at least as approached as closely as Brooklyn. Last week managing director Edward L. Hyman of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, played "The River's End" and decided that no stone would be left unturned to prevent this feature from going over the top, consequently a special advertising campaign was mapped out. The week before the appearance of the feature at the Strand a quarter of a page of advertising was run in the New York Journal and American for four consecutive days. This was in conjunction with a wide book-store tie up which proved to be one of the features at Wanamaker's department store, one of the largest in New York. Nearly every book-store in Brooklyn gave aid, resulting in windows all over the city boosting the feature appearing at the Strand. Street cars and subways carried billboards. The big electric sign on the side of the theatre flashed the news to hundreds and thousands of people returning from Manhattan. Special announcements were flashed on the screen and in the house program.

And the result? Well, Managing Director Hyman claims that it was the best week in the history of the house.

Antiquated Water Wagon Exploitation Aid.

"Jubilo" did much to "make" Will Rogers in San Francisco and the San Francisco territory, so the exploitation of "Water, Water, Everywhere" wasn't the problem that it might have been. San Francisco had not forgotten Rogers since his personal appearance at the California theatre with the showing of "Jubilo" and when the newspapers announced his next appearance at the Rialto half the exploitation had been accomplished.

The picture opened on Sunday. On the preceding day an ancient water wagon paraded the streets of the city, including historic old Market Street, with its daily hundreds of thousands of people. The wagon as shown by the accompanying cut was driven by a "type" dressed in cowboy garb and drawn by a dilapidated team.

The water wagon stunt was a knock-out. It was inexpensive, the wagon being procured from the Municipal Board of Public Works, and the team and driver hired. Thousands of persons saw it daily and all got a laugh out of it—and remembered Will Rogers. On several occasions the police stopped the driver and ordered him off the main streets, and threatened arrest, until crowds gathered about in gaping wonder. Whereupon the wise driver flashed a permit and drove serenely on his way.

A nifty prologue—also inexpensive but very effective—was staged by Manager Ed. A. Smith, of the Rialto. Three singers were attired in cowboy garb for "atmosphere." A camp fire in a prairie set, with a rolling hill backdrop, and the trio about the fire, was revealed with the rise of the curtain. They opened with "Sahara" sung to an ominous sounding orchestral accompaniment to emphasize the dreariness of the "dry" theme. After a second number the trio sang "Jubilo," the screen coming down on the first chorus and the singers continuing until the last scenes of the pictures were flashed on. Each of the prologues got a tremendous hand and proved a popular feature of the show.

Allen Should Have Been a Lawyer.

Manager Sam Allen of Wilmer and Vincent's Colonial Theatre, Utica, N. Y., has a peculiar proposition on his hands inasmuch as he is forced to play a Sunday "movie concert" with a picture that he holds over and gives in combination with Keith vaudeville the next three days of the week. Furthermore, despite a good sized lobby, fire regulations forbid him standing his frames at angles while performances are going on. They have to be placed flat to the walls.

"Back to God's Country," which Mr. Allen was playing at the Colonial last week, lends itself to much lobby exploitation, but the numerous city ordinances defining violations were a stumbling block. However, Mr. Allen is an old roadman and one for whom handicaps only act as an incentive. Not being able to stand anything in the lobby, he kept the law by hanging business-getting cut-outs from wires stretched close to the ceiling. These cut-outs were animal heads, cut to shape and painted on both sides in black and red, mixed with them were cards also suspended, giving the name of the production in bold black letters. A few read "Wapi the Walrus," the name of the James Oliver Curwood story from which "Back to God's Country" was adapted.

This display was made and suspended several days prior to opening and created much interest. Mr. Allen also featured animals in his preliminary newspaper advertising, not forgetting, however, to mention Nell Shipman and James Oliver Curwood. Another bet that might have been overlooked by a less wise showman was to utilize a stage door curtain that was in use by a vaudeville act by mounting a "Back to God's Country" three-sheet on the drop. Mr. Allen also used a generous number of heralds and slides, and tied up with the principal book store in Utica for a display of stills and Curwood stories, each still containing the information that "Back to God's Country" was scheduled at the Colonial.

Exploitation Is Harmful Only When Misleading

Paul of Springfield Tells When and When Not to Advertise Heavily

Expoitation in terms of constructive theatre-building efforts will forever be the dominant factor in the motion picture industry, according to E. C. Paul, manager of the Fairbanks Theatre, Springfield, Ohio. Mr. Paul speaks from an exhibitor’s standpoint taking into full consideration all elements that make for box office favor and good will on the part of the theatre-going public. And, as he states, he has found that the entire problem of successfully operating a motion picture theatre is making a picture speak for itself through truthful exploitation.

Is it a fact that exploitation can only be harmful when it is misleading? Is it true that the theatregoer judges entertainment on a comparative basis and this factor must be considered when promotion campaigns are outlined? Is it logical that a theatre that intends to maintain a perfect spirit of public confidence must be operated as a catering establishment instead of on the “go-to-hell-if-you-don’t-like-it” basis?

These are some of the facts which Mr. Paul brings out in his discourse on successful theatre management and in his crowning tribute to sensible, inexpensive and feasible exploitation.

Select your favorite restaurant, suggests Mr. Paul, then try to analyze just why it is your favorite. You’ll find the food of quality, the service prompt and courteous, an atmosphere of welcome and cleanliness about the place and that all-powerful courtesy, respect for the patron.

And in this connection in particular, Mr. Paul points out, there is a great tendency for exhibitors to rely on $10-per-week ushers to make friends of a perfectly agreeable public. But does it work out thus? How many times has the average exhibitor walked down the front aisles of his house and watched the method in which his customers are seated? Has an exhibitor ever heard an attendant make a courteous remark to a patron? If not, the cause is not due to lack of the evil.

With his acute insight into the ins-and-outs of theatre management, Mr. Paul points out the fact that the balcony is often a place to find theatre-destructive conditions. Simply because a person pays fifteen cents less for his seat at the opera it should not get the same courtesy that the man in the orchestra receives. The great majority of exhibitors are likely to feel that the best ushers should work downstairs—the beginners and inferior type in the gallery.

E. C. Paul, manager of the Fairbanks theatre, Springfield, O.

“It’s usually the balcony crowd that shifts from theatre to theatre, holding but little good will toward any theatre in particular. Why not build this set of theatregoers into assets? Let the balcony patrons bring their friends. Any time you have a balcony filled the prospective ticket buyer will find it natural to buy a down-stairs seat. It is safe to say that if a persistent effort by exhibitors were made to cater and pay strict attention to the brand of customer offered balcony patrons, the number of regular attenders of any given theatre would increase by anywhere from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. Because I maintain that the balcony patron is the man who can be made into a regular customer by the right kind of treatment. But he will always be a wanderer so far as regular attendance of any one theatre is concerned. He is never to be made to understand the same grade of courtesy and attention that characterizes the regular patron.”

Exploitation, Mr. Paul maintains, is merely the matter of bringing to the theatregoer the vital human interest facts that in themselves create a justified amount of curiosity and attention. That it is just as well to mislead the public by innuendo as by point-blank lies is another of Mr. Paul’s contentions. “You’ve heard the story of the boy who yelled ‘Wolf!’” said he. “It’s the same way with exploitation. The public might come once to the theatre when the fake cry was given; but it’s a more difficult matter bringing them to your house a second time, regardless of whether your attraction is the best thing you’ve shown during the season.”

“When we get a big picture we are not afraid to exploit it,” said Mr. Paul. When we have a picture of only moderate merit we hold down on our praise, refusing to commit ourselves and to this day not a patron has ever appeared before me with the statement that we represented in our advertising wasn’t carried out by what he saw on the screen.

We try to gauge our public tastes keeping in mind that what pleased a year ago does not necessarily please today. We book our pictures with a “from Missouri” attitude. We sell them to our public in the same way. When we give a big picture a big send off in exploitation our people believe it is a big picture and they all come out to see it. We are satisfied to make a reasonable profit on a medium grade feature and wait for the “clean-up” when we have something big. That’s all there is to our success as exhibitors.”

Lobby Display Idea for "Desert Gold"

H. H. Bosley, manager of the Alhambra theatre of Los Angeles, aroused interest for his “Desert Gold” showing by an exploitation campaign which even in the Film Metropolis was exceptional.

Mr. Bosley’s advertising for “Desert Gold” began a week before the picture opened with the newspapers and in a lobby exhibition for ten days before the first performance, half of the right side of the spacious lobby being given to an immense water-color painting representing the big scene where Neil Fiedler rushes into the lair of the bandit Rojas and refuses Captain Thorpe from death by the cholla cactus torture.

In the centre of the lobby close to the street Mr. Bosley had installed a phonograph, the bottom of which was decorated to represent a box of gold. A record of “Desert Gold,” was played continuously. Back of the phonograph were life-size portraits of Eileen Percy, E. K. Lincoln and Margery Wilson.

A big side-wall display was another unique feature of the Alhambra campaign.

Mr. Bosley also got everything possible out of the Grosset and Dunlap link-up on the production, four of the biggest bookshops in Los Angeles co-operating with the Alhambra management as many effective window displays resulted. Mr. Bosley also obtained some valuable co-operation from local songshops, which pushed the song number, “Desert Gold,” to the limit throughout the presentation at the Alhambra.
Display By New Theatre, Baltimore For "Kentucky"

Showing the kind of exploitation which Louis De Hoff, manager, and Leon Victor, publicity director of the New Theatre, Baltimore, gave "An Old Kentucky" when the racing film played that city, the result of which is told in a story on the opposite page. Baltimore has but lately come into the fold of cities to adopt the so-called "circus" publicity for pictures. We look forward to other good stories from this same theatre.
Boys Get Impatient but the New Gets the Publicity

POLICE reserves, the riot call and between 200 and 300 college boys who rushed pell-mell into the playhouse without tickets helped make the first showing of "In Old Kentucky" at the New Theatre, Baltimore, on February 23, a record-breaking one. More than 8,000 persons viewed the film during the first day's performance and the theatre has been playing to capacity houses since that time. It is estimated that the week's audiences totalled 45,000 persons.

Attention of Baltimorians had been attracted for a week ahead of time to the showing of the film, owing to the press-agentry of Leon Victor, as well as by the fact that Mahlon Hamilton, a Baltimorean, is playing opposite Anita Stewart in the leading role. As a result the theatre was crowded at the performance and not only was the lobby filled but a large number of persons was waiting before the ticket windows to purchase admission, by the time that a group of nearly 300 college boys put in their appearance.

The students started to wait in line for their turn to purchase tickets, but after a while they grew impatient and decided to "rush" the theatre. A near panic ensued, during which the ticket office was shoved to one side, women and children were elbowed out of the way and a number of persons narrowly escaped being hurt.

Despite the fact that he is suffering from a broken arm which he sustained when he slipped on the ice several weeks ago, Manager Louis A. DeHoff personally led a detachment of his assistants in an effort to check the rush of the students. He was unable to do so, however, and they managed to fight their way into the theatre, where they were only dislodged by squads of policemen from two nearby station houses where the riot call had been sounded.

This unintentional bit of exploitation attracted more attention to the showing of the film, perhaps, than Mr. Victor's press-agentry. Several excellent exploitation "stunts" viewed by the newspapers have been staged by him with the cooperation of Mr. DeHoff.

One of these was the decorating of the lobby and interior of the theatre with scenery reproduced of the race-track. Lined along the sides are picket-fences such as surround the paddocks while posted at intervals are signs directing persons "To the Main Entrance." Near the theatre proper is posted an "odds board," bearing the names of the horses named in the film.

In addition to this a pickaninny band and four jockeys, two of whom are "Madges," have been riding the streets of the city, attracting attention to the playlet. Three of the Five-and-Ten Cent Stores are featuring the sale of Anita Stewart's song "In Old Kentucky" with large window displays, while most of the soda fountains in the downtown section of the city are selling "Anita Stewart Mint Juleps."

The playlet will remain at the theatre for another week. Leon Victor who organized the "pickaninny band" and procured the services of the two jockeys and the two "Madges" is an old trouper. He was publicity man for the first stage production of "In Old Kentucky," when it played 26 years ago and has been identified with the show ever since.

"Clips" from News for Own Newspaper

Andrew Karzas, director of the Woodlawn theatre, who is making a reputation for himself in the Chicago territory, as a real showman, has, for the past six months, been getting out a monthly newspaper in the interest of his theatre, which he distributes free to ten thousand people living in the district.

It is an attractive eight-page publication in newspaper form, full of items in regard to stars and pictures, which are sure to interest the fans and is proving one of the best patronage pullers he knows of, according to Mr. Karzas.

E. J. Ryan, the editor, calls much of the reading matter printed, from the Motion Picture News, and from press sheets gotten out by various producers, and by the use of these news sources is able to turn out a moving picture paper of real interest.

Merchants of the district in which the Woodlawn theatre is located have also found the publication with its 10,000 circulation a valuable advertising medium and are making liberal use of full, half and quarter page ads, so that the space they buy in the publication practically pays for the cost of printing and distributing the Woodlawn theatre "News and Views."

Pomeroy Ties In With Auto Show

The outstanding stunt of "Automobile Week" in Ottawa, Ontario, which was observed during the first week in March, consisted simply of the showing of an automobile stunt in the Strand theatre, one of the downtown houses. The presence of a new touring model in the theatre entrance created a sensation and also obtained wide publicity for the theatre manager, the automobile dealer whose car was shown, and others.

A big crowd jammied the street on the Monday morning when the car was being driven into the theatre lobby and from that moment until the end of the week the people surged around the entrance. Every imaginable question was asked, many people believing that the car had skidded into the theatre lobby from the street and that an accident had occurred. The stunt was credited with being the best outdoor feature of the trade week and the theatre also did a big business. The idea was very simple, yet the apparent and immediate results were immense.

When so many people crowded around the box office to inquire why the automobile happened to be there and to ask if it was a real automobile, Harry Pomeroy of the Strand prepared a card bearing the wording, "See the automobile in 'The Web of Chance,' starring Peggy Hyland," this being the special automobile feature for which he had booked for "Automobile Week." He also attached a sign "Automobile Week," which was one of the standardized window posters which had been issued by the Automotive Trade Association of Ottawa. A little later came a request for permission to sell tickets at the theatre for the hazard of the St. Patrick's Day "Bazaar" for which a Chevrolet car, similar to the one shown, was offered as a prize. An announcement to this effect was also attached to the car.

The results from this one little stunt, which was intended to lend atmosphere to the "Automobile Week" campaign, proved to be far-reaching. The people flocked into the theatre to see the automobile feature; both the theatre and Mr. J. G. McGuire, the automobile dealer, obtained great publicity including numerous "mentions" in the local newspaper; the automobile dealer also secured a number of orders for new cars and the ladies of the church guild sold several hundred dollars worth of bazaar tickets.

Manager Pomeroy is now figuring out similar stunts of the type of the Strand to catch the crowd on future occasions.

Another good stunt was also seen at the Centre theatre, a few doors away, where the special attraction was an Arbuckle Comedy, "The Garage," which was booked by Manager Stapleton because of its appropriateness for "Automobile Week." This comedy also drew well as a result of time and special advertising and publicity.
Frisco Youngsters Pleased With “Huck Finn”

The appeal of “Huckleberry Finn” to Young America is fully demonstrated by these lines of San Francisco youngsters who are waiting their turn at the box office of the Imperial theatre.
Two Live Bulls Head the Procession

Manager George Gildersleeve, of the Kingston Opera House, Kingston, N. Y., used many distinctive stunts to herald Charlie Chaplin's "A Burlesque on Carmen" and the "Carmen Beauties Revue."

In addition to the advertising usually done for opera house attractions? On the opening date of the show, Manager Gildersleeve pulled two stunts which attracted much attention. In charge of keepers dressed as Charlie Chaplin in his Carmen costume, two live bulls were lead through the town carrying banners concerning the show. Following the afternoon performance, motion pictures were taken of the entire Carmen Beauties Company in front of the Kingston Opera House. The posing of the Carmen Beauties Chorus in their costumes attracted wide-spread attention. The motion pictures were taken by George Bunny, son of the late famous comedian, John Bunny, and considerable mention of this fact was made in all of the advertising, both in newspapers and lobby.

Limerick Contest Gets Great Attention.

J. C. Hauber, owner-manager of the Hauber theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark., has just put over a contest that has been highly effective in popularizing "The Adventures of Ruth."

He inserted an advertisement announceing a Limerick contest for prizes consisting of a season pass to the Hauber on each of the 15 nights it presented "The Adventures of Ruth" to the authors of the ten best limericks having Ruth Roland as their subject. The editor of the paper readily agreed to publish the limericks selected by the judge, a prominent woman.

For ten days or more limericks poured into the Ruth Roland Contest department of The Commercial. The pick of the day's yield was published, and thus for ten days before the picture opened the theatre was accorded a prominent place in the columns of the paper. And on the strength of an advertisement a few inches in size Mr. Hauber realized columns of publicity of the most-effective sort. He states that he has played to capacity business with each episode of the serial shown thus far.

Kress Features "Potato Matinee."

Harry Kress has a motto: "Unless a man gives, he can not hope to receive."

So when the Memorial Hospital at Piqua, Ohio, where Mr. Kress' May's Opera House does the entertaining, sent forth an appeal for potatoes the exhibitor got busy, very busy. Of course, if the hospital needed potatoes, Kress had to get them.

He advertised a "potato matinee" in connection with his showing of "True Heart Susie."

"Anyone bringing a potato for the Memorial Hospital may present the potato as his admission ticket," advertised Mr. Kress.

When the spud dust cleared away, a row of bushel baskets full of potatoes remained. The grateful hospital authorities thanked Mr. Kress; the newspapers gave him a lot of space and business boomed on. Children, for the most part, brought the potatoes just as Kress had hoped. Some came with a bag full, others brought only one.
"It's an Ill Wind That Blows Nobody Good"

A SHTABULA, Ohio, was in the snow-bound zone last week. In fact, you couldn't have gotten in or out of Ash- tabula last week for love or money. Trains couldn't get in. Street cars couldn't run. Snow everywhere. The streets were a succession of snow mounds. Good to look at, but pretty discouraging for a fellow whose business depends upon luring folks away from their cozy fire-sides.

That's the way Ward Johnson, manager of the Majestic theatre, felt about it. He had booked "Pinto," the Goldwyn picture with Mabel Normand, for the week of February 16th, and he was discouraged for he saw failure with a big "F" staring him in the face.

And then, along came C. C. Dear dorff, Goldwyn's inventive publicity man. "What's the trouble?" Dear dorff asked Johnson. "Trouble, why, how do you expect us to cover running expenses with snow piled up like that?" (pointing all along the main street), Johnson answered. "Snow piled up in banks? Great! That's just what we want. Come along with me, and help me get as many laths as we can lay our hands on. We'll billboard this town with "Pinto" posters as it has never before been billboarded, and I'll bet a hat that we fill the Majestic theatre all week."

Slightly encouraged, but still somewhat skeptical, Johnson followed instructions. He got the laths. The posters he had. Then they proceeded to stick these laths in each snow mound along every down town street in Ash tabula, building them up like tents and facing them with a full sized window card announcing "Pinto" at the Majestic theatre the week of Feb. 16th, and that was the end of the story.

First Straw Hat Attracts Attention

It is not often that one sees a man clad in a light spring suit, with his crown adorned with a straw hat, walking on the streets of Buffalo in February, especially this February when North Pole tempera tures have been the rule in the Queen City of the Lakes. But that is what countless Buffaloans saw when Manager Al Sherry of the Star theatre, Buffalo, engaged a man to adorn himself as illustrated in the "Pinto" view here with and parade the down town streets with the sign "I am a Virtuous Man," covering his back. The backview hammer home this fact, but the necktie he wore, absolutely convinced passers-by. The stunt was used several days to advertise "A Virtuous Man," which was shown on the Star screen and attracted no end of attention, in fact few persons passed the "virtuous" man without turning around to see what it was all about and the big white sign sent home the message.

Manager Johnson soon grew warm over the exploitation of "Pinto" and decided to do something on his own book. So he engaged a couple of girls to call people on the telephone. These girls went right through the telephone book and after getting their party would say, "Did You Know That Mabel Normand is Appearing in "Pinto" at the Majestic Theatre this week?" and then ring off immediately.

This stirred up a lot of talk among the inhabitants. And what's more it stirred them from their lethargy, and many of 'em put on their arctics and bundled up in their fur coats and went down to the Majestic, who would otherwise have remained peacefully at home.

The Majestic lobby was also called into requisition for the campaign, and looked very festive with a huge Mabel Normand cut-out, throwing a real lasso all the way across the lobby to an equal sized cut-out of Cullen Landis. On pretty days this display was placed in front of the theatre, but when the weather was too severe it was removed to the protection of the lobby.

Uses "Inserts" for Novelty Herald

As an advertising medium which would be new and novel and help convince his patrons that the attraction was something unusual, William Brandt, manager of the Marcy theatre, Brooklyn, borrowed the plates from Famous Players-Lasky from their trade journal in back of his stand, and after adding some appropriate wording at the bottom ran off thousands of heralds in colors which he mailed to prospective patrons miles from the Marcy.

Gains Cooperation of Finest Stores

T. L. Kearse, who operates a string of motion picture theatres in Charleston, W. Va., believes in doing things just a little better than the other fellow. This motto of his hit him in good stead when he came to exploiting his one week's engagement (a long, long, long run in Charleston) of Cecil B. De-Mille's "Male and Female" at the Strand theatre.

In the first place, Mr. Kearse decided that his newspaper advertising should give a tone of "class" to his engagement, befitting the sumptuous "Male and Female.

Through the cooperation of the exploitation department of the Cincinnati Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Kearse was able to duplicate the very effective advertising used for the Strand theatre of Cincinnati when "Male and Female" ran several weeks at that theatre. The names of the theatres being the same, it was easy to adapt the original, special drawings to the Charleston theatre.

Mr. Kearse decided to "bluge" on his advertising and used in all space totaling some three or four full pages. In his publicity, Mr. Kearse continued the atmosphere of "class." The Gazette ran the series of illustrated stories "A Day with Gloria Swanson," showing her various gowns, as a woman's page feature. In the Mail proved very effective in connection with a "minute men" contest.

Mr. Kearse used a novel way of displaying three-colored window cards. He had his cashiers make cut-outs of them so that they could be used as counters inside as well as in windows. Mr. Kearse's window campaign was distinctive in itself. His wide personal acquaintance made it possible to work in one of the best windows in town. Each of these window displays was made unusual. Mr. Kearse secured especially hand-painted cards in blue and gold, with scene stills mounted on them. The American Sign Company, in preparing these cards, hit a popular chord with exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory and a number are following Mr. Kearse's example. The beautiful cards find easy entry into windows of the finest stores, while lithographs would not be acceptable.

Realtart Acquires Big New Studies

The Moroseco studies are being distributed by Armed, one of the largest and best equipped plants in the country, which have been acquired by Reallart Pictures Corporation. Realtart will take immediate possession and in addition will take over present operating staff of the studio.

The deal was concluded by Morris Kohn, president of Realtart, after extended negotiations. The property involved represents a big value to the studios occupying a large tract of ground and are constructed in the permanent fashion.

The two buildings are located at 201 to 211 North Occidental Boulevard and occupy ground on both sides of the street. The buildings are modern steel or concrete construction and present an attractive and substantial appearance.

Frank Garbutt, who constructed the studios about six years ago for the Bossworth Producing Company, will remain in charge under the Realtart management. The principal members of Garbutt's staff will be: Will M. Ritchey, head of the production department; Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins, art director; Jack Burrows, Western traffic manager; Frank Bigg, superintendent of laboratory; and Walter Hansen, engineering manager.

Wanda Hawley, the new star recently announced by Realtart, will make her first production there and is scheduled to begin work very shortly.

Famous Pictures Distributes For Tyrad

The arrangement whereby Tyrad Pictures, Inc., assigns all of its products to the Famous Pictures Sales Company for distribution in the New York, Albany and Buffalo territory went into effect last week. Mathias Radin, of Tyrad, will sell the balance of the country on the state right basis of all pictures bought by his company.
Manager Ben Beadel at the Selz- Nick-Select office is receiving the thanks of all of the Exchange Managers for his able work in handling the shipping emergency, when the express clerks went on strike Saturday, March 23rd.

Mr. Beadel was recently appointed Chairman of Transportation of the Chicago F. I. L. M. Club, and the sudden express shipments was enough to test the mettle of a railroad president. The fact that film could be shipped by parcel post was known by all, but to get the film through the congested post-office it would not reach the theatre until after the playing date—that was the real job—and to Mr. Beadel goes the credit of arranging matters, so that film shipments are going without delay, regardless of the fact that most parcel post shipments are being held up several days.

Several managers have been so pleased with the way the parcel post shipping system arranged by Mr. Beadel handles the traffic that they are seriously considering using this method of film distribution in the future instead of returning to the express companies after the strike is over.

A number of eastern film companies have shown a great interest in the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation's new series of Billy Whizzers Comedies, and President Spanuth is scheduled to leave for New York next week, to screen the first of the comedies for their benefit.

Mr. Spanuth recently signed David P. Howell, who handled the Spanuth's Vod-A-Vill Movies for Europe and sold them in every foreign country. Mr. Howell was expected to take over the rights for the Billy Whizzers Comedies abroad.

In discussing his plans for the sale of the new comedy series, Mr. Spanuth declared that he would prefer to sell to the state rights men, as this would allow him to hold the independent and assure them of a good supply of first-class pictures, including shorts, and at prices such as he is used to charging. He says that he has done well with his Vod-A-Vill Movies on a state right basis, so he anticipates the same success in the future.

According to word received in Chicago from Al Martin, assistant director, New Western, he is getting busy after arriving on the coast and already is at work on his first picture. Exchanges through the week with the next few weeks the public will be able to see him in a new character, as he has thrown away his old costume colors, which have so long been his distinguishing mark. Ethelyn Gibson, his leading lady, is reported to have asked to have him join other producing companies on the coast and will continue to work with Mr. West in pictures.

"On With The Dance," according to Jones, Lieck & Schaefer, has proved the greatest success in the history of the Randolph theatre and they have decided to continue showing this picture for a second week. Another feature was added to the bill on March 14, the new Cump picture, entitled, "Andy's Mother-in-law."

Assistant Manager, W. W. Anderson, and the sales manager of Pathé Chicago exchange, were hosts at a hot and farewell banquet, given at the Hotel La Salle, Tuesday, in honor of Manager E. A. Ashman, formerly Milwaukee Manager for Pathé, who took charge of the Chicago office as successor to Mr. Eschen, the day the banquet occurred. R. Proctor, of The Big Four, was named President of the directors of sales of the J. Stewart Blackton Productions, a speaker at the dinner.

"The First of the Frolics" starring Whiskers (Fatty) Williams, who is heralded as a second Arbuckle, has been completed at the studios of the Blackton Film Company, Earl Park, Indiana, and its concern soon will be ready to release one each week. According to Anderson, the film will be presented with a handsome traveling bag as a token of good will, by the men whom he has led to success in Chicago territory and Mr. Ashman was the recipient of a handsome bouquet.

Tarkington Baker, who is manager of Universal City, and who is new to the business world, has had a very successful week in Chicago. A part of Mr. Baker's success has been the result of his efforts to have other producing companies go with him, and his success has been so complete that he has been able to handle the picture to the satisfaction of the exhibitors.

Manager Perkins of the Oakley theatre, who is a partner of Salo, has booked the new release for a week's run, which will end on March 14 and is valuing at $1500.00. He has been taking a long chance wearing those spookers after dark in Chicago. Perkins and Anschutz also operate the New Strand theatre.

Anderson, manager of the Buffalo branch. Another expert, making an industrial subject in Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi under the supervision of Sonner & Calvert, of the service department.

Two months ago, he was appointed Manager of the Lyric theatre and now the direction of all vaudeville bookings at the Lyric, Hamill & Schaefer's two major theatres have been placed entirely in his hands.

Of the J. J. is the son of Aaron J. Jones, President of J. L. & S., and this may account for opportunities for advancement which availed the average man but let it be said that J. J. has served his apprenticeship and has absorbed the three and a half years of his illustrious father to such an extent that he begins his career with a much better understanding of the entire business than the average fellow.

CINCINNATI

A new house, to be known as "The Shakespeare," will be built on State avenue, near Eighth, by the Shakespeare Amusement company, which was organized this week. The company has purchased a lot 42 by 100 feet. The company was organized by persons formerly interested in the Waldorf Amusement company, which ran the National theatre at Eighth and Depot streets.

In the copyright infringement suit of M. INDIANAPOLIS

The Broadway of Indianapolis derived from its regular vaudeville policy last week to show Jack Dempsey in "Daredevils Jack." Result: half-page advertisements in all of the Indianapolis newspapers before the last half of the week announcing that the house record had been shattered.

Mrs. Pickford and "Pollyanna" went over big at the Riviera in Anderson, Ind., as the result of the publicity gained from a special performance given for the children from the Madison County Orphans Home.

While the Riviera was opening its doors to the orphans the Strand in Anderson made a lot of friends for itself among the more fortunate beginners when Managers Heller and Cobin threw open the doors and let several hundred high school students, celebrating a basketball victory in a district tournament, march in and take possession.

The W. C. T. U. of Seymour, Ind., held a meeting last week in which Sunday movies were denounced and resolutions adopted, advocating their discontinuance on the ground that they are a Sabbath desolation. Theatre managers are watching the situation closely, but nothing further of note has developed.

Indianapolis theatrical circles arerowing over the death of Clarence I. Miller, treasurer of English's opera house, who was found in a dying condition in his bed Thursday morning, Mar. 11. Heart trouble was responsible for Mr. Miller's demise.

New Trolley Fare Does Not Affect Theatres

Apparently there has been no perceptible injury to motion picture theatres in Albany, on account of the recent increase in street car fare. A seven-cent fare is now demanded by the local traction company and proprietors in some of the theatres were fearful that their audiences would become smaller because of the jump in fares.

Albany is peculiarly situated, and on account of its hills, street car service to some of the theatres is almost necessary. All houses, however, are reporting an excellent business.

Associated Exhbitors Announce an All-Star Cast

Seek Only the Best Products

Associated Exhibitors Awaiting Favorable Opportunity

The words of Mr. Wellenbrink, the Associated Exhibitors are not working on motion picture prece- dents. It would seem, as if they building up and going forward on established values of business ex- istence, a principle applied successfully in any line of endeavor. The secre- tary of Associated Exhibitors con- tinued that chief of these business values, insofar as the motion pic- ture industry is concerned, is the value of equitable dealing with the theatre owner.

"The issue of equitable dealing with the picture showman is para- mount. Mr. Wellenbrink has seen the very beginning of equitable dealing with the exhibitor is the beginning of the best pic- tures. That is the first thing to worry about—for when an organiza- tion has big attractions to circu- late, it has to carry the show through, and whether their output consists of one or a hundred pic- tures a year the exhibitor can rest assured that Associated Exhibitors pictures will be the best motion pic- tures obtainable anywhere."

Announces an All-Star Cast

I n announcing the cast for his independent production, to be presented by the Mayfield Photophone Corporation, Director Sidney A. Franklin emphasized the exploited possibilities afforded by an all-star company of players. Mr. Franklin is now at work on his in- initial independent subject, a screen version of Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel, "Athale" with a cast comprising some of filmland's most prominent names.

For the role of "Athale", one of Chambers' fascinating character creations, Mr. Franklin has engaged Sylvia Sidney, the gifted daughter of the Franklin company after appearing with success in a series of features produced in New York in which she was starred. In addition, Miss Bixler, who has been featured prominently in a number of special productions including a screen ver- sion of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's "Missing" in which she scored a hit.

The leading male role is in the hands of Conrad Nagel, an actor of wide experience both on the stage and before the camera. Mr. Nagel has won a large following among photophone devotees as a result of his work in "Little Women", "The Lion and the Mouse", in which he played opposite Alice Joyce, and "Red Head" in which he portrayed Alice Brady. On the legitimate stage, Mr. Nagel is best known for his performance opposite Alice Brady in "Porgy" in which he played the leading male role in "The Man Who Came Back" in which he toured the country for more than a year.

Rosenmary Thelby known the country over for her character portrayals has been entrusted with an important role. while Robert Cain, a MacGrath or any widely read author, would hardly consider it, would exercise to his beneficence the author's name a term such as "Anonymous". He recognizes in the author's name an asset of in- calculable value—a source of re- revenue which he develops to its fullest limitations."

Franklin further asserts that the producer in assembling an all- star cast pays substantial salaries to secure players of established re- putation in order to enhance the draw- ing power of his production.

South Sea Views in Way

Martin Johnson Writes Rothacker of Progress Which Is Being Made

Waterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has received a letter from Martin Johnson, now engaged in filming some of the "wild men" of the South Seas. The letter follows:

"I must hand it to you people Mr. Beyfuss sends you my Borderland films (for printing) and sends ten-reels to me here in Syd- ney. They are excellent—in fact, I have never seen better work done. I have got things out of Australia that I did not know was there."

I have a private showing at the Piccadilly theatre here in Sydney about two hundred friends. I came away from the theatre feeling mighty proud of all ten reel."

Then I took the films up to Malouka, and showed them to the South Sea nobility. Nagapate thought the work was the best he had ever had the pleasure of seeing—of course, he had never seen mov- ing pictures before."

"I will have my new film, "Wild Men Of Maleleula," out and assembled in about a week. It will go forward by the next boat to America. I am advising Mr. Bey- fuss to send it to you."

"I am sailing for New Guinea with 45,000 feet of film in two weeks. This film I will develop on the spot. However, afterwards when I go to Tahiti and Africa I will travel fast so that I will not have time to develop. I have got a discovery that by proper attention I can possibly film in the tropics and keep it for a year before it is developed, so after New Guinea will send all work to you to be developed."

Mr. Rothacker wrote back "Thanks!" and the word that he, along with the rest of America, was looking forward to seeing the wild
Reviews

WITH 1920 only getting under way Robertson-Cole points with pride at the manner in which it has aimed to fulfill its promise to start the motion picture industry on the world with the importance of its 1920-1921 acquisitions. Better than mere phrases are mention of Otis Skinner, who is to give the screen his immortal "Kisnet." Mac Marsh who comes back for four specials a year; Georges Carpentier, the great international figure for whom a big story will be written by Willard Mack, the successful playwright; Susie Hayakawa, who will make four big pictures a year; Din- ton Farmer, who will do the Wehle; the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Polar pictures; Albert Capellani, one of the supreme directors whose first picture will be Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller," screen rights to "Grumpy," Cyril Mande's famous play, and Chic Sales, the famous fable comedian, on the screen for the first time.

Contrasts these stars, writers, directors, and plays have been closed. Work in most instancies is already under way. So within the first phase of this new year is born out the substance of the prophecy made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, to the effect that Robertson-Cole will not spare expense to release motion pictures, that will please the patron and so assure a financial harvest for the live exhibitor.

In "Kisnet," Otis Skinner created a role which surpasses anything previously done. Klaw & Erlanger produced this play which was tremendously successful all over the country. According to Robertson-Cole's plans, "Kisnet" will be put on the screen in a not less elaborately stylish shape than upon the stage.

"Mae Marsh, star of the Griffith masterpiece, "Birth of a Nation," is now at coast end the faster studios at Glendale, California, on her first Robertson-Cole-Gasnier special. L. J. Carver, who supervised the "Beloved Chester," one of the successes of the season, promises a new Mae Marsh when she appears in the first of her new pictures, "Georges Carpentier, 'Idol of France,' who thrilled the world by his exploits in the ring, is now on his way to America to produce a big dramatic picture for Robertson-Cole. William A. Wellman, who is working on an original story, which is to be ready in a few days. In this lays the Carpentier will be given a role fitted to his dramatic capabilities. The signing of the noted Frenchman, further cements the good understanding between Robertson-Cole and the exhibitor. It is generally predicted in the trade that the Carpentier film will be one of the sure box office attractions of the year.

"Susie Hayakawa, whose work on the screen is a frequent subject of comment, frequently to write, 'He is in a class by himself,' has been signed by Robertson-Cole. The studio promises for pictures over a period of four years, beginning at the conclusion of the first series of pictures in August. Hayakawa is one of the most favored personalities of the screen.

"Dustin Farnum, whose film characterizations have made his picture of first rank in the United States; is now set in the fast studio's at Glendale, California, on her first Robertson-Cole-Gasnier special. Stories are being selected, to be used by Farnum for his special pictures, which will be monumental.

Patriotism

For what is to be the first time in the history of the motion picture industry a great organization in the business will release three patriotic productions in one month. The Path Exchange, Inc., will release during the month of April productions by J. Stuart Blackton, Edwin Carewe and Lewis Arak; and all of them are patriotic in theme; while America stories; and are still supreme in answering the requirement of the motion picture industry for dramatic entertainment. "Lifting Shadows," the Perret production, featuring Enro, will be released on April 1st; the Blackton production, "The Blood Barrier," with Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, will be released on April 11th; and on April 25th, the Edwin Carewe production of Augustus Thomas' story, "Rio Grande," will be released.

The first of the pictures to be released, "Lifting Shadows," deals with the intrigues of a land of Russian conspirators against the safety and peace of the United States; the second, "The Blood Barrier," deals with the efforts of the enemy of the country to make an officer of the United States Army betray the secrets of his government; and "Rio Grande," is a thrilling picture of conditions on the Mexican border.

Three Such Pictures

For April

In "Lifting Shadows," as in all of the three productions, the enter- tainment value is the first consideration, and it is a picture of high dramatic value. The settings are on a magnificent scale and the lighting is handled with great care. As a young Russian girl, in love with a young American, Miss Wellman is being described as a powerful role. From the first scene to the last efforts of the Russian conspirators, we get the dramatic feature of the story, according to reports. The supporting cast is a strong one. "The Blood Barrier," as the Perret production, will be a big picture, with the great starring role being taken by Sylvia Breamer. In "Rio Grande," Julia Swayne Gordon is also in the cast and "The Blood Barrier," from the pen of the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, and written in his most effective style, is the story of a young American soldier in possession of a secret of great value to an enemy power. Even when his own life is at stake. In "The Blood Barrier," Sylvia Breamer, as the heroine, who are not appearing in it by Proxy, are also seen together in "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife," and "Return."
Universal Puts Stunt Over
Press Carries Arabian Story and Universal Gets Effective Tie-Up

UNIVERSAL has let the cat out of the bag, and the escape of the from a river to the high point of the intrigue, is not surprising. The title of the new feature, "Aladdin," is revealed for the first time, and its content is detailed in interviews with representatives of the studios. The film, with its Assistant Director, Bert Beltrame, at the helm, will be released on March 21st.

Prepare Rousing Welcome
Georges Carpentier, Due to Arrive
March 21st, to Get Big Reception

In addition to the delegation from "The Scarlet Rights Feature," that will meet Georges Carpentier, when he arrives in New York from France about March 21st, preparations are being made in many quarters to give the Frenchman a rousing reception when he reaches the shores of the U. S. A.

Committees from many military organizations, service men and members of the Foreign Legion are planning to be on hand as well as representatives from all of the big sporting organizations, sporting editors and special writers on the big magazines.

It is learned that in view of the repeated utterances of Georges Carpentier that he is an advocate of temperance, representatives from both the Federal and the State are on the spot when he arrives, anxious to get first hand statements on his views of the prohibition question.

Whether Carpentier favors temperance only as a rule of training or whether he carries the rule into his private life is of the deepest concern to the forces lined up for and against liberal enforcement. It is believed that by the advance of the right wines and beers that Carpentier, being a Frenchman, undoubtedly has taken these beverages as part of his daily diet since childhood and will therefore not only be in entire sympathy with their views but stand out as a shining example of the beneficial qualities of mild stimulants.

The art critics, on the other hand, are equally strong in their convictions that Carpentier would never have reached the vigor that carried him to the pinnacle of physical prowess in Europe.

The circumstances of Carpentier's marriage has also attracted the attention of the romantic writers on the various publications, and a race is in progress to get a beat on a human interest story when the big fellow arrives.

Accompanied by his manager, Déschamps, Carpentier sailed from France on the 13th, and he is due to arrive in New York harbor on March 21st.

Republic Will Distribute "Common Sense"

An announcement is made this week by Brinton N. Burch, president of Republic Distributing Corporation, that Republic has acquired and will shortly release "Common Sense," a five-reel production directed by Louis W. C. de Mille, and the case includes Viola Vale and Ralph Lewis.

Viola Vale has appeared in such productions as "The Woman He Feared," "The Secret of the Black Mountains," and "The Son of His Father." Ralph Lewis will be remembered for his work in "The Birth of a Nation" and other productions, including "The Kid is Clever" and "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Goldwyn Closes Deals for Foreign Market

Arthur Zembl, manager of the foreign sales department of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, last week closed several large contracts for the handling of the third year series of Goldwyn Pictures in foreign countries.

The countries covered by the new deals are Spain and Portugal, Mexico and Central America, and Japan, the arrangements for marketing the Goldwyn product in the latter country being made by Geoffrey Nye, who is now on a tour of the Far East.

Griffith Makes Ninety Interiors in One Day

Edward Griffith, director of the Vitagraph company, headed by Corinne Griffith, accomplished the feat of taking ninety interior scenes in nine hours recently for Miss Griffith's latest picture, "The Garter Girl." The scenes were filmed in the Irving Place Theatre at Irving Place and Fiftteenth street.

It is believed that this sets up a new record for picture taking.

New Book Purchases Named

In line with its schedule of big stories for "Flying A" Specials, the American Film Company has purchased the moving picture rights to the best novels for screenization which such authors as Albert Payson Terhune, Samuel Merwin, Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, and David Anderson have been able to produce.

Following "The Honey Bee," which was selected for the American Film Company's first year running, other productions of the first years of the Christian era, it is stated, for the only existing piece of the Judas blood money—a grisly memento of the Master's betrayal—and places it in the hands of a noble-due, twelfth century society man.

How this Hebraic coin, heavy with its gruesome traditions, influenced the affairs of its owner, coloring his love and his home with mystery and intrigue, and, drawn from the realm of reality, it is reported by American Film to be unparalleled for holding the interest of the reader and baffling the courted woman who would engage in none of the actual developments for a solution of the problems and an end to the "The Tenth Piece of Silver" by Louis Koechling, that will be released by the company in the near future.

The Tenth Piece of Silver," is published by Leopold Merrill Company, furnishes a fresh setting for a plot among the pearl hunters on the Wabash flats of Indiana. The finding of the Blue Moon, a gorgeous pearl, forms the pivot of the plot.

The author, Mr. Terhune, draws his hero from among the reckless, daring and dangerous river-men, whose strange mode of life and strange occupation affords a unique background for a romance replete with action, charged with mystery, vital with drama and envelopes with true romance, says the "Flying A." "Their Mutual Child," a 1919 novel by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, plays on the question ofugenics and pokes fun at the attempt to bring up children by rote and according to a mathematical schedule.

The futility of modern so-called "society life," is the background of an amusing love drama, "The House of Toys," by James Grant and in the American Film Company, will present, it is stated, a strong drama of love and ambition, a story written with much insight by a man who has had ample opportunity to view life as it is—a Pennsylvania lawyer, Henry Russell Miller. Other novels by the same author are "The Man Higher Up" and "His Rise to Power." The scenario, written by Daniel F. Whitcomb, is already in the hands of Director George L. Cox, at the American's Santa Barbara studio, and "The House of Toys" will soon be before the cameras. "The Week End," by Cosmo Hamilton, will be the basis for another American super-feature. The producers are well aware that "all the world loves a lover," and "The Week End" will be brought forth on the screen with this fact in mind. How a charming young miss, harassed by an unwelcome suitor, made more aggressive by her parents' stamp of approval, works out her own matrimonial salvation during one week-end is unfolded in double quick time by the author with the help of Arthur J. Zeller's scenario. "Slam Bang Jim" adapted from "Snug Judgement," and "The Gamesters" are also on the way.

Cochrane Urges Greater Care

Better stories, better characterization, and presentation of ideas that are original, artistic and different are necessary in the moving picture industry to satisfy the increasingly insistent demands of a discriminating clientele, according to a statement by R. H. Cochran, vice-president of Universal Film Mfg. Company, in a recent interview.

"A spectacular scene, a costly set, or a trip around the world by some company will not always attract an audience," he continued. "But if we give the audience a human, down-to-earth presentation in a good story that is logical, and embellish it in presentation with beautiful sets and varied lighting effects, then we are making progress in meeting the demands of our public."

"In another conclusion, Mr. Cochran admits that the exhibitor has no small part to play if the silent drama is to be made more popular than it is today. Those films which have attracted a refined, highly educated, and highly critical class of patrons who are demanding a better standard of pictures. To the producer falls the task of creating the proper atmosphere to bring out all the latent possibilities in their attractions.

"I find that the producers are aware of this demand for better pictures," Mr. Cochran said. "In fact this subject has been treated from so many different angles in recent months that to some it may seem hackneyed."

"Every company is putting forth great effort to obtain the best story material. The stars of to-day and the stars of to-morrow are, and will be, players who can interpret their characters so well that their own identity in many instances will be lost in that of the character. However, there will always remain with us a limited few whose personality and whose mannerisms ever will be more acceptable than any character interpretations they may attempt."

"It is also a notable fact that all companies now demand the utmost in realism—by that I mean that every scene in a story being filmed must be absolutely true to life and historically and scenically correct in every respect."

"As evidence of Universal's realization of the importance of good stories I may state that in the current list of releases such authors as are represented as H. H. Van Loan, J. G. Haws, Peter B. Kyne, Elizabeth Jordan, Edward Franklin, Holman Day, A. H. Pitch, Randall Parrish, Baroness De Mayer, Henry Howland and others of equal prominence."

How Realart Got Miss Hawley

A CORRECTION to a statement of the Realart Corporation, "Realart stole Wanda Hawley from the Famous Players-Lasky Company's producing force in a close contest of wits and resources. By personal influence and much maneuvering I was able to snatch this new star away from Famous Players just as they had completed plans to launch her as a star in a big million dollar special." So spoke Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pictures, on the sale of his first two-reeler, the deal by which Miss Hawley became a Realart star.

The statement confirms the reports that a number of other producing companies had sought Miss Hawley and entered the bidding so strenuously as to establish her unquestionably as the prize star of the year. This competition for the services of a young actress was the keenest of which he had ever known, according to Mr. Kohn.

"There is no reason," he said, "why the facts in this case should be withheld. It is just such incidents as this that make motion picture production the fascinating business it is. Considerable interest in our new star appears to have been aroused by the advertising campaign we have been conducting for several weeks, and the facts of the deal seem to me to be worth relating.

"As everyone knows, Miss Hawley has been a leading woman for some time. Even before that, when she had been in motion pictures only a short period she might have been starred, but chose to hide her time and gain experience. She has played with every important Famous Players-Lasky star. No part has been too big, too difficult or too different for her to do. Consider the range in ability of an actress who has been cast successfully opposite such different types as Bessie Love, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Wallace Reid and Bryant Washburn.

"If it had been possible, Famous Players would have undoubtedly chosen to keep her indefinitely as a leading woman for its male stars. But her time to be a star had arrived. Famous Players realized this no less than others, and prepared to put Miss Hawley over in a big way.

"For this purpose one of the biggest stage hits of the last ten years was purchased. The picture was made with Miss Hawley as the star. It was to have been launched as a million dollar special, the biggest thing of the year. Then the production was tied up by litigation. The result was a misfortune for everybody concerned, the public included. I do not want to make too much of the case, as the facts are common knowledge. But the point is that Miss Hawley was to have been the subject of that special.

"Immediately we opened negotiations for Miss Hawley. No sooner had she been examined and discovered others were aiming in the same direction. A many-cornered battle developed the contest is entirely novel in my experience. We have never heard of or known of a similar case and I believe I can safely say it is without parallel.

"Whether the campaign Famous Players-Lasky planned will be carried through now or not, I do not know. But whether it is or not makes no difference to Realart. We are thoroughly confident of our ability to properly launch Miss Hawley as a star. Our strength of efforts will be centered on that objective as they were centered a short time ago on Miss Blumen. Our success with that young lady is too well known to need comment now.

"We are confident that Miss Hawley will more than justify our investment in her. Such is Realart's choice, but I am convinced she is a popular choice. We have simply placed ourselves in the fortunate position of being her sponsors. And that part of the job we are going to do well. A most excellent stage success has been purchased as her first vehicle."

Morris Kohn Issues Statement About the Deal

Director Speaks at Utica Convention Is Addressed by J. Vincent, Head of Directors' Assn.

"DIRECTORS and exhibitors are working toward the same end and, consciously or not, they are working together," declared J. Vincent, President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, in his address to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at Utica on March 9.

Addressing the exhibitors on behalf of the motion-picture directors, Mr. Vincent drew attention to the fact that all of the work of the directors is based upon the fact that a star make an appeal to the audience; that the interests of the director and those of the exhibitor are identical.

"It is doubly difficult," says Mr. Vincent in this connection, "if the exhibitors have realized to what an extent the point of view of the director is working, always, with the idea that each scene and act will have a certain effect upon those who come to see it in the theater. The director must study the psychology of audi ences. He builds upon this knowledge. He creates a certain emotion in an actor with, perhaps, the intention of creating a totally different emotion in the audience. From first to last he makes his production with the same question in his mind that occurs to the exhibitor on viewing a picture—what will the audience think of this?

"Today the progressive exhibitor creates in his theater an atmosphere designed to harmonize with the spirit of the picture. In the matter of lobby displays and decoration, mutual accompaniments and even stage settings, he is now setting a high standard. That is not without due effect upon audiences. A poster is shown by the popularity of those pictures whose proprietors are most ingenious in this respect. The poster is the program of the studio, practices the same methods in getting proper effects, creating atmosphere for his actors to get them into their parts."

New Story for Mrs. Chaplin

"Old Dad," Popular Novel, Star's Next Vehicle for First National

I t has been definitely decided by Louis B. Mayer that the third studio, Miss Mabel Terry-Lucas picture to be released through First National will be "Old Dad," founded on a story of the same name by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott. The story of "Old Dad" had its first publication serially in the Woman's Home Companion. It has been running in this magazine, and it stirred the attention of Mr. Mayer. He and his assistants were so impressed with the story that he lost no time in acquiring the world's motion picture rights as a first purchase. So great was the interest shown by the story, in fact, that several well known book publishers sought permission to issue it in book form. It finally made its appearance and has proven one of the biggest sellers of the past year. It should prove an ideal vehicle for Mrs. Chaplin and in it she should do by far the best work of her career.

At least three other producing companies have made offers to Mr. Mayer for the picture rights of this story, one of them aiming to secure it for one of the best known female stars on the screen, but all offers were refused as Mr. Mayer had determined to keep for both Miss Stewart and Mrs. Chaplin the very big role in the picture. It has not yet been decided when "Old Dad" will be released, but when it is, it will go through the First National, the same as all other Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions.

Edith Day Released

Arranged Republic to Distribute "Children Not Wanted." Crest Feature

A N announcement deemed of special interest to exhibitors is the release of "Children Not Wanted," starring Edith Day, which has been advertised in the trade press. It is to the effect that Republic Distribution Corporation, of which Lewis S. Selznick is executive, director, will distribute the production.

"Children Not Wanted" was written by Stuart Sniur, especially for Miss Day, and was produced by Crest pictures of which Mr. Selznick is general manager. In the cast is "K. C. McGee," the column in a New York daily is widely read. The story of the picture centers around Miss Day as a working girl looking after a smaller girl who has been orphaned. Everywhere she turns an unrequited attention is shown her and her small charge. Everlastingly the little girl is in the house for the little girl and herself is said to be shown very truly in the production, in which an element of comedy keeps the audience at high pitch until the finish.

James Vincent, President, of the Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Herbert Rawlinson, who has the leading role in "Children Not Wanted," was the star of a two-reeler released by Republic. The fourth picture is titled "Chang & Lewis Day."
Reelcraft Corporation Formed

Reelcraft is the name selected by Mr. R. C. Cropper and his associates for their recently formed five-reel motion-picture corporation, organized for the purpose of producing and distributing "short subjects" exclusively. Reelcraft's headquarters have been established at 729 Seventh Avenue, in New York City, pending the securing of a permanent location.

The officers of the company are R. C. Cropper, president; J. B. Herrold, vice-president, to supervise finance; Frederick J. Wylie, assistant vice-president, to supervise production; Samuel Spitzer, secretary; and Samuel W. Farney, treasurer.

In speaking of the new corporation, Mr. Cropper said: "For nearly two years, through the medium of my exchanges, I have heard the continual cry of exhibitors for more and better short subjects, and most of all for an exclusive short-subject exchange, where the exhibitor might book the short subjects on a regular series of two-reel pictures which he must see every week to round his big feature picture production. It is to cater to this demand that Reelcraft has been organized. Reelcraft has taken over all of the releases, stars, studios at Chicago, Long Beach, and Hollywood of the Bull's-eye Film Company; the Emerald Motion Picture Company, of Chicago; the business and sales offices of the Inter-State Exchange Company in Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis; and the suburban film company of New York with its exchanges.

"This gives us six established offices with allied connections in other principal cities. We have six producing units at work, and all are being organized. The releases taken over include the Texas Guinan two-reelers; Alice How and all two-reel comedies; Billy Van and two-reel comedies; the Moranti comedies; the William Franey one-reel comedies; and the Church (Sunset) Scenics. Numerous other educational, serials, novelties and short subjects will be added. Reelcraft also continues the shorts hitherto handled by the exchanges it takes over.

"While the various units have not recently been taken over, the management is being unified and organized with many important changes. These changes are directed toward the above-mentioned units."

The present intention and aim is to identify Reelcraft to the exhibition business, and to foster it as a national public as well, as the indubitable mark of perfection and quality for all "short subjects." This is an ever increasing demand for exclusive releases. Producers who have specialized in one and two-reel pictures have now adopted the five-reel and six-reel productions. Patty Arbuckle and Chaplin have both adopted the policy of fewer but longer pictures; many other smaller producers have done likewise, until it has created an actual shortage for the exhibitors who must have the "short subjects" to round out their programs. It is to satisfy and fulfill this demand that five-reeel incorporated Reelcraft to be a national producer and distributor.

Mr. Cropper is president of Reelcraft, Mr. Wylie is vice-president of the Cropper Distributing Company and the Bee Hive Film Company, both well known among film men, being one of the pioneers, owning and operating offices for the exchanges of exchanges in the United States.

Seven Metro Units Start Work

Six companies on the West Coast and one in the East are working under the general control of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures series of photoplays adapted from big stage successes and bestselling novels.

In the midst of the tumult of the timelessness of "Fine Feathers," a Metro official said: "It is a play which follows the trend of the present day, and which succeeding logic the result of extravagance. Nearly every paper and magazine in the country is pointing to the public, these times of skyscraping prices, that the solution of the high cost of living is the lowering down to pre-war levels depends chiefly upon collective individual thrift. And so now this play not only depicts with unsparing fidelity a cross-section of representative American life and ideas, but carries it with the weight of a vital message."

Bert Lytell's part in "The Temple of Dawn" will come as a marked contrast to his last two characterizations, that of being the young Montreal lawyer, Charlie Steele, in "The Smiling Widow," the little known character of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the refined crook, Paul Armstrong's great melodramatic world-famous.
Zellner Comes East to Write Continuity

Arthur Zellner, of the Metro scenario staff, is on route from California to New York, where it is planned that he will write the continuity for the first of the big special productions to be made at Metro's Sixty-first street studios under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. According to present arrangements, Mr. Zellner will write only one script in New York, and then return to the Pacific coast.

Arthur Zellner made the picture version of "Shore Acres", which Alice Lake has just finished, and has adapted I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn", as Bert Lytell's next star vehicle for Metro.

'Shadeevill Jack' Turns Them Away in Ohio

Reports indicating that the demand for "Shadeevill Jack", the Pathé serial starring Jack Dempsey, could be met only by holding the episode over for a longer run than originally intended are not rare. The Lyceum theatre, Tiffin, O., played the first episode on March 1. The management conducted a newspaper advertising campaign of the showing and anticipated a big crowd. It apparently realized that it was greater than anticipation for early next morning the exchange received a wire asking if the picture could be held over for another day.

Sennett's Latest Is Sought

Contracts Pour Into United Artists for New Five-Reel Comedy

A vast array of contracts poured into the office of Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists, last week. Immediately following the announcement of the early release in April of Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy sensation, "Down on the Farm", which has been heralded everywhere by the executives of the "Big Four" organization who have seen it, as the most spectacular comedy that has ever been produced and undoubtedly the greatest feature that has come from the studios of the "Laugh Kings". This production upon which Mr. Sennett personally spent many months of hard labor and expended large sums so as to make it the greatest picture he ever turned out of his studio, was suggested to the "Comedy King" by certain extremely amusingly funny episodes that happened "on the farm" of the Sennett estate in Los Angeles.

In their leisure moments the stars of the Sennett studios undertook to encourage the high cost of living and the re-establishment of relations between man and eggs. Their efforts at seeding, milling and fattening the gay and festive porters were fraught with elements of comedy that "Down on the Farm" just naturally grew like Topoy and clamored for screen presentation. Thrills, laughter, suspense, travel, satire, a tinge of the burlesque of high art, and spectacle are all combined in this sensational comedy and Hiram Abrams, of the "Big Four" has been most enthusiastic about the entire production.

Will Keep Advance Information On "Mollycoddle" from Public

For the first time since he entered upon a screen career Douglas Fairbanks has taken steps to prevent advance information from reaching the outside world as to the nature of his activities in his studies.

With his return from Arizona this week, together with the hundred members of his company who had been on location in the desert filming a number of the more important and thrilling scenes for "Mollycoddle", the next Fairbanks production for United Artists, the order was issued by the star to see that no lettering be permitted about the grounds of the planet and the "set" whether on the stage or otherwise, be hidden from the view of outsiders.

The precautions are due to the fact that there are so many novels being introduced in "Mollycoddle" which will cause even greater comment than the nightmare and flood episodes of "When the Clouds Roll By".

Robert Fairbanks, manager of production of the organization, has followed his brother's instructions to the letter and things have been concealed to such perfection that even the eyes of the trained army aviators who continually fly over the film colony in Hollywood, have been deceived.

For nine weeks preparations were made before activities started on "Mollycoddle" during which time the star developed his original idea into what is believed to be one of the best stories he has ever had to work with. Tom Geraghty, who was responsible for Doug's last screen adaptation, prepared the scenario again and Victor Fleming who supervised things from the front in the making of "When the Clouds Roll By" is again directing with Ted Reed occupying the first aid to the director.

Business Calls Quimby From Los Angeles

General Manager P. C. Quimby, of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has cut short his stay in Los Angeles and he is now on his way to New York. Mr. Quimby was on the coast for only a few days. He stated that he had intended to remain for some weeks, but that his presence was required in New York at once in connection with the contemplated consummation of several arrangements of vital importance to Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"Blind Love" Is Booked For Loew Circuit

Gerald F. Bacon's six reel production "Blind Love", starring Lucy Cotton, has been booked over the Loew Circuit in Greater New York. The New York and Northern New Jersey bookings are handled by Nathan Harsh who is staging the picture. "Blind Love", is adapted by Basil Dickey from a play by Max Marcin. Oliver D. Bailey directed.

H. M. Hobart Issues Statement

"The reason why Cosmopolitan Productions' pictures have been so successful for us and for our exhibitors is because we have not been in the public eye. In other words, the element of popular taste plays a major part in our production plans, for we know well that no picture can really be called a success if it doesn't draw at the box office." Thus did Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager of International Film Service, Inc., 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, producers of Cosmopolitan Productions and Hearst News Reels, sum up the why and wherefore of his company's success since Cosmopolitan Productions made its first appearance on the motion picture horizon.

"After all, the proof of the motion picture is in the box office," continued Mr. Hobart. "A commercial failure overshadows whatever artistic success a picture may achieve simply because success in anything is measured to-day by the yardstick of commercialism. It is a venture that doesn't make money isn't successful. So it is with that idea in mind that we make our pictures and it is with that in mind also that we exploit and market them. Our exhibitors are bound by our pictures—that's our first slogan.

"Taking the production end first, I can say for it, and I am sure that our exhibitors will bear me out in this, that we consider no expense in the making of Cosmopolitan features. Our star, Marion Davies, is too well known to the trade and the public to require any introduction. Her box office pull has been well demonstrated in the past and her following in the desert Miss Davies is given only such stories as fit her rare personality. She is always surrounded by a cast of exceptional screen players and she has the best directors as well as the best in scenic assistance, etc. In support of this statement I recall to mind 'The Cinema Murder,' in which Miss Davies starred. This picture is a tremendous financial success and is still in demand among exhibitors. This holds true of 'The Miracle of Love,' which Miss Davies starring vehicles go also into the making of our other productions which feature Lucy Cotton and Alza Rubens individually.

"These productions which are the first and only contribution made so far to the screen by Cosmopolitan or the William Fox office, are on the right track. They have made big money and are still making big money for exhibitors everywhere.

There's the proof of the pudding. We have been in receipt of unfeigned communications from representatives of exhibitors throughout the country that our pictures made money for them and I have yet to receive one letter to the contrary.

"This brings me to 'April Fooly,' Miss Davies' latest screen work which is now taking all over. In New York, opening March 28th. It has given us, right judgment it has every element of popularity and because it has every sign of a sure box office success. In the first place it has Marion Davies for its star, and in the second place the story was written by Cynthia Stockley a famous author.

"Then again 'April Fooly' will be given such a publicity and exploitation as none of our former productions has had. That is saying a great deal, I know, when one recalls the fact was that we still publicize our film which surrounded 'The Miracle of Love,' and 'The Cinema Murder,' etc. Our duty, in short is to give our picture to the exhibitors without end and to sell the picture to him and advertise it as we always have been doing. We will give him a full production is it to us to help sell it to his patrons and that's where our exploitation campaign comes in. I have no hesitancy in saying that the publicity and advertising on 'April Fooly' will exceed the public demand. We have always been the case hardened film folk who think they have seen the best in exploitation."

T. C. Deitrich to Produce Stage Farcce

Theodore C. Deitrich, well known as a producer of motion pictures, is to enter the field of spoken drama. His first production, already in the form of a farce-comedy, "Oh, Henry!" by Bude Dudley, co-author with Otto Harbach, of "The Best of Broadway," and "Little Whopper," humorist of the New York Evening World, and creator of "Lucyaire," "Return of the Mayor of Dolly," "Jeff Nutt" and other comedy newspaper characters.

United Scheduled Collier and Ray Releases

"Better Late Than Never," starring William Collier, will be released by United on March 28th, in "The Pinch Hitter," a Recreated Triangle Play, with Charles Ray in the leading role. Supported by Sylvia Breamer, will be released on the same date, just about the time the big league teams get out from the Southern training camps.

Le Guerre Starring in Harvard Prize Play

George Le Guerre, who formerly appeared in "Blind Love," "The Soul of a Woman," "The Birth of a Race," is now playing in one of the leading roles in "Mama's Affair," which is running at the Fulton theatre.

Vivian Rich Completes Picture

Eighteen days of actual working time is the record set by Vivian Rich, the new Fox star, in completing her first production for William Fox at the Hollywood studios. According to a statement from the Fox offices, "the previous record," says a report from the Hollywood office, "the completion of a production of this nature and length was established some time ago—also by a woman star—and totaled twenty-one working days. Miss Rich's progress in her latest film for this producer, under the skillful direction of Scott Dunlap, is a notable one.

"Scott Dunlap has made some very fine pictures for Fox, and it is with pleasureable anticipation that the trade looks forward to seeing this first Vivian Rich film. Since completing "Her Elephant Man," with Miss Mason, Mr. Dunlap has put the sensational Buck Jones through the film of Charles Alden Selzer's western novel "Forbidden Trails." This also is promised as a novelty in screen entertainment, presenting many new human touches and ingenious camera angles, for which this director has become noted.

The name of Miss Rich's first picture for William Fox is "Would You Forgive?" It is a drama of moral content, in which a brilliant young actress plays a role that puts her ability to a much severer test than that which she met so successfully with Miss Mason, Mr. Dunlap has given us are featured in a Fox banner—"The Last Straw" which introduces Buck Jones as a screen star, and in which she was his leading lady.

The story, written especially for Miss Rich, is from the pen of Julius G. Forshem, one of the four writers recently added to the Fox scenario staff on the west coast. There are but four principals in the story, and the entire picture was filmed within the walls of the studios in Hollywood without loss of time on location work. Supporting Vivian Rich in this, her first offering, as a Fox star, are the popular Tom Chatterton, who plays the part of John Cleveland, husband of the star; Ben Deely, whose work in recent pictures has won much favorable comment; and Lyle Leslie, a screen actress of merit.

The part of the child in "Would You Forgive?"—a part very small but very important in the unfolding of the plot—was assigned to little Nancy Caswell, and in her work it is one of the most touching bits of child acting seen this season.
“King Spruce” Ready Soon

Hodkinson Assembles Prints of Dial Feature for April Release

PRINTS of “King Spruce,” the Hodkinson Day story to be held by all forests starring Mitchell Lewis and produced by Otto Bollini and Roy Clements for the Dial Film Company, are being assembled by the Republic laboratories for early dispatch to the thirty-four Hodkinson branches. Simultaneously with the inauguration of a powerful advertising drive, trade showings of “King Spruce” will be held by all Hodkinson managers in the field. The feature will be released on April 18th.

A cast of merit was assembled to support Mitchell Lewis by Roy Clements, Chief in support of the star in Marro Anderson, the possessing little ingenue star, who though still in her teens has supported such famous stage celebrities as Joseph Jefferson, Richard Mansfield, Julia Marlowe and Ellen Shannon. The versatile child star enjoys wide popularity among patrons of the silver screen, the result of her splendid characterizations in “A Wife on Trial,” “The Getaway,” “The Master Spy,” “The Chimp” and as leading woman for Frank Krenn in “The Midnight Stage.”

Melbourne MacDowell has a role commensurate, with his ability in “King Spruce,” and Arthur Milling, the ever-busy busy, introduces a new brand of villainy in the Mitchell Lewis vehicle. An important part in “King Spruce” is in the hands of Betty Wales, Joe Ray, James O’Neil, Gus Soville and Frederic Herzog are seen advantage in the minor roles of “King Spruce.”

“Deadlier Sex” Is Booked

Many Theatres Sign for Feature After Its Premiere in New York

FOLLOWING the announcement of the booking of the latest Blanche Sweet production released by Pathé, the “Deadlier Sex,” by the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre many other theatres in the Metropolitan area have contracted for the picture. The Broadway theatre released the picture for one week starting next Thursday. Many of the exhibitors visited the theatre to see for themselves the manner in which the profession handles the feature. Important bookings resulted.

Among the important houses contracting for the picture are the Moss Regent and the Moss Flatbush theatres; B. F. Keith’s Prospect; Academy of Music; Proctor’s 23rd Street, and Proctor’s 125th Street; Harlem Opera House; Keith’s Jersey City; Proctor’s Mount Vernon, and Proctor’s Yonkers; Street; D. Y. Picker’s Rio theatre; Adelphi, 77th Street; Symphony, “Poor Miss Julia,” and the Majestic on Washington Heights.

In all of the big exchange centers the food exchanges have either booked the picture or have arranged for a screening as soon as prints are available for them. The success of the first two Blanche Sweet pictures released by Pathé, “A Woman of Pleasure” and “Fighting Crovsey,” is believed to have established the star on a firm basis in the theatres.

Mons Randall Goes West

Equity Artist Wants to Be Close to Production Source of Pictures

WITH the departure of Mr. Mons Randall for the West Coast, New York lost one of her most valuable and most prominent film trade artists. Randall was born in Los Angeles on the Overland Limited last Saturday, accompanied by Mrs. Ann chicks, Mr. Randall, and John ston, prominent film star under contract with Vitagraph. Randall takes charge of the camera department and special artist for Equity Picture Corporation working in connection with Nat. C. Roffman, advertising manager for Equity on the New York end.

In leaving New York, Randall said: “New York is a great art town, possibly the greatest in the world for high quality advertising art, but the possibilities of expansion of art for the film business on the New York end lies in the trouble shooting that producers are up against, i.e., that of not being able to see each production so that the right keynote of advertising exploitation can be given it. Times without number have I worked on pictures without seeing them, and I know by my own personal observation that nearly every New York studio has a film advertising department working under the same handicap of advertising and exploitation on pictures without seeing the pictures beforehand, which to my notion is all wrong. Advertising men and artists are constantly working in the dark by using only such meager advance information on pictures as they secure from their coast studios.”

In every key city of the country the Lloyd comedies are now being played by one or more first-run theatres, and according to Pathe, the subjects are receiving the widest exploitation accorded any comedies. Exhibitors are finding Lloyd a real box office attraction, and in scores of instances he is playing above the feature by leading downmen,” says the theatre playing Lloyds include:

In the New York territory the big theatres playing Lloyds include: Strand, New York City; Rialto, New York City; Marcus Loew Cir-

Guessing Contest Aids Louis Glauin Film

Mason's Riverside Theatre, Delaware, Mich., last week.

Madame Chautard Dies

"In New York City

Emile Chautard, Mayflower director, is receiving condolence from his many friends on the death of his wife, Alice Archeabaud Chautard who passed away on March 12th at the Chauffe residence, 790 Riverside Drive, New York, following a stroke of paralysis. Word that his wife had suffered a third stroke reached Mr. Chautard while he was working on a picture at Fort Lee. The director rushed to his wife's bedside and was with her when she passed away.

Before her marriage Madame Chautard was a well known French emotional actress.

Ray Owes His Fame to Screen

Arthur S. Kane

"On every hand we hear that production is being curtailed," declared President Kane in a statement.

"The stage has become feverish! pictures and better ones. With the movement for longer runs in the picture business, it becomes necessary to furnish exhibitors with large-scale productions that merit a run extending over a week or two weeks a month."

"This demand is being met with the acquisition of great story material, with a scoring plot and good characterization. A legitimate show cannot hold the boards without a good artistic reason. The machine-made dramas of Broadway meet exactly the same fate that the machine-made products of the studio receive. To achieve longer runs we must first achieve stronger photo-dramas, and we are going a long way in this direction by taking over successful stage plays whose stories are well adapted to picturization, also by writing into screen plays the novels and literary works that have earned attention and interest by their literary merit."

"In addition just as the stage play requires a strong personality, an actor of finesse, so carry the dramatic material, so the screen will find in its approach to dramatic perfection the need for great interpreters of the unspoken word. The opinion of a well known legitimate actor states that the screen is developing its very own talent, and that it is unique upon recruits from the successful stage people."

"These pictures are a dramatic art in themselves. Their development has been little short of miraculous, and now the most gorgeous temples of amusement in the land are dedicated to their use. The pictures are giving us expert apos- tems from stars, in the rank of stars, in the ranks of screen players and devoted exclusively to this art. The cit- avus Charles Ray as an example of an actor who owes his present dramatic position to a long and continuous study in the films is limiting the proofs of the progress made for there are others in a similar position."

"Charles Ray has been chosen because he, more than any other, expresses a particular art, of universal response and appreciation. He has a trick for the human note of pathos and stands as an artist who has done a great deal to elevate the in- ternal stage. We are on our way forthwith hereunto being more even more skilled, accomplished interpreters of the unspoken drama. Lessened production calling for longer runs in the theatres means that producers must justify their assumption of the photography merit runs equaling very often those of stage plays in the same theatre.

Robertson-Cole Re-Signs "Jap"

Sessue Hayakawa Signs Agreement Covering Next Four Years

N EARING the end of a succession of gram Om pictures which have proved him one of the most gifted screen actors, Sessue Hayakawa has just closed a new contract with Robertson-Cole, a company which will cover the next four years, and give him opportunity to make pictures even greater than any in which he has starred in the past.

Within a short time the new contract will go into effect, and soon after that Robertson-Cole will announce the time and nature of the rest of the new productions.

According to the terms of the new contract Hayakawa will make only four pictures a year, from four to five months will be devoted to one tour with the company, in which of making it a super-fine of an standard never surpassed, says Robertson-Cole. Money, tone and care will be expended so that the productions of the next four years will be the greatest of Hayakawa's career. The best of direction, elaborate casting, careful selection of locations, and close scrutiny of all stories will be some of the elements which will contribute to the success of these pictures annunite Robertson-Cole.

Commenting on the close of the present engagement of Hayakawa with Robertson-Cole, a statement from the offices of that organization expresses the opinion that the star has firmly established himself as one of the most remarkable figures of the screen world. "With all the teachings and lore of the Oriental stage," says Robertson-Cole, Hayakawa completed his education in America. Here, he assimilated the spirit of the British and American picture without losing any of his Eastern outlook. Consequently he is not only the best actor of Oriental roles but a producer, whose judgment on Eastern matters is unparalleled. In many of his Robertson-Cole pictures he has personally assisted his director in obtaining the very faithful atmospheres, which have made his pictures so successful.

"Through his Robertson-Cole productions, which have been made at the New York Studios, Hayakawa has found a world-absolute. It is his determination to fix himself in the good will of his audience, by even greater pains and care during the years which are still ahead.

"After a stage career in the Far East, Hayakawa came to America, where he began acting for the screen. The finish of his acting and his fine photograph with those of leading directors. He became widely known through his work in 'The Sheik,' in which he appeared with John Ward, 'The Typhoon,' 'The Bottle Imp,' and other pictures continued his success and stumped him one of the best artists of his class.

"Somewhat more than a year ago, Haworth closed a contract with Robertson-Cole for the release of Hayakawa pictures. Officials of this producing company have carefully studied the work of the famous star. Regarding it one of them said recently: 'I consider Hayakawa's personality one of the strongest of the present day screen artist. He should be given parts which will help him to assert himself vigorously. By this I mean, he should either be a hero of an especially strenuous type or he should be alowed parts which border on the heavy.

"Beginning his Robertson-Cole career by a remarkable series in 'Bonds of Honor,' Hayakawa continued in 'A Heart in Pawn,' 'The Conquered,' 'The Dragon,' and 'The Grey Horizon.' In 'The Big Man' he gave a character portrayal, which has earned comment throughout the entire country, and in 'The Beggar Prince,' a fantastic picture of great beauty.

"Comedyart" Release Soon

Pre-view Showing of 2000 Feet Held; To Be Released March 28

T he first "Comedyart" release of the newly formed Special Pictures Corporation has been edited, cut and titled and is ready for release on March 28. A pre-view showing of the first 2000 feet reel, which includes comedy, novelty, and scenic features, was given this week to representatives of the motion picture press in Los Angeles. The reel includes a 1400 foot comedy, "Uncanny Feet," a 400 foot scenic, "God's Country," and a novelty of 200 feet "Memorial." "Uncanny Feet" is a decided novelty in scenic comedies. Not a single face is shown until the end of the picture, and there is not one subtitle in the entire 1400 feet. Director Ward Lassalle has told the entire story simply by the use of the silent extenuation. It is full of laughs, and has a surprise ending that gives the spectator a tremendous wallop.

"God's Country" colored by the Technicolor process shows Zion Canyon, Utah, which has been described as being superior in scenic beauty to the Grand Canyon of Arizona. The scenic contains some of the most picturesque mountain and canyon scenery that has ever been photographed on the silver sheet.

The "Memories" film of the March 28 issue pictures the barroom of the "Good Old Days?" with the bow making merry over the film, and having his way with the reel as he de-alcoholizes into an ice cube reader.
Radin Pictures Enters State Rights Field

One of the new companies to make its appearance in the independent market is the Radin Pictures, which the Radin organization has bowed to the States rights buyers of the country under the guidance of Malchus Radin, president and general manager of Tippl Pictures, Inc. This announcement does not mean that Malchus has deserted the Tippl organization. He still continues as its active head and will operate the Radin Pictures company apart from the existing and independent separate and distinct company through the latter named company, so that the two will in no way conflict.

The first feature to be offered state rights buyers by Radin Pictures is a four-part drama of mystery featuring Frank Mayo, Ben Alexander and Claire McDevitt, entitled, "The Eyes of Man."

Good Characterizations Mark Baird Vehicle

In continuing on the attractive features of the new Leon Baird's series, "David, Daughter of Minnie," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation expresses the opinion that one of its strongest points is the character representations contributed by the finest cast ever selected to support Miss Baird. With Miss Baird playing a part of a star, known to picture players generally as one of the celebrities who do not seek to monopolize all the glory of a production, such distinguished actors as Burr Mc- Kown, Hugh Thompson, Alexander Goden and Ruby Hoffman found opportunities galore to win individual triumphs only scarcely less noteworthy than Miss Baird's "Cynthia-of-the-Minnie."

"Flying A" Special is under Production

"The House of Toys," a society drama, is the "Flying A" special now under production at the Santa Barbara studio of the American Film Company by F. "The Lonely Bee," is the technical director.

"Aphrodite" Star in Film

Dorothy Dalton Starts on "This Man—This Woman," Hopwood Play

Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get," a Paramount-Artcraft picture

AFTER a vacation of two weeks Dorothy Dalton has commenced work again at the Fifty-sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. She is still occupied with the stage production of "Aphrodite," which keeps her busy nights and matinee days. The title of the picture is "This Man—This Woman" by Avery Hopwood.

"This Woman—This Man" was produced in 1908 with Carlotta Nill- son in the leading role. It is one of the first plays written by Avery Hopwood, author of the "Oklahoma Diggers," which is making such a big success in New York at present. He also wrote "Letty" and "body's Widow" and collaborated with Mary Roberts Rinehart on "Seven Days."

Miss Dalon and Harley Knobes, who will direct, are enthusiastic about the story. The adaptation for the screen was done by Mrs. Joy- ley who was associated with Mr. Knobes in producing "Little Women." Mr. Knobes regards the story as one of the most popular in the play and says it is impossible to fathom until the very last few feet of film. So the picture will enable the patrons, who have killed John Weston that United is going to back up exhibitors in offering a large money prize to any one who can prove that the picture was completed in the story.

"Fatty" is Coming in Features

In response to the insistent demands of exhibitors, who for a long time have been asking for them to appear in feature pictures, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle has just signed a three-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear hurkster in all five-reel feature comedy productions as a Paramount-Arbaclke star.

Mr. Arbuckle’s new contract not only will bring him into five-reel comedy features, but adds another to the list of Paramount-Arbaclke stars. In the past Mr. Arbuckle has appeared for himself, under the name of the Comique Film Corporation, of which Joseph M. Schenck is president and general manager.

Mr. Arbuckle has just returned to Los Angeles, after having been in conference with the officials of the company. Mr. Schenck, and representative of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. The upshot of these conferences was the present contract for three years, during which time he will devote his screen activities exclusively to five-reel feature comedies.

Arbuckle’s departure from short-reel comedies into feature work marks one of the most interesting developments of recent years. During the last two seasons Arbuckle’s popularity has increased greatly. Indeed, the fat comedian is said to have become such a box-office attraction that an increasingly large number of exhibitors have advertised the Arbuckle comedies as features. This tendency placed the exhibitors in the position of paying for feature productions and then being obliged to bury their fortunes under heavy advertising of the two-reel Arbuckle comedies. An investigation growing out of this situation was given recently on Broadway when the four biggest Broadway movie pictures were played by the Paramount-Arbaclke comedies, “The Garage,” for a week, and advertised it over their feature productions.

The future will begin work at once in the Lasky studio at Hollywood. Several well-known stories, most of which are adapted to the screen, are being considered, and preparations are being made to give each of these a launch for such a liveliness of production that will make them unique in film comedies. Because of the great care and attention given to the productions of Paramount-Arbaclke comedies, only three of these two-reel subjects have been released since September. These are “Back Stage,” “The Haysed” and “The Garage.” Arbuckle’s first picture for Paramount was “The Butcher Boy.” Then followed “A Reckless Romance,” “The Wedding Night,” “Gent West,” “Fatty at the Island,” “A Country Here,” “The Rough House,” “Oh, Doctor,” “Moonshine,” “The Bell Boy,” and others.

Company’s Paper to Be Placed Throughout Many States

The Dominion Picture News

United Plans Poster Campaign

One of the most extensive, elaborate and ambitious poster advertising campaigns ever put over by any motion picture organization is about to be launched by the United Picture Productions Corporation, according to announcement of that company. Contracts have just been signed with the Poster Display Company by which United paper will be posted in all the localities served by the territories covered by the organization’s twenty-four branch offices, including such cities as Boston, Montreal, Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dallas, Texas; Denver, Colo.; Detroit, Mich.; Kansas City, Mo.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Haven, Con.; New Orleans, La.; New York, N. Y.; Omaha, Neb.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; St. Paul, Minn.; Utah; San Francisco, Calif.; Seattle, Wash., and Washington, D. C.

Because of the great scarcity of stands, it is quite possible that no other organization will be able to inaugurate and put over such a campaign. It was through the foresight of President J. A. Berst and the executive arrangements were made whereby the signing of the poster advertising contracts was secured.

For some time United officials have been preparing and planning to give all exhibitors who book United pictures the benefit of a most complete exploitation campaign. The signing of the contracts for the use of many thousands of "stands" throughout the country is one of the results of this planning which is to be part of United’s national advertising and publicity campaign designed to be carried out for the direct benefit of all picture houses in the territories which is served by the United organization.

The unusually large contract covers a period of twenty-four years. During each of these months, various sized posters will be posted with twenty-four sheets predominating. The contract of course calls for frequent changing of paper and is planned to put on the boards all over the United States some of the finest paper ever posted. Special artists are now at work on the first of the designs for the posters. The lithographic will be done by one of the foremost concerns in the business and it is expected that the completed product will be of a kind of paper that “talks right out from the boards” for every exhibitor fortunate enough to get it. United Picture Exchange service.

President J. A. Berst and his associates believe that by talking directly to the public by means of billboards, newspapers and other media that comes directly before the eyes of the theatre goers, they can best be of real help to the exhibitors. The “fan” is the ultimate consumer and to help the exhibitor interest the “fan” and get him to patronize his theatre is what the up-to-date motion picture theatre manager wants and most appreciates. It is the reason the United Picture Corporation has signed contracts running into what is probably the largest amount ever spent by a motion picture concern for poster advertising.

The first Consignment of paper under this contract will be on the way within the very near future. From them on for the next twelve months, United features will be advertised in every part of the country. The territory surrounding each of the twenty-four branch exchanges will be thoroughly covered — the city itself and downtown business and theatre districts. In fact all of the territory served by each branch office will be covered, and each theatre served by United in each and every territory will be benefited by this comprehensive advertising campaign.

It is expected that President Berst will have other announcements regarding the exploitation and advertising plans of United within a short time.

Three Large Circuits Book Realarl Films

The ranks of big circuits booking Realarl’s specials was swollen this week with the addition of Rurick Fuikelsin, the dominant Twin City exhibitors, Jensen and Von Gebrande, to the best of the two most important local circuits and Poli’s chain of theatres in New England. "The Luck of the Irish," the Allan Dwan production, and "The Mayor of Sunny Yellow Room," an Emilie Chautard production, are the two features that have been booked.

Cartoon Creator Signs Up with F. P. Lasky

"Pat" Sullivan, creator of "Felix, the Cat," and other animated comics, has signed a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to make cartoons for the Paramount Magazine, which his comics are to appear in. Lasky’s cat, Felix, is one of the best known characters of the motion picture world and his success is such that his name is known throughout the world. His recent cartoon of "Felix" will be released in the Paramount Magazine of March 28.

Educational Acquires Stereoscopic Films

A few weeks ago an announcement appeared wherein Johnson & Hopkins Co., had completed negotiations that a series of stereoscopic pictures, the output of Earl Emijay’s new stereoscopic camera, would soon be put on the market. Within a week E. W. Hammonds, vice-president of the Educational Films, had completed negotiations for the exclusive distribution rights on these subjects, it is stated. The contract provides for the weekly release of 500 ft. for the next year.

The Educational releases will embrace a great array of novels and humorous subjects, it is reported. The action of this new series is said to be depicted twenty-four times as slowly as in real life, and this fact is expected to assure an immediate response on the part of all theatre-goers.

Success Greets Latest Alice Joyce Release

Following its feature run at the Broadway Theatre in New York, the Vitagraph super-feature, "The Sporting Duchess," of which Alice Joyce Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, is making good headway from a booking standpoint.

The specialties "The Sporting Duchess" has been booked to succeed Vitagraph’s other current feature, "The Fortune Hunter" of which Alice Joyce was an important part. A notable fact relating to "The Sporting Duchess" is that an unusually large number of chain theatres have booked it.

To Tie-Up Picture With Old Comedy Revival

"Those were the happy days," say the theatrical producers who are reviving the "Floradora" of two decades ago and cashing in on that sentiment which invariably secures patronage to a company from the unforgettable yesteryear. And the ever-cling exploitation men, who arc never too busy to exploit publicity value of Charles Ray’s forthcoming First National production, "The Merry Widow," are planning to tie up the playplot with the renewed interest in "Floradora."
Paramount-Artcraft Releases Two Comedies

Robert Warwick’s "Jack Straw" and Dorothy Gish in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" are the Paramount-Artcraft feature releases for March 14. Both the comedies, the first named being an adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham’s stage play, in which John Drew starred with great success, and the Gish picture being from an original story by Helen G. Smith.

As adapted by Olga Printzials, the central figure of "Jack Straw" is a man who has fallen in love with one of his customers, the pretty daughter of a hard-working clerk and a mother with social ambitions. As Mr. Warwick’s leading woman, Carroll McComas, erstwhile stage favorite, was chosen, this being her first appearance in pictures in several years.

Ralph Graves is Miss Gish’s leading man, and the support includes such well-known players as Adolphe Lestina, Charles Gerrard, Kate Bruce, Raymond Cannon, Rhea Haines, and "Dangers" Pulls Well at the Strand

The Strand Theatre, New York, is proving the picture "Dangerous Days" produced by Goldwyn as an Eminent Authors Picture and a Reginald Barker production. This is the second Eminent Authors Picture shown at the Strand in two weeks; the first one being Leroy Scott’s "Partners of the Night." "Dangerous Days" is regarded as one of the finest pictures that has been brought to the screen this year and it is said to be proving a great box office attraction at the Strand. Mary Roberts Rinehart’s original story is evident both in the adaptation of the story and the subtitles, all of which she wrote herself.

"Gilmore Will Star in "Isle of Destiny"

The first of the new series of Character Pictures will be "Isle of Destiny," from the popular work of Mark Twain. Paul Gilmore, well known stage star, who was recently signed by Character Pictures, will be featured in the production which will be his first vehicle for the company.

Advertising Campaign Planned; Hodkinson Issues Statement

"Sex" Features Louise Glaum

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has distributed the J. Parker Read, Jr., productions under the selective system of distribution. Each picture has received the attention of specialists. Each one has been kept free and clear of other pictures and handled as if it were the only picture to which the organization was devoting its attention. "Sex," now in its turn receives such promotion and management. The picture is not available except in its most restricted form as of April 11. It is protected against such rash showings or imperfect exploitation by being turned over only to such first runs as guarantee it exclusive and liberal showmanship of the highest grade of advertising of the most expensive character. Each pre-release showman who gives it such treatment receives an ample period of protection.

Mayflower Aids in Drive

Makes Special Effort to Advance Its Product Released by Realart

What is believed to be a precedent in motion picture exploitation has recently been established by the Mayflower Photographic Corporation for the promotion of pictures presented by Mayflower through the Realart Pictures Corporation. Under the direction of John W. McKay, general manager of distribution, Mayflower has launched an extensive exploitation campaign as a result of which exhibitors showing the Mayflower product will be afforded the personal services of a corps of exploitation experts. "This is believed to be the first time an organization devoting itself exclusively to production has taken such vigorous steps toward assisting exhibitors to promote its product," says the Mayflower Corporation.

Manager McKay is now getting his staff of exploitation men into the field and it is expected that within a few days, Mayflower will have at least twelve publicity representatives co-operating with exhibitors in all parts of the country. Realart will lend every possible cooperation in carrying out the plan, in order to stimulate box office activity all along the line, it is stated.

McKay’s men will work in conjunction with Realart’s exchange managers, covering all key cities and contiguous territory with elaborate exploitation drives. It is asserted that each exhibitor will be favored with individual attention and campaigns especially suited to his particular requirements will be outlined and put into effect through co-operative work between the exhibitor and the exploitation men working that particular territory.

At present, Manager McKay’s forces will concentrate on Allan Dwan’s "Lucky of the Irish," being handled through Realart, and Emilie Chautard’s "Mystery of the Yellow Room," also under the Realart banner.
O. Henry Title Is Changed
Vitagraph Names Latest Corinne Griffith Feature "Garter Girl"

By the kick of her foot while sailing over the heads of an audience, Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph star, the other day changed the name of her newest picture. The technical production of the picture was under the supervision of Mr. Henry O. Powell, who was present for the change. The picture was entitled "The Garter Girl" until Miss Griffith's foot and the4 hundred eyes of the upward gazing audience changed it. "The Garter Girl" is now its name, and "The Garter Girl" is likely to be the pseudonym of Miss Griffith for some time to come.

The star had aerial experience in the old Irving Place Theatre, at Irving Place and Fifteenth street, New York. She sailed in a little trapeze suspended from a slack wire from the stage to the first balcony, singing and gesturing and flipping her pretty feet. Millions of an audience, Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph star, the other day changed the name of her newest picture. The technical production of the picture was under the supervision of Mr. Henry O. Powell, who was present for the change. The picture was entitled "The Garter Girl" until Miss Griffith's foot and the upward gazing audience changed it. "The Garter Girl" is now its name, and "The Garter Girl" is likely to be the pseudonym of Miss Griffith for some time to come. The plot in itself is unusual, a product of the studio of a well-known author, Albert Payson Terhune. The thirty-piece of silver, which is the base of the story, is the only essential coin of those innumerable talents for which the Master was rewarded by the Indians. The historical relic, locked away in a cabinet by its owner, with the preparatory order of a Bishop to his young bride forbidding her to go near it, works havoc in an otherwise ideal home. Around this incident is built one of the most unique plots on the silverscreen. The plot is said to be quick, compact and convincing, and the heroine is carried through without any suspense or predication, which oaths to hold the spectators under tense excitement. Resort to a crystal cabinet brings mystery and humor into the story in generous proportion.

A strong cast, which includes Margaret Fisher, King Baggot, Lilian Leighton and Forrest Stan- dwood, lends support to the main force of Mr. Terhune's novel. George L. Cox directed the production. The American announces that it will be ready for distribution in a few weeks.

Where is the Producer, Exchange Man or Exhibitor who can tell before a picture is released whether it will be a big winner or not? We admit that our opinions were incorrect on "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN," for while we sincerely believed that it would go over big, we never dreamed that it would do what it has already done and is daily doing in all parts of the country, conclusive evidence that a beautiful love story lavishly produced is just as welcome to people as the blood and thunder dramas that are supposed to pull you out of your seat. At the Capitol Theatre, New York, "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" drew over 40,000 paid admissions in two days, breaking every record for that, the world's largest theatre. From the Kinsmen Theatre in Los Angeles comes this direct wire: "FORBIDDEN WOMAN" OPENED YESTERDAY TO ABSOLUTE CAPACITY. BUSINESS TOPPING RECEIPTS ON EYES OF YOUTH. INDICATIONS LOOK FOR ENTIRE WEEK'S SELL OUT. MISS YOUNG MORE POPULAR THAN EVER."

And here's a follow-up wire received by the Manager of the Blue Mouse Theatre in Baltimore from its personal representative in New York: "JUST SAW CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in 'THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN.' FOR SHEER BEAUTY SURPASSES ANYTHING I EVER SAW. SHOULD BE SENSATION AMONG FEMININE PATRONAGE" (Signed) B. L. Tolmas. With wire reports like this coming in daily from all sections of the country we must admit that our most sanguine expectations have been surpassed, so, we have quit guessing and will allow the PICTURE ITSELF to do all the talking. When a picture will pull over 40,000 paid admissions in two days we can't say anything more that will mean quite so much to you as that fact. All we urge you to do IS TO SEE "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" with your own eyes at your nearest Equity Franchise Holder's exchange and pass your own opinion.

Selznick Men Active At New York Convention

The Lewis J. Selznick organization was very much in evidence at the recent convention in Utica, N. Y., according to reports received from the convention city. Publicity and exploitation men from the Buffalo and New York offices were on hand, and are said to have demonstrated some excellent exploitation to the showmen.

Zane Keefe was the Selznick "mystery girl." Through a hookup with a Utica newspaper, a prize of $50 was offered to the women who could pick out and identify the star in the street. A convention number of the Selznick bulletin also advertised the exhibitors, and the Selznick booth attracted much attention.

Pritchard with Educational

Former Newspaper Man and Film "Vet" Made Publicity Director

A ANNOUNCEMENT is made that R. E. Pritchard, who for the past seven months has been director of advertising and publicity for the chain of some fifty theatres of the Allied Enterprises in Canada, has returned to New York to take a similar post with the Educational Films Corporation. He will direct the special exploitation determined upon by E. V. Hammond, vice-president and general manager, as the result of the vastly enlarged scope of operations of the company.

As news editor of the New Orleans Times, Mr. Pritchard established there the first daily and Sunday motion-picture department outside of four or more of the biggest cities of the country. The Sunday department eventually developed into an eight-page, full newspaper size section, the largest amount of space to ever be regularly devoted to the screen. In that capacity he developed advertising among scores of exhibitors who hitherto had never used newspaper space.

From this post he went to the Motion Picture News, where he established the Exhibitors Service Bureau, which he conducted until the time he resigned to go with the Alrons in Canada. In the later position he was able to suggest some new methods in theatre cooperation that brought excellent results. His experiences in Canada gave him an insight into conditions in North America generally that few men in the advertising and publicity field have been fortunate enough to gain.

Under the direction of Mr. Hammond, the department expects to work out a number of practical ideas for exhibitor cooperation that will enable the showman to get increased returns from the short subjects. His instructions are that each exhibitor is to be given the fullest possible individual attention and furnished every possible aid, no matter the trouble or expense.

Good Reports Received

on Jewel Feature

Reports received by Universal indicate that the big Universal-Jewel production-drama, "The Great Air Robbery," starring Ormer Locklear, is going over even greater than had been anticipated. The film is being booked for extended runs in the larger cities throughout the country, and is being handled by elaborate exploitation in practically every place it is booked.

Special Campaign Will Boost Pathé Picture

A special campaign of advertising and exploitation has been arranged by the Pate Exchange for the Leonce Perret production, "Lifting Shadows," in which Emilie Voehlein is starred. The billboards of New York and Brooklyn will be used as one feature of this campaign.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Three scenes from the Goldwyn production, "Trimmed with Red," with Madge Kennedy as star.

Strong Cast is Seen in "The Branding Iron"

A strong cast is among the features claimed for the Goldwyn picture, "The Branding Iron," Barbara Castleton, who plays the role of Joan Carver, has never had a part which gives a better opportunity for development. Playing opposite Miss Castleton is James Kirkwood. In the character of Pathe Carver, and the untutored forceful young rancher, he has a part which is perfectly adapted to his rugged personality.

Russel Simpson is cast in the role of John Carver, the dissolute, utterly degraded father of Joan. Charles Tucker and Albert Rosco are also included in the cast.

"Edgar" To Be Seen in Capitol Theatre

Closely following the enthusiastic reception given the first of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" comedies, which had its initial public showing in Los Angeles, comes the announcement that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has booked the show for the Capitol Theatre, New York. "Edgar and Teacher's Pet," as the opening episode is called, is scheduled for the opening of the New Year.

The second and third episodes have been completed and will be ready for distribution soon, but it is not announced at what intervals they will be shown at the Capitol. It is certain, however, that not many weeks will elapse before the presentation of the installments.

"The Sagebrusher" Is Proving a Success

Although the Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Sagebrusher," has been released but six or seven weeks, it is said to be not more than a dozen big cities in America at the present time that the pictures are not in circulation, and the announcement of the coming engagement of "The Sagebrusher." C. E. Silcock, the prominent Spokane showman who stirs the townspeople with a spectacular promotion campaign on Mr. Hampton's "Dubert Gold," last Fall, duplicated that drive on "The Sagebrusher," the attraction at his Casino Theatre last week, resulting in an engagement that reached the highest attendance mark set by the powerful Zane Grey picture.

Sales Policy Makes Good

Pathé Reports That "Selling the Salesman" Plan Stands Approved

THAT February, the shortest month of the year, has established a new high record for the business of Pathé Exchange, is taken as an emphatic indication that the policy of "selling the salesman" is the strong productive principle of scientific business getting. Paul Rutten, vice-president and general manager points to February as the unanimous declaration of what may be expected during the rest of the year, with a perfectly functioning system of sales, and the strong personal element of achievement so well fostered by Em- her R. Pearson, director of exchanges, who points out that, though February consisted of only twenty-two working days, yet the total each branch exceeded any previous month, with the exception of November and January, and it released those two months records very close.

"Seven or eight of our branches had the biggest month's business in February, exceeding their highest previous month by goodly margins," says Mr. Pearson. "Quite a number of theatres throughout the United States were closed during February on account of the flu. Our reports indicate that very few theatres now remain closed on that account.

"The feature business continues to increase in the most gratifying manner. Many Men's Shoes," released Feb. 1st, is establishing a wonderful record, bookings thereon to date exceeding any previous Feature release by over 100 per cent.

"Serials also are showing splendid business increases, particularly "Daredevil Jack." has a volume of bookings to date far exceeding any previous serial. And most gratifying of all is the fact that not one single disappointment has been called to our attention, whereas we have been in receipt of hundreds of telegrams and letters."
Miller Returns From Northern Location

Charles Miller and his company arrived in New York city this week after a month's spent at Fort Henry, N. Y., during which time camera work on "The Law of The Yukon," his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, was practically completed.

Director Miller voiced a solitary but emphatic expression of praise for the winter that is passing. The blizzards which had worked suffering and great financial losses in various cities had been of inestimable value, Mr. Miller said, in obtaining the "frozen North" and Yukon effects which he desired.

Mr. Miller brought with him numerous still photographs of the production and of scenes connected with the production. These evoked the greatest enthusiasm from Real-的艺术 officials to whom they were shown.

"Buried Treasure" Next Marion Davies Story

Having completed her work in "The Restless Sex," at International Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, Marion Davies is preparing for her next Cosmopolitan Productions' starring vehicle. The story is "Buried Treasure," by F. Britton Austen which appeared in Hearst's Magazine for January. It is a romantic adventure tale of the Spanish Main brought up to date and it has an unusual twist to it. Miss Davies' role is it is said to be particularly charming and unusually well suited to that star's rare personality. Following a brief rest, Miss Davies will begin work on her new production.

Beg Your Pardon

In Motion Picture News of March 12th, page 251, there appeared an article by Lee Herz in connection with a story announcing his purchase of the Monopol Pictures Company. The caption under the picture stated that Mr. Herz was president of the Monopol Pictures Company. Mr. Herz, as everybody in the central west knows, is head of the Sibley Film Exchange, Chicago, and is not connected with the Monopol Pictures Company.

C. B. Price Co. Gets "His Pajama Girl"

C. B. Price Company, Inc., an active factor in the export and domestic market, has recently purchased "His Pajama Girl," featuring Billie Rhodes and at the present time is making elaborate preparations to exploit this feature production, in which the Clark-Cornelius Company are directly interested.

National Nearing 100 Per Cent

Chicago Reaches Quota with Other Cities Close Behind

FOLLOWING the release of its first subject, "Just a Wife," it is disclosed that National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president, is nearing the 100 per cent mark in all sections of the country. Chicago, it is made known, has reached its quota in National Picture Theatres. In the "Windy City territory" Just a Wife will play through a circuit of National franchise holders whose combined rentals, based upon the picture's total cost, will show a decided profit in that territory to the company's stockholders. This result has been achieved since November when National first offered its franchise to the Chicago exhibitors.

One hundred of the best theatres in Chicago and many more outside are National franchise holders. This membership includes every big chain theatre group in the city. The theatres of Lubliner and Trinz, Jones, Limick and Schaefer, Ascher Brothers, Kahle and Katz, and Andrew Karzas were among the first to join, and they were quickly followed by scores of individual theatre holders, who follow the lead of the big ones.

Dallas and Philadelphia offices are expected to reach their quota within two weeks. Although Chicago is the first territory to reach its quota in National, and Dallas and Philadelphia quotas reached, several other offices are close behind, says a statement from the national offices, and within the next four months at National's present rate of growth, every territory in the United States will have reached its quota.

Two of the most recent big chain theatre interests to enter National are the Saxe theatre, of Milwaukee, and the Swanson Theatre Circuit, of Salt Lake City. The Saxe Enterprises in addition has added theatre holdings, control the Loew Vaudville Franchise in Milwaukee, and Tom and John Saxe are looked upon as among the far-seeing exhibitors of the Middle West. Tom Saxe will be a member of the Board of Directors of National.

The Swanson Circuit is one of the largest and most important in the West, and Mr. Swanson himself is considered one of the liveliest showmen in the country. In cultivating the National motion picture fraternity, Mr. George Maine, vice-president of the Swanson Circuit, in a letter to Mr. Selznick, under date of February 28, wrote:

"We have watched very carefully every co-operative plan that has been offered by the producers. We have studied them carefully because we thought it was for our best interest. We have investigated the National co-operative plan, and we firmly believe that it will result in the exhibitors getting fair play. We also believe that we will get consistent high-class pictures at fair rentals and a square deal."

In commenting upon the rapid growth of National, an official of the company said: "The tremendous growth of National in such a short time is significant. It clearly indicates that exhibitors, both large and small, are wide-awake to the present day conditions. They have watched the growth of the film octopus—the entry of Wall Street money and Wall Street methods into the film industry and they are fully alive to the menace that confronts their property investment. These exhibitors know they must insure for themselves an adequate picture supply at rentals far below the ruinous prices that octopus methods are demanding and will demand. "They clearly realize that by co-operative purchase on a national basis they can not only insure an adequate picture supply, but by minimizing distribution overhead eliminating middlemen profits as well."

Arthur Ziehm Makes Reply

Goldwyn Sales Manager Believes Foreign Field No Cause for Fear

STATING that the present condition of the foreign market is not as bad as some critics would have it and that calamity howlers will have a depressing effect on the American producer, Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, recently issued a statement in regard to foreign market conditions. He said in part:

"It appears to me that recently there has been a tendency to paint the foreign market, as it concerns American producers, in unnecessarily dark colors. A number of film men, whose word carries weight in the trade, have subscribed to views that are likely to have a depressing effect on our producers and exporters, whereas a careful consideration of the situation should lead to more optimistic conclusions."

"As far as I can figure, well informed business men in other lines, quite as dependent upon European trade as the motion picture producers, believe there is nothing at all extraordinary about the money markets of the European countries in the first stages of recovery from the demoralizing effects of a devastating war. There is every reason for motion picture men to assume that in due time foreign exchange will be stabilized, just as it has been in the past. Why magnify a temporary situation into a permanent menace?"
Alleges An Attempt to Defraud

The Simplex factory during the past week was kept busy by the Simplex Notes.

Aside from the usual scene of battle and activity attending the building of the famous projector, the affairs of Simplex were busier than usual.

Following Simplex distributors: J. George Remberg of Minneapolis, H. A. Needham of Detroit, Leo Dwyer of Cincinnati and George Perkins of Canada, each of whom just happened to be in the factory on the day that Simplex was inspected by their visit both in the way of visiting the local theatres and in becoming aware of the new developments.

Another interested visitor was Mr. Weddige, president of the Grauman projection staff of Los Angeles who has been selected by Major Grierson to take full charge of the projection in the fifty odd theatres controlled by the Provincial Cinematograph Ltd., throughout the United States, Mexico.

Mr. Keller had booked passage on the S. S. “Cedric” which sustained some damage to her steering apparatus and if the accident necessitated making a new booking on the S. S. “Baltic” which sailed a few days earlier.

A member of Local 150 M. P. O. U. of Los Angeles and has held every office in that union and is now well to say that the Grauman theatre of Los Angeles has an international reputation for the manner in which the various producers and Major Grierson in making his recent cross-country visit while in the United States was more impressed with the manner of photo reproduction in the Grauman.

Mr. Keller was greatly interested by what he saw at the Simplex factory and spoke very highly of the Simplex Projectors with which he is very familiar.

This type of machine almost exclusively while in Los Angeles. Mr. Keller together with another fellow-projector, has perfected a device for a dissolving-change which he will incorporate in the protection system across the water.

Two of the distributing forces of the Simplex Company spent a very busy week in New York looking over the many new developments at the factory and incidentally picking up a few valuable points on Simplex exploitation.

Mr. Bert Weddige, president of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, and Mr. Max Rubin, his assistant, are the two in question. Mr. Weddige, while at the Michigan offices spent the very optimistically of the future Simplex business in his territory and arranged his intension of going into large length immediately and also arrange for the issuance of a monthly house organ with which to reach every exhibitor in his territory.

Since the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company has taken over the distribution of Simplex, the Michigan territory has rapidly been “Simplexized” and much of this success is due to the popular methods employed by “Square-Deal Weddige,” as he is familiarly known and his energetic assistant, Rubin.
First Issue of "Illiterate Digest" Ready
Following the announcement of the screening of Will Rogers’ Illiterate Digest by the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Joe Brandt, eastern representative of this company, received from the producers favorable notices from trade exhibitors regarding the release of this novelty. It is understood that the first issue is ready for release and that the second and third are now being filmed. The new Kohn reel will be pre-release showing at the California Theatre in Los Angeles. According to a statement issued by Brandt, "The Illiterate Digest" will be marketed on the state rights plan.

Trade Showing of "Love Without Question"
Reports have been made by the New York offices of Jans Pictures Inc., that a special trade showing will be given at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, Md., shortly for their first release of the Olive Tell series "Love Without Question," an adaptation of the book "The Abandoned Room" by C. Wadsworth Camp. Mr. Jans is said to have made arrangements for the trial showing in answer to a popular demand from the exchange men in Maryland and vicinity, and according to reports the affair will be well attended. Many notables, it is said, will be present as invitations to the city officials and other prominent politicians have been sent and favorable replies received.

Jack Cohn Sees Demand for Short Subjects
The addresses made by prominent speakers at the recent convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York in Utica were indicative of a popular demand in the line of short subjects and comedy reels, according to Jack Cohn, producer of Hall Room Boys Comedies, who attended the convention.

"The great demand at this time from what was gleaned from the convention speeches," said Mr. Cohn, "is for clean, wholesome comedies with a minimum of offensive slapstick and a maximum of genuine humor, portrayed by skilled actors and actresses."

"Lost City" Prints Arrive
Negative and Sample Prints for Final Episodes Ready for Buyers

ORD comes from the Warner Brothers, who are rapidly disposing of the territorial distribution rights of Selig’s wild annual serial, "The Lost City," that the negatives and sample prints of the final episodes have arrived from California and are ready for the state right buyers.

After a private screening of the last three episodes, those present were very much enthralled, and the consensus of opinion was that the last three episodes were even greater than the first three. Harry Warner, in commenting on the serial, had the following to say, "I believe I can honestly say without fear of contradiction that 'The Lost City' is without question the greatest ever produced and will prove the greatest box-office attraction in serial history. Never before has a serial production offered such thrilling situations and such sensational climaxes at the end of each episode."

"Already reports are coming in from the exchanges who have the various territorial distribution rights that all pre-release booking records have been broken. Many of the largest first-run theatres throughout the country that have never before offered a serial as an attraction have booked 'The Lost City,' and, judging from the record-breaking business done at the premiere showing at the Orpheum Theatre in Cleveland, where each episode will be shown for seven days, the serial will establish an attendance record for others to try and equal."

"To assist in the exploitation, circus methods have been followed. Every sheet of paper has a wild animal in tense situation on it. In addition to the paper, circus dodgers, banners, cuts, novelties, etc., there is an advance reel of three hundred and fifty feet showing sensational scenes taken from the early episodes, which will surely start the audience talking."

The Melby Film Corporation of Chicago, owners of "A Parable of Carmen," starring Charlie Chaplin for the State of Illinois, has lost the services of Neely Edwards, formerly of Hal Roos Comedies. The facts in the case are, according to Mr. Cohn, upon the dissolution of the Chaplin and Edwards, ownership of the picture was divided equally. Edwards will continue Belen Production to Be Ready in a Month
The final cutting, editing and titling of "One Man in a Million," the latest George Belen production, which is to be released under the title "Midnight Gambols," was done at the Wadsworth Studios under the personal supervision of Mr. Belen, who will direct the music and be in charge of the leading role in his next达momina. It is estimated by Mr. Leder and Mr. Belen that the picture will be ready in thirty days for a road show tour with the author-star-director personally accompanying the tour.

George Belen, Jr., a youngster of less than five years, has an appeal of his own which will be a feature of the picture, while Helen Jerome Eddy plays the leading feminine role.

Price Issues Indian Reels

One-Rel Dramas Depicting Indian Life to Be Shown at the Broadway

The fifteen "Indian Dramas," released by C. B. Price Co., Inc., are to be shown at the Broadway theater, New York, next week, beginning Monday, March 22. Each of these one-reel dramas will be programmed for fifteen consecutive weeks. It is time since the Indian drama, so artfully portrayed and historically correct, has been produced on the screen. All the participants in the casting are indigenous, so to speak, to the territories where the incidents which are portrayed. The Indian Princess, Mona Darkfeather, of the Pueblo tribe of Indians, excites the female lead.

All of these Indian dramas have a peculiar significance at this time, showing the origins of this country in their native state, giving a clear and authentic idea of the full meaning of the dramatic incidents which bring before the present generation things about which it has probably heard, but has never seen visualized. It is entirely upon its merits and presents to the newly arrived comers to this country what the Indian meant in the colonization and growth of the land of the free and the home of the brave. They are the re-enactment of a fast dying race.

The Ritchey Lithograph Company has produced a line of paper for these productions that is the result of lithographic art that greatly enhances their attractiveness.

The Broadway presentation is merely a forerunner of similar offerings in the best theatres throughout the country," remarked Mr. Price. "We are now making arrangements for pre-run showings in the leading theatres in all the film centers. These pictures are not a throw-back to those which were familiar to the screen years ago, but have been produced in a style that they form a welcome part of any program. The direction and the subjects are faithful in every detail and the stories are so prepared that they offer entertainment of a calibre that would be worthy of many five-reel productions."

New Serial Books Quickly

Benny Leonard in "The Evil Eye" Pleases at First Trade Showing

Following the trade showing on Thursday in New York City, of "The Evil Eye" by Roy L. McCardell, the new Hallmark serial starring Benny Leonard, there was a rush to cover on booklets by exhibitors who had put off signing their contracts until they had seen the first three episodes.

At the New York Exchange of Hallmark, Phil. E. Meyer, the branch manager, and his salesmen were kept busy by exhibitors who were anxious to get their dates in ahead of their competitors.

"On the face of contracts in hand," said Mr. Meyer, it appears that all previous records for booking a serial will be smashed beyond recollection, not alone for the number of play dates given, but for the prices paid. One contract calls for a three days run at $3250, which I believe establishes a new record for all serials in the market.

"The unusual interest in this serial "The Evil Eye," I attribute to the wonderful popularity of the star, Benny Leonard, who stands so high in the esteem of the American public, not only on account of his wonderful process with his fist, but on account of his clean record, both in and out of the prize ring."

Another reason attributed to this demand for booking "The Evil Eye" is that the story by Roy L. McCardell is so completely accounted the accounts of the notorious gang that has started an entire world by their sensational and daring operations in the great Wall street head theft plots, which makes "The Evil Eye" not only a thriller of the first water, but probably the most timely and absorbing story ever told in picture form."

A NOther ardent believer in the future of the independent market arrived in New York last week in the person of D. N. Townsend, general sales manager for the Art-Of-Graph Film Company of Denver, whose two latest feature productions, "Wolves of the Street" and "The Desert Scorpion," are being distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation.

While in New York Mr. Townsend paused long enough to relate some of the reasons which prompt his belief in the independent field.

"There is no other way to get to the exhibitor fairly and squarely and with a minimum of intricate detail and expense, through the independent exchange plan," declared Mr. Townsend.

"Art-Of-Graph will produce at least six pictures this year, and it will possibly be eight. All of these will be of the same high grade of workmanship and artistry that has characterized our other subjects, and all of them will be released to the independent market."

Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow Film announced that territorial rights for both "Wolves of the Street" and "The Desert Scorpion" were selling rapidly, and that a large share of the country had already been disposed of, although only a few days have elapsed since the premiere announcement of the two feature pictures. Townsend is a story of Wall Street and the open spaces of Colorado, and the first public showing was by Robert Ames Bennett.

Plans to Exploit "Torchy" Producer Announces Separate Department to Advertise Comedies

"We will have our own exploitation department to assist exhibitors in putting these comedies across and advertising them to the public," announces Charlie Burr, producer of the "Torchy" comedies.

"As no expense is being spared in making these comedies clean and high-class in every respect, likewise we will spare no expense to have them properly exploited after they have been sold to the distributor. We believe that the exploitation angles planned for the "Torchy" series will overshadow anything that has ever been done before for short subjects.

"As soon as distribution details are completed a photoplay edition of the first book will be off the press. This book will be profusely illustrated with scenes from the film. As rapidly as each of the pictures is completed another of the "Torchy" books will be issued with the photoplay illustrations, announces Mr. Burr.

"Already there are seven volumes of the series in preparation, and each of these stories themselves have been appearing for eleven years in the best known newspapers throughout the country. At the present time these current stories are appearing alternate weeks in 23 newspapers in the United States and Canada. The first five features handling "Sewell Ford's" stories will increase the number to 100 or more newspapers to coincide with the release date of the comedies. Master Films, Inc., will have its own exploitation department and advertise these stories as being syndicated. The publicity and cooperation work will be handled in such a way that these comedies may be run with drawing cards, wherever they are shown."

Kohn Will Do Exploitation
Will Assist State Rights Buyers

STATE rights buyers handling short features produced by the Marion H. Kohn Productions will receive unlimited help in selling, distributing and exploiting the films, according to a promise made by Mr. Kohn. This is the promise that Marion H. Kohn of 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, and New York, will make to the state right buyers who buy his pictures.

I propose to go the limit with the state rights buyer with these pictures," Mr. Kohn said. "I am a state rights man myself and I know that the short subject release needs just as much care in salesmanship as the feature.

Mr. Kohn, star of "Clown of the Sea," is in New York this week to make arrangements for the exploitation of his films. He is a versatile producer, serving as creative executive as well as producer and director. His films are made in the East and West Indies, and in the United States. Inter-Ocean Begins Drive
Will Show Producer Importance of a Specialized Export House

The first important step in the development of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's plans for educating the American motion picture producer in general and the independent producer in particular to the value of placing their productions in the hands of a reputable export house specializing in the distribution of American films in foreign territories, got underway this week in the first of a series of advertisements which are to be carried in American trade journals throughout the coming year.

This is the line with its policy recently made public through the trade press, of inaugurating an extensive and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the American motion picture export company, and to emphasize the advantage to be derived from the producer's association with such an organization. It is wholly apart from Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's regular advertising and publicity campaign which is now being conducted in the various foreign trade mediums.

This is declared to be the first time in the history of the motion picture industry that a large American film exporting concern has attempted such a campaign in the American trade press. That it will be instrumental in producing the desired results both to the American producer and to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is a conclusion which Inter-Ocean officials have no hesitancy in affirming.

The campaign will be conducted by A.L. Felman, who will also continue in charge of advertising and publicity in foreign trade mediums.

Smith Likes Film Making
New Metro Author Explains How He Evolved Into a Playwright

W. INCHELL SMITH, who recently joined Metro's staff of authors at its studios in Hollywood, and who is now personally supervising the picturization of "The New Henrietta," the comedy which he and Victor Mapes adapted from a play by Bronson Howard, is well pleased with life at the studio.

Mr. Smith was first an actor and then a producer. He never had any newspaper experience and states that he sometimes "feels that the less a man knows about the mechanics of literary work, the better he is equipped for dramatic writing. A man who writes phrases as people speak them, and not as the copy books construe them, is the man who gets the best dialogue."

Mr. Smith states that it was merely by accident that he obtained a chance to write a play. "The man who was to dramatize a story which I was to produce backed out at the last minute," he said.

Lesser Company Seeks Deep Water Locale

In order to obtain the necessary deep water scenes for its forthcoming production, Annette Kellerman and her entire company have gone to San Francisco on a two-weeks' shoot. Off the coast, several miles were necessary to transport the aggregation of picture players from Los Angeles to San Francisco. H. S. Calbou, production manager for Sol Lesser, headed the expedition.

More than $250,000 is being spent on this new Kellerman production. For the interiors many of the most elaborate sets ever conceived at the Branton studio were built, while hundreds of players were used for the water scenes.

Kohn Enthusiastic Over Short Subject Films

One of the most enthusiastic producers on the West Coast is Marion H. Kohn, head of the short-subject concern bearing his name. The three Kohn productions made at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America in Hollywood, Calif., are the first three links, declares Mr. Kohn, of a "mighty chain" of short-subject releases which, if market conditions remain favorable, will be lengthened from time to time.

Commonwealth Film to Handle Jans Picture

Announcement is made by President Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, that they have secured the rights for the state of New York from Jans Pictures, Inc., for the initial release of the Olive Tell series, "Love Without Question," adapted from the book, "The Abandoned Room," by C. In fact Mr. Hugo is already using the medium to supplement and illustrate the talks which he gives before chambers of commerce and other bodies, in an effort to lessen the number of automobile accidents which constitute a great fire hazard.

Many of other New York State's leading newspapers are also utilizing motion pictures in their work, such as the New York Times, which prints a weekly column of local motion pictures.

Ottawa Teachers Urged a School Theatre

The official report of the recent convention of the School Teachers' Institute of Ottawa, Ontario, contains a strong recommendation for the establishment of a school theatre.

CHRISTIE

Further expansion of the Christie Film Corp.'s known yesterday when A. E. Christie, President and Supervising Director, completed a deal with the city of Los Angeles for the property adjoining the Hollywood Studios where additional stages will be built. The new site is on Sunset Avenue and now gives the Christie Company more than a block of land for its present site. In addition, negotiations are under way by the Christie brothers for the purchase of twelve acres near the present site.

Harry Edwards, who since returning from the navy has served as assistant to A. E. Christie, has been promoted to the office of Production Manager of the Christie Film Company. Edwards formerly played in Christie Comedies prior to his entrance in the navy, he being leading man at that time for Betty Compson.

Activities at the Christie plant are now centered about the filming of the first Cleo Sides subject for Selnick International which is being directed by Al Christie and Scott Sild- ney. Exterior scenes for this story, "The Outside," which will be directed by Fred Herzzo, are being filmed in Sunland, California. The cast includes Cleo Sides, Stella Whitten, Codu Kenney, Bert Woodruff, Lydia Yermaans, Titus, J. P. Lockney and others.

Metros

The big Metro plant is the quietest it has been for many months, but next week will see renewed activity for by that time everything will be in readiness for six producing units to begin active production.

The first of the new series to be started will be that of the Bert Lytell company in the filming of "The Temple of Dawn," with Dallas Fitzgerald as director. Probably the next will be the company making "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," with Viola Dana as star and Eugene Palette as her leading man.

Edward Dillon has come to the coast especially to direct this picture.

Other scripts now in readiness for the producing company are those for "The Outside," which will star Alice Lake and "Fine Feather," starring May Allison, but for these units no director has been selected.

"Hearts Are Trumps," the next Daisy Lane picture which will be produced by Ken Angian, will be an All Star cast and another All Star cast will make the first of the Wintell Smith productions, "The New Heiresses." Scripting is now being completed by June Mathis.

In report that John E. Luce is to leave Metro is denied by officials at the studio and plans are being made for this director to begin work shortly after the completion of editing "Old Lady of 31." The C. E. Shurtleff company producing "Burning Daylight," with Mitchell Lewis as star, is still at Truckee, California, making a number of the exteriors for this Shurtleff release. Practically all of the interior scenes were completed at the studio before the company went to the snow country and so an early completion of the film is expected.

This picture will have an unusual array of talent including several spectacular characters. One of particular interest is Scott Turner, the original "Cherokee Kid," of the Alaskan gold field country and probably the most famous gambler of the gold rush days.

Another character of interest is that taken by William V. Mong, who appears in the role of a dragoon and one attorney who's greatest enemy is boose.

SELZNICK

All four Selznick producing units are at work at the Brunton studios after a brief absence for exterior scenes. Owen Moore is working on "The Strange Son of the Door," and Eugene O'Brien, with his director, Robert Ellis, recently arrived from the East, has started work on "The Figurehead." John Llewellyn Mather is also at a Selznick picture. The cast selected to support O'Brien includes Anna Q. Nilsson, Arlo Guthrie, Bert Lytell, and Edna Lewis. The rumors and stories recently published that Edith Hallor is to return to the speaking stage are incorrect, at least for the present. Lawrence Weber, theatrical and motion picture producer, had stated recently that it had been impossible for him to induce Miss Hallor to leave Selznick organization and go to New York. However, it has been announced that he is planning a production of "A Beautiful Virgin," a production now under way for the speaking stage in New York. The film is intended for release being made for National Motion Pictures, the producer of "The Invisible Divorce," will have George Arliss, and Robert T. Mill as principals in addition to Walter McGrail and Leatrice Joy. This unit under the direction of Robert Mille has been filming exterior scenes in the California oil well section and have now returned to the studio to make interiors.

F. P. LASKY

One of the mammoth stages at Lasky Studio has been transferred into a large interior of an athletic club gymnasium for scenes in the Robert Smith adaptation of "The Family of the Buckle." The big event of the stage is the production of a twenty-minute serial. The story of the serial is the eternal triangle and the new phase of this story being that a friend of the husband, who has kept up the alimony to his divorced wife falls in love with her. The subject is a comedy, with a dramatic touch, with a heroine played by a top-ranking actress, and the supporting cast will be composed of comedians. The director is Jack Hasen, and the fill-in director will be Fred Niblo. Walking suit will be selected to fit the needs of each story, the series will be known as "Buddy Post" comedies. Walter DeLeon, who has played in a number of American productions, has been selected to play the leading lead in the series.

NATIONAL

The National Film Corporation of America, this week, has started filming the production of a series of two reel comedies which will feature "Buddy Post," a young giant measuring 6 feet 6 inches in height and weighing 325 lbs. Helen Howard, who has played in a number of American productions, has been selected to play the leading lead in the series.

INCE

With the first subject "Wheelbarrow Webster" starring Lloyd Hughes completed, work is to be started on the filming of "Home Spun Folks," short story at Ince Studio and according to announcement made this week "Home Spun Folks" will be released as a Thou. Ince special attraction. The story is by Julian Josephson, author of a number of Charles Ray stories and recent Macon-May comedy "Shakespeare Chasey." The scenes for "Home Spun Folks," are laid in a little country town, where one man controls all affairs. The changing of the cast of this production will make up the foundation for the story, which introduces romance and adventure. Director Fred Niblo is progressing rapidly in the filming of "The Jungle," adapted from the Marjorie Bennet Cooke story by Agnes Christine Bueston and starring Warner H. Comes. The plot of the story is the eternal triangle and the new phase of this story being that a friend of the husband, who has kept up the alimony to his divorced wife falls in love with her. The subject is a comedy, with a dramatic touch, with a heroine played by a top-ranking actress, and the supporting cast will be composed of comedians. The director is Jack Hasen, and the fill-in director will be Fred Niblo. Walking suit will be selected to fit the needs of each story, the series will be known as "Buddy Post" comedies. Walter DeLeon, who has played in a number of American productions, has been selected to play the leading lead in the series.

Batting averages will be started on Miss Glenn's productions on the speaking stage and has a nation wide reputation for his ability. The Broadway subject "Mr. McMie" by J. Parker Reid, Jr., under the direction of Roy H. Malcolm, is being serialized this week. This is an adaptation from the Frank Brownsey story of the same title. The picture will be directed by G. B. Arnold and features are Ida Lewis and Will and little Mary Jane Irving.

UNIVERSAL

The sudden departure of Tarkington Baker, who for the past several months has been head of the production manager Universal, has caused considerable surprise. Mr. Baker left for New York a week ago, following the issuance of a statement that he had tendered his resignation to President Carl Laemmle. Since he was last seen here it was imperative that he get back to New York without further delay. W. O. Howard, who has been assistant to Mr. Baker temporarily in charge of the Universal studios, and it is expected that he will assume the position of general manager will be announced within a short time.

The change in management has not affected producing policies and all production plans are going ahead on schedule. At the present time, there are several companies working at Universal City; two of these on serial, two on short western subjects, two on feature productions and one on a five reel comedy drama, in addition to the films that are now in charge of the editing department. Robert Anderson, who was recently engaged to direct a series of comedies for National, has left the studio to direct the filming of the first, which is "Monseigneur Cooper's" from scenario by Bertrand McCallum. Anderson has been associated with the studio for some time, having directed such films as "A Tokyo Scoundrel" starring Tsuru Aoki. The latter is being directed by Norman G. Foulis, with Joseph Cohn as leading man and other principals including Peggy Pearce, Florence Hart, and Fredric March.

Lyon and Morgan are now editing their first five reel comedy drama "Bulletproof" directed by Henry King. "Bulletproof" is a comedy with a serious side, and will be next shown by Universal who are scheduled to play the role of a popular serial of some length. The two stars of the play are universal favorites, and have been kept busy on the film for some time. Their latest offering should be a success when presented.

The new plant will enable ProducerRoach to realize many of his ambitions with respect to comedy and consideration of improvement in production and general atmospheric condition of all scenes will be noted in the forthcoming subjects made at the new plant. For some time it has been impossible for the company to make a number of their scenes in the City Studios, and these scenes will be in early issues of the Harold Lloyd comedies as well as those featuring HarryPollard and BeatriceLaPlante.

The Douglas Fairbanks Company is home from spending three weeks in the wilds of Arizona, north of Winslow, where they made the western scenes for the coming Fairbanks' production, which has been given the permanent title of "The Mollycoddle." Those who accepted the producer's attractive offer to the wild location 175 miles from a railroad were Ruth Renick, Wallace Beery and Betty Compson whose brother director, PaulBurns, Adele Farrington, together with scenario writer Tom Geraghty and cameraman WilliamEmpey and HarryThrope. In Mr. Fairbanks required a large number of technical men and the party included more than forty. Jesse D. Hampton has engaged William J. Williams was taken ill with influenza and after recovering sailed for Los Angeles, where the Calgermans this week brought the information that he was suffering from a relapse, and is now in a London hospital. When Capt. Williams left New York he expected to be married here with his bride by April 1st.

E. H. Emnick, owner of the Peerless Exchanges at SanFrancisco, C., is spending two weeks in Los Angeles supervising the work of this exchange handled by Harry Maclayte. Mr. Emnick was accompanied to Los Angeles by Mrs. Emnick, they visiting all theatres enroute by an auto trip. B. F. Rosenberg, who has been a branch manager at Salt Lake for two years, and the past two months has been serving in a like capacity at Denver, has been selected as manager of the Los Angeles Metro exchange to succeed Arthur B. Hicks, for ten years identified with the film trade as manager of exchanges or special representative, has tendered his resignation as manager of the Vitagraph, Los Angeles branch to accept the management of the photoplay and organ department of Sherman Clay and Company for the Northern California and Nevada territory. Mr. Hicks has served as manager of the General in all of their branches west of Omaha; opened the Select offices in SanFrancisco, and later served as manager of this exchange in San Francisco, and later served as manager of this exchange in San Francisco, Seattle, and Cincinnati. Clune’s Auditorium which has been one of the historical theatres of the film industry and is situated on the west side since its opening as a motion picture house more than five years ago, is to become the home of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, and will be used exclusively for concerts, as Wm. H. Clune has sold his property on the building to the Baptist Association of Los Angeles, to W. A. Clark, Jr.

This does not mean that Mr. Clune is leaving the film industry, for he still retains two other theatres, Clune Bros., Los Angeles and Clune’s Theatre at Santa Anna in addition to owning the Clune studio now occupied by the Douglas Fairbanks Company and conducting the Clune Artistic Lighting Company which furnishes light and power for the leading motion picture studios and on location.

However, the sale of the property is in the interests of both parties so far as Los Angeles is concerned, as Clune’s auditorium has heretofore served as a showcase where the public first saw a number of the biggest production pictures made in the west including “Mammie,” “Montana,” “Intolerance,” “The Eyes of the World,” “Hearts of the World,” “The Greatest Thing in Life,” and many other pictures being shot there by Mary Pickford’s “Polkanis.” But the Auditorium will not long be missed by the picture loving people of Los Angeles and the people of the film industry, as three other mammoth theatres are completed within the next eighteen months.

Clune, Mr. A. Portin, was full of stories and details of the successful lighting company and his members were all in agreement.

MAY KITSON, who did such good work in Selznick's production, "The Woman God Sent," has also completed her part in "The Scarlet Dragon," a Photoplay Library picture. Mrs. Kitson is now waiting for another star who wants a sympathetic "motherly mother."

Henry Mortimer, whose latest release is Realart's "The Fear Market," starring Alice Brady, is now turning his attention to the legitimate stage. He is appearing at the Punch and Judy in the play that opened Saturday night, entitled "Mask."

Glenn Anders, who showed us in "Civilian Clothes" just what a juvenile lead should be, is to trip the light fantastic in the same capacity in Victor Herbert's new musical comedy "Oni, Madam." Because of this, Mr. Anders is said to have been obliged to refuse a flattering offer from Selznick, and will be unable to give any time to the screen until stage rehearsals are completed.

Thurston Hall seems entirely human as well as slightly poetic. He is said to be in open revolt against the H. C. of clothing; and he declares that fans who expect to see him in a brand new suit in every scene will be sadly disappointed. He intends to let the new styles come in and go out without seeking even a speaking acquaintance with them during their brief existence, and he is going to stand by the expensive and well-fitting garments that his wardrobe includes at present so long as they are presentable.

Estelle Taylor, who is completing work on the Fox super-feature "When New York Sleeps," has been engaged to play the leading role in "Mildy's Dress," Edward Kienbock's sensational drama that was produced in the speaking stage two years ago.

Gladden James has completed his work in the leading role of "A Good Woman"...the Park Wideside production that was produced of the Talaladge studies.

"Charles Ray is lost," wizzes his P. A., who proceeds to explain that he simply disappeared from his happy home and devoted family, and chiefly from the Los Angeles studio. And the deserted ones admitted bitterly that it was all their fault. After Mr. Ray's contract with Thomas Ince expired, and he signed up with First National and Arthur S. Kaine, he demanded a long vacation, his first in eight years. So everybody took a hand in planning his vacation for him. Some one thought it was a fine time for him to look over a ton or so of manuscripts. Another thought he might go up to San Francisco and be interviewed a lot. Someone else thought he should visit N. Y. and wired friends there to expect him on a certain date. While they were planning, the star disappeared. Of course, he might have written an article to the world's whole but it's his, the P. A. feels assured. While Tom "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" can't begin without him, he says, and if he really wants to know, well add that perhaps Mr. Ray is waiting for his leading lady, who after completing her part opposite Mr. Ray in "Parrs Green," came to New York, and was here when he wired her to return for his first First National production. Who is she? A little, black hair lady, Agnes. Her name? Ann May.

Coburn's six reel special production "Beyond the Law" opened at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, on February 15th, and according to a report, has been smashing house records to smailliers at every performance. Dr. Dall is said to be the sole survivor of the most famous gang of bandits that ever spread terror through the West in those early days when the railroads were piercing the wildness in their slow progress to the Pacific.

The first serial to be handled by the Selznick Enterprises will be "The Whirlwind," which will be released by Republic Pictures, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director. The serial is in fifteen episodes and features Charles Bartenworth and John Arbuckle. Selznick Pictures Weekly will make its first appearance on Easter Sunday.

Several exteriors for "The Flapper," the new Olive Thomas production by Frances Marion, are being made at Lake Placid, N. Y., according to a statement from the Selznick offices this week. "The Flapper" company includes Alan Crossland, director, William P. Creit, Theodore Westman, Wm. J. Marcia Harris and Wm. Jos. Scully cameraman.

Ralph Ince and Zena Keefe have returned from what they claim was nearly the North Pole, where they have been scouting exteriors, and are working now at the Fort Lee Studios. Gladys Coburn is announced as the latest addition to the cast for this picture, the working title of which is "The Law Bringers." The story deals with the life of the Royal North-west Mounted Police, as well as native Indians and French-Canadians.

Robert Ellis, director, and Jack Abbott, assistant director, accompanied Eugene O'Brien to California a few days ago, when the Selznick star went West to make a picture on the Coast. "The Figurehead" is announced as the working title of the film. Delroy DeRemer was leading woman for Mr. O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money," completed at the Fort Lee Studios, just before the star caught the train for Calif.

Gloria Hope has the feminine lead in Owen Moore's third Selznick picture, "His Word of Honor," which is being made in Calif., under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. Zena Owen, who appeared with Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later," has the feminine lead in "The Gift Supreme." Tully Marshall, Leo Chany and Melbourne MacDowell are also in the cast.

Elaine Hammerstein has finished "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" and expects to take a short rest before starting her next feature.

WHAT most impress Motiograph users and why they continue to use Motiographs year after year are the perfect projection and lasting qualities of the machine.

Every user will tell you how wonderful the parts wear—they do not hesitate to say the gears never wear out, and other parts give the same corresponding wear.

With this kind of material and the superior workmanship insures satisfaction in service whenever used.

THE Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. of Chicago uses NINE (9) MOTIOGRAPHs in testing their films. These machines are run from morning until night, continually, day after day, year after year. They must give perfect definition of picture to insure them of the high grade prints they are noted for turning out.

This is surely proof of the quality in the Motiograph Machine, which you should take into consideration when buying your next Projector.

Rugged, Restful Simplicity Found in Pantheon

Toledo Theatre Boasts of Genuine Comfort in its Arrangements

It was not so many years ago that motion picture theatres were considered as having something lacking if their interiors were not frescoed and fur-bowed with hanging vines and flowing draperies on every wall. Perhaps it was as well that such elaborateness was considered proper since it was often necessary to use scenic effects to make up for what the picture lacked.

But since then, there have been many changes. An age of simplicity has gradually been exemplified with greater attention given to the effect of each part on the whole. It has been found possible to design theatres with a minimum of ornamentation without in any way sacrificing their attractiveness. In more cases than not, this metamorphosis has had the effect of working a decided improvement and of turning out a theatre with an atmosphere of genuine comfort.

Photographs of the Pantheon theatre of Toledo indicate that this house should be placed under the last named class.

The Pantheon is located on St. Clair Street on the site of the old Kaiserkof. It is 60 feet by 120 feet by inside measurement, and has a seating capacity of 1000.

The front of the theatre is without excess ornament, which gives it a becoming dignity. An ample marquee extends well over the sidewalk and covers both entrances. Lights on the under side of the marquee illuminate the sidewalk directly in front of the ticket office. Stanley frames have been placed on both sides of the theatre front and a plain but attractive electric sign over the door flashes the word Pantheon.

One of the accompanying illustrations shows the lobby as it appears when it is not being used for special features. It resembles more a lounging room in a club-house than the lobby of a theatre. This effect is created by the massive plaster-covered pillars and the heavy ribbed ceiling arches. At the extreme right will be noticed the brick fireplace with its mantel lights and other decorations. Another illustration shows the same lobby after decorators and artists have transformed it into an oriental lounging room and the effect secured with the few added articles demonstrates how the design of the lobby adapts itself to a wide variety of uses.

Before passing on and into the auditorium a few words should be said about the interior illumination of the Pantheon which is here evident for the first time. The artists worked at all times in conjunction with experts of the National X-Ray Lighting Company with a view to securing the exact degree of general illumination and percentage of reflection from ceilings and side walls. With architecture of this type a soft-toned lighting scheme is absolutely necessary in order that the sharp lines be not accentuated. It is probable that anyone viewing these photographs will agree that the architects and engineers were unusually successful in attaining their objective. It will be noticed that in the lobby the lights are hidden above the side moldings and the light is therefore reflected from the curved ceiling.

The lighting arrangements together with the delicate tints of the wall colorings, the lamp shades and hangings produce the restful and inviting atmosphere desired for.

Entrance to the auditorium proper is gained through doors on either side of the lounging room. The run-a-ways do not lead into the back of the auditorium but to a point about halfway down the length of the house. At the point of ingress lies the dividing line between the orchestra seats and the "balcony," although, strictly speaking, there is no balcony. As the photograph shows, there is but a slight slope to the first twelve rows of seats but after them comes the "cross-over" and from then on the slope grows steeper. This seating arrangement is ideal for a theatre of this size and layout since every seat in the house is a good seat with an unobstructed view of the screen. Besides improving the angle of view from the seats in the back of the auditorium this considerable slope makes it possible to have the lounging room and lobby occupy the space beneath it, thus economizing on all available space. The proscenium arch continues the general scheme of simplicity but nevertheless fits in well with the flat ceiling and rounded corners where ceiling and wall meet. The walls are broken up by a number of similar panels formed on the sides by double sets of columns and on top by an ornamental frieze. All the ornamental plaster in this part of the Pantheon has been carried out in the style of the Italian Renaissance period.

An ample sized stage, 45 x 18 feet, makes it possible to arrange special settings. Border lights and foot-lights have been installed to take care of special lighting effects. All lighting of the auditorium is produced by rows of lights with special reflectors arranged around in a trough on top of the side walls. This makes it necessary for the light to be reflected from the ceiling and is therefore entirely indirect, producing a soft light not at all tiresome to the eyes.

As is to be expected, the mechanical equipment is on a par with the remainder of the theatre. In the projection room there are two Simplex machines and spot-lights, a switchboard controlling all lights and lighting effects in the house as well as the proscenium curtains.

During the winter months the house is heated by a hot-water heating system which has proved satisfactory. A $25,000 organ, played in shifts by three musicians, furnishes the music. An orchestra will not ordinarily be used.

Messrs. M. M. and M. H. Stophlet who drew up the designs for the Pantheon, the contractors, and H. C. Horator, the manager, have been lured for the theatre which, to a certain extent, is a product of their combined creative and administrative geniuses.

Plans Prepared for Theatre in Canton

George Henry Dieringer, architect of Wheeling, West Va., is preparing plans and specifications for a new theatre building 50 x 100, to be constructed by the Architectural Building Co., in Canton, Ohio. The theatre will have all the necessary equipment for pictures and road shows. Offices and store rooms are to be placed over the theatre front.

Work on Jake Well's Colonial Already Under Way

Plans for Jake Wells' new Colonial theatre, to be erected upon the old site at Eighth and Broad streets, Richmond, Va., have been filed with the Building Inspector of that city and work has already begun on the excavations in the adjoining lot between the present Colonial and the Broadway theatre. The contractors do not think it necessary to close the present Colonial preparatory to tearing down the old building for about four or five weeks.

J. W. Atkinson & Co. have been awarded the contract for a cost plus basis and it is estimated that the new building will cost about $150,000. The building permit was asked for the Virginia Theatre Corporation, of which Jake Wells is president.

Monsoon Cooling System, Inc.
Room 769, 70 West 45th Street, New York
A Description of the Electrical Lay-Out in Allen's Winnipeg Theatre

By R. S. Chamberlain, of Mundy, Rowland & Co., Contractors

From an electrical standpoint this theatre compares very favorably with the most up-to-date theatres of any of the Eastern cities. The current, which enters the building underground, is supplied from two different sources and is so arranged that the operator can, by merely pressing a push-button, switch the load for the whole lighting or power on to the mains of either supply company.

There is a special switchboard room for the main switches, meters and main distributing panels. Both sets of mains are tapped, previous to entering the main switch, with a set of feeders feeding a double-throw switch for the emergency lighting.

The main light for the theatre proper, is supplied by a group of seven-light fixtures, under and over the balcony, a large center fixture hanging from the dome with concealed lights of white, amber, red, and blue colors lighting the dome itself, while on either side wall is a series of three-light candle fixtures with very elaborate shades.

These brackets are so wired that one light of each is on the emergency panel and so is kept burning all through the performance while the other two are under the control of the operator. The same principle applies to the seven-light fixtures under and over the balcony. Six of these lights are frosted spherical lamps controlled from the operating booth while the seventh light, which is concealed in the fixture, emitting its light through an amber diffuser, is controlled from the emergency panel.

One rather unusual feature of the lighting is a border light about 56 feet, containing approximately 160 lamps, concealed behind the proscenium arch. The lights are of four different colors, similar to the cove lighting of the main dome. All these lights are fed from a 36-circuit, dead front Sprague panel located in the picture booth, each circuit being individually switched. The bus bars for this panel are fed with fifteen sets of feeders from the main operating switchboard. This switchboard is mounted in a special compartment of the booth, partitioned off from the main operating portion, with extension arms on each switch.

A portion of the back wall facing the screen was omitted and a slate panel 68 inches by 30 inches was installed, slotted to allow the switch extension arms to pass through. On the face of this slate panel is mounted a shaft with fifteen lever switch handles to which are connected the extension arms. These levers are so arranged that they can be operated singly, or by interlocking can be operated in groups or all together with two master levers.

Immediately above this panel is set a similar panel in every respect, with fifteen dimmer plates mounted on the back similarly operated, either singly or together. These dimmers are of the Cutler-Hammer make, with their standard interlocking device.

The booth itself, a most important factor in all moving picture houses, is both large and airy, which enables the operators to work under more favorable conditions than is often the case.

There are three picture machines (Powers), one double stereopticon and one spot light. The D. C. current for these machines is supplied by a Hertner Electric 75-75 Transverter with 550 volts on the A. C. motor driving it. The three picture machines are connected in series, each being fed from a separate switchboard supplied with short-circuiting switches to cut out the lamps not in operation. While this seems to be a bad feature at first glance, on looking into the matter one finds it very good practice. The transverter is designed to run on a short circuit without any ill effects, but it is impossible to conceive of any operator leaving it short circuited for any length of time, because while doing so he could not possibly get any light.

The orchestra lights are controlled from the booth and are so arranged that they can be dimmed down and switched out, leaving the organ or piano light still burning. This does away with the inconvenience of switching twenty lights individually or the alternative, flashing them on all at once.

A feature not seen in many theatres is a series of colored lamps mounted on each musician's stand and controlled by push buttons on the leader's desk. These lights are run on a six volt circuit, reduced from 110 volts through a small transformer and are merely flashed momentarily, each color indicating some rearranged movement.

On either side of the orchestra is a small illuminated fountain which is in operation during the performance with a very pleasing effect.

The front of the house is about as brightly illuminated as any one could wish, the foyer being exceedingly well lit while the marquee, with its frosted lamps, creates a very pretty impression.

The front exterior lends itself very ad-

George Feinberg Has Good Record as Accessory Dealer
Is Expert on Projectors—and Haberdashery

LADIES and Gentlemen we have with us this week J. George Feinberg and the fact that he parts his name in the middle does not disguise the fact that the J. stands for Justin. J. George breezed into this vale of tears thirty-three years ago. After passing through the first long pants and also that very dangerous puppy-love period, our good friend J. George found himself in the wholesale millinery business, and while not looked upon as one of the very best "trimmers," he nevertheless made a very successful millinery salesman.

Seeing all around him evidences of great wealth being accumulated in the theatrical field and having several influential relatives engaged in said field, George decided that the millinery business would henceforth lose one of its greatest leaders and announced to a breathless world that the motion picture business had better polish up a brand-new halo, inasmuch as J. George was ready to bounce into the arena of motion picture industry. So, five years ago, together with Llewelyn H. Francis, a graduate of the University of Minnesota and formerly on the advertising staff of the Orpheum and Gayety theatres, Minneapolis, he laid the cornerstone for a most successful theatre equipment house in the midwest.

It seems that an old-time actor by the name of Dick Ferris staged a great spectacular production entitled "Fighting the Flames" at the Minnesota State Fair Grounds at Minneapolis and the two budding young equipment magnates spoken of in this biography were stationed at several entrance gates at said fair grounds, engaged in taking in the tickets that had been purchased by the populace of Minnesota.

It might be well to say that J. George is short, round and chubby and like all men of his robust frame is perpetually smiling. Moreover to the ladies who might read this announcement we will say that J. George is not married, has no bad habits and has contributed almost a fortune to the building up of the Wrigley Spearmint Gum business, all of his working hours being devoted on the side to the masticating of the "Product of Wrigley."

On December 19, 1911, in the Bijou Theatre Building, Feinberg & Francis located their first motion picture equipment quarters and today they are located on the second and third floors of the Loeb Arcade Building and have what is undoubtedly the finest furnished offices of any theatre supply house in the country. Besides being Simplex Distributors, the Teco Products Mfg. Company also handle the Simplex Ticket Seller, Idealite Screen, Steel Opera Chairs and Stanley Frames and carry a general line of theatre equipment.

Mr. Francis spends most of his time on the road among the hundreds of personal friends that are distributed across the territory in which he is located, while J. George attends to considerable of the office routine.

As an indication of the speed at which these young and enterprising theatre equipment specialists are traveling, it is only necessary to say that since August last they have taken two hundred and twenty-seven orders for Simplex Projectors and have formed the irritating habit of using freight cars to transport machines from New York to their territory.

J. George has made several pilgrimages during the year to the Metropolitan City and has always made the Simplex factory headquarters upon the occasion of these visits. Motion Picture News is oftentimes carried into the homes of the exhibitor and for that reason we are not at liberty to detail in our account all of George's activities while in our city this last time. But we have the word of one of the world's greatest press agents whose initials are W. C. F. and who is neither bald-headed nor six-foot tall, that George has considerable speed, as indicated in a little sentance that took place on Saturday last.

While we would not exactly say that a trail of broken hearts is following George's advent into Greenwich Village, we can safely state, however, that several of them were left bruised and mangled and if upon George's arrival to Minneapolis he does not open a Pirates' Den similar to that located on Christopher Street, we are missing our usual ability to make good such prophecies. It is secretly whispered about town that George has a penchant for silk shirts and that he usually carries a goodly number for emergencies. We know of several such silk shirts that should always be kept by George as carrying with them fond memories of a night's revel in the city of New York.

The picture which accompanies this article shows a bright-faced and apparently unsophisticated youth, gazing out with innocent expression upon a wicked world, but what we could say about that same little chubby-faced George if the United States Postal Regulations permitted us to do so.

It is now in order to bid "Au Revoir" to chubby George and wish him God Speed to the farmlands of Minnesota.

With truth that his ambition to make sales enough so that he may retire at the end of five years and ride into New York on a Stutz Speedster, may be realized. Come again to our city, George, and bring your bank-roll, silk shirts and everything, and mayhap by that time, the Pirates' Den will have added to its already attractive interior a few more female pirates and a greater number of intricate terpsichorean steps.

vantageously to flood lighting and this has been carried out by mounting six Davis flood lights on the roof of the marquise where they are concealed from the street and the general effect is very pleasing and satisfactory.

The lounge, located over the vestibule and foyer, is a most comfortable and beautifully decorated room and is well lighted with artistic brackets on the columns and six large piano stand lamps arranged at the back of the chefsfields. These stand lamps are supplied with rose-tinted silk shades of very elaborate design, matching the shades on the candelabura brackets, the whole producing a soft, subdued and voluptuous effect.

In fact, the whole installation of lighting is a credit to the owners, who were willing to go to such an expense to obtain a desired effect, as well as the engineer that designed it, and the contractor that carried out that design with such satisfactory results.

Paper on Safe Design of Theatres

At the coming Montreal Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Mr. Will F. Braun of Chicago, architect of many of the finest theatres in the country, will deliver a paper on "The Design of Theatres from the Standpoint of Safety to the Audience." A résumé of the paper is given below:

There is a lack of proper building ordinances outside of the large cities regulating the safety of the audiences. In the design of theatres there are many things that should be standardized to insure safety. As most of the theatres at the present time are being built with complete or at least semi stage facilities, we will take it for granted that the theatres under consideration are equipped with a stage. Those without a stage or scenery should follow the same safeguards for the rest of the building as provided for later. Equipment will be considered in detail.

In the preparation of this paper, the ordinances of ten of the largest cities in the country governing the construction of theatres, have been reviewed. Also the recommendations of the National Board of Fire Underwriters as well as many other authorities on this work.

In discussing the various points safeguarding the audience from fire and panics, we will consider the following points in the design and construction: type of construction, entrance lobby, foyers, stairways, seats, aisles, exits of main floor and balconies, emergency exits and passages, projection room, stage design, curtain, ventilation, automatic sprinklers, equipment outside of the theatre and buildings in connection with the theatre.

Laurier Theatre Opens After Remodelling

After two months under the management and control of H. W. Vance, the Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec, has become a very successful enterprise. For a number of years this house had been a white elephant and eventually the theatre was only operated on Sundays. The theatre had been controlled by a rather large syndicate of Hull citizens and even their united efforts did not result in the obtaining of a comfortable share of support. The theatre charged hands just before Christmas and it was remodelled throughout.

The house had been known as the Odeon Theatre but this name was changed to "Laurier Theatre" in memory of the late Sir Wilfred Laurier, one of Canada's greatest men. A handsome lobby replaced a store in the building and about $2,500 was spent for new projection equipment, including two Power's 6B power-driven projectors, a Hertner projector and a gold fibre screen. One of the brand new features is an eight-piece orchestra and, last but not least, Mr. Vance booked a number of really worthwhile pictures. These bookings came on top of an expenditure of $15,000 for changes and improvements in the house itself.

Lynch Enterprises Buy Typhoon Equipments

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, the well known theatre owners, operating one of the largest chains of theatres in the South, have placed with the Typhoon Fans Company during the last few days another large order for Typhoons.

These people have found that the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System meets their requirements and also increases to a considerable extent the box office receipts.

Swaab's Messenger Out

That breezy little house-organ of Lewis Swaab's has made its March appearance. Well arranged and edited with just enough exuberant matter to lighten the commercial side this four-pagelet of 8 pages has built up a clientele who look forward to its receipt each month.

Included in its pages this issue is a notice of the sudden death of Harry Saunders who was exceedingly well known about Philadelphia and who had been in the employ of the Swaabs for over 12 years. Saunders was a member of Local 307.

The Fabrikoid Process adds beauty and long life to fabrics; some heavy and rugged, others dainty as linen—all pliable, scuff-proof, stain-proof and waterproof.

When Theatre Seats are Censored

YOUR upholstery will have a clean bill-of-health, if it is Fabrikoid. For more than the beauty of this upholstery material, is the safeguard of its sanitary surface.

Fabrikoid absolutely excludes germs and germ-laden dust. It absorbs no perspiration. It is inherently clean and cleanable. Soap and water keep it healthful and beautiful.

And Fabrikoid, in rich colors to harmonize with any interior, is an artistic covering of comfortable softness. It is non-fading, non-staining and always pliable.

Fabrikoid greatly outwears other theatre seat coverings. It is not only extremely rugged and of immense tensile strength, but it escapes the rotting effect of perspiration that destroys so much theatre upholstery.

Study Lessons for the Projectionist

It is our intention to make these lessons of practical value to the projectionists, with no more theory than is necessary to explain the subjects. As the series progresses an attempt will be made to lay particular emphasis on subjects having to do directly with projection.

One of the unusual and most profitable features of the course will be the examination questions at the end of each lesson. The reader should go over the subject matter carefully and then attempt to answer the questions having to do with the text.

In addition to this there will appear from time to time a number of practical problems, having to do with the subjects studied up to that time. Any reader who so wishes is invited to write out questions and answers and send them to the Technical Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for correction. These answers will then be corrected and returned, providing return postage is enclosed.

As has been stated the resistance of a circuit varies with the temperature of the conductor and the apparatus connected to it. In most cases the resistance of a material increases with an increase of temperature, so that when a current is passed through a circuit heat is generated and the resistance of the circuit increases.

The change in resistance for a given change in temperature is quite different for different metals. Some alloys, however, have a very small change in resistance for a change in temperature and it is very important in making standard resistances that such alloys be used in order that the resistance will remain constant over a wide range of the temperature.

When a rheostat is used in a circuit such as in an arc circuit it is necessary that the rheostat be placed in such position that the heat generated can be easily carried away in order that the grids may not heat excessively and cause a change in the value of the rheostat. Also in the case of conductors it is necessary that a wire of sufficient size be used to carry the desired amount of current, for in case of too small a conductor excessive heating takes place and causes danger of fire.

Table 1 gives the safe current carrying capacity of different sizes of wire for both rubber and slow burning insulation.

Carbon is different from most materials as regards the effect due to heating, in that the resistance decreases when the temperature is increased, so that the resistance of a carbon lamp is about twice as great when cold as after it has become heated by the passage of current for some time. Also in the case of a carbon arc the resistance is greater when starting the arc than after it has become heated, therefore an arc should be adjusted for hot resistance and allowed to "warm up" each time before making the necessary adjustments.

Table II gives the temperature coefficients for some of the most common materials. The temperature coefficient may be defined as the per cent change in resistance per degree (Centigrade) change in temperature. Most metals such as aluminum, copper, tin and silver have a practically constant change of about 4/10 of one percent (.004) of their resistance at zero degrees Centigrade for an increase of one degree in temperature above zero.

If we know the resistance of any material at zero degrees Centigrade we can find the resistance at any desired temperature from the equation:

in which \( R_t \) is the resistance at the desired temperature, \( R_0 \) is the resistance of the material at some specified temperature as taken from tables, and \( t \) is the number of degrees change in temperature.

Sample problem:
The resistance of a certain copper conductor is 12 ohms at zero degrees centigrade. Find the resistance at 60 degrees C.

Solution:
Using the equation \( R_t = R_0 \times (1 + at) \), where \( R_0 \) is the resistance at 0°C.

As can be seen from Table II for copper the value of \( a \) is .0043, so the equation becomes

\[ R_t = 12 + 3.09 = 15.09 \] ohms.

Resistances of different sizes of wire in tables are given for a certain temperature so that the value of resistance at any desired temperature may be found by applying the above equation to the value found in the table. From Table 1 the resistance of 1,000 feet of number 10 copper wire is .9987 at 20 degrees C.

Sample problem: Find the resistance of 1,000 feet of number 10 copper wire at 50 degrees C.

Solution:
Using the equation \( R_t = R_0 \times (1 + at) \), where \( R_0 \) is the resistance at 0°C.

As can be seen from Table II the value of \( a \) is .0043, so the equation becomes \[ R_t = .9987 \times (1 + .0043 \times 50) = 1.129 \] ohms.

In an electric circuit the resistance is dependent upon the sort of material making up the circuit. In comparing different materials as to their ability to conduct electricity we speak of their specific or relative conductivity, with silver having the property of being the best conductor of electricity we will compare the relative conductivities with regard to this metal. Silver will be taken with a conductivity of 100 the other metals being rated by a fractional part corresponding to their ability to conduct electricity.

Table III gives the specific or relative conductivity of some of the most common metals. Also included in this table are the specific resistances of the metals named. The specific resistance, which is expressed in microhms or in millihens of an ohm is the resistance of a centimeter cube of the metal taken between opposite faces.

Another way of expressing the resistance of a substance is in terms of ohms per mil-foot, which is the resistance of a volume of the material one foot in length and having a uniform cross section of one circular mil. The values for mil-foot resistance are included for the submersion and not the submersion and not the submersion...Table I.

Sample problem: A silver wire of a certain size and length will conduct 25 amperes; how much current will an iron wire of the same size and weight conduct providing the same voltage is applied?

Solution: The conductivity of iron is 16 in comparison to silver as 100. Then the current to be conducted by the iron wire is 1.25 = 16/100 x 25 = 20 amperes.

There are two systems in common use by which temperature may be measured, these are the Fahrenheit and Centigrade systems. The Fahrenheit thermometer is one in which there are 180 equal divisions between the freezing and boiling points of water, the freezing point being taken as 32° and the boiling point 212°. In this system temperatures are denoted as degrees F.

The Centigrade thermometer is one in which there are 100 equal divisions between the freezing and boiling points of water. The freezing point is taken as 0° and the boiling point as 100°. Temperatures are denoted in this system by degrees C.

Temperatures may be changed from one scale to the other in the following manner.

To change from Centigrade to Fahrenheit subtract 32 and multiply by 9/5. Sample problem: A temperature is recorded as 77° F. Find the corresponding temperature in the Centigrade scale.

Solution: (77 - 32) x 5/9 = 15 x 5/9 = 25 or 25° Centigrade.

To change from Centigrade scale to Fahrenheit multiply the reading by 9/5 and add 32. Sample problem: A temperature is taken as 15° C. Find the corresponding F. temperature.

Solution: (15 x 9/5) + 32 = 27 + 32 = 59 degrees which is the corresponding Fahrenheit temperature.

In speaking of the size of a conductor for carrying current that is the cross sectional area we say that it is so many circular mils abbreviated as cm. The circular mil is the area of a circle whose diameter is one thousandth (0.001) inch. If the diameter of the wire is known in thousandths of an inch, namely 12, we can determine the circular mil cross section by squaring the diameter.

Example: A number 16 wire has a diameter of 50 mils, and the circular mil cross section is 50 x 50 or 2500 circular mils.

In speaking of different sizes of wires they are distinguished by gage numbers. The gage is most commonly used and the one called the American Gage is the one adopted by Brown & Sharpe Mfg. Co. and is known as the B & S Gage.

A gage for determining the size of an uninsulated wire is in the form of a wire gage, which notches are cut corresponding to the different sizes of wires. A wire of unknown size is fitted into these slots until one is found in which it fits snugly, these slots are marked giving the size of the wire in terms of the gage numbers. This is similar to Table I the circular mil cross section, the current carrying capacity, and resistance can then be found.

A simple way of remembering the sizes of wires is as follows: A number 10 wire has approximately a cross section of 16,000 circular mils, a resistance of 1 ohm per thousand feet and a current carrying capacity of approximately 60 amperes.

A number 7 wire has a cross section of 20,000 circular mils, a resistance of .5 ohms per thousand feet and a current carrying capacity of 48 amperes.

necessary for the movement—be it Goethe-Slate or pin-cross and cam—to complete one cycle of 360 degrees for each frame that is shown. This cycle includes the pulling down of the entire frame plus the actual time that the film is at rest while it is being projected to the screen. The instant that the movement again commences to move the film marks the end of that first cycle. Therefore the cycle has been divided into two parts, the time of movement and the time of rest.

Suppose now that we make a test of a movement and find that the pin or cam moves exactly 90 degrees in order to bring down the film one frame. This would mean that the same pin or cam must be moving through 270 degrees while the frame was being projected. We have then, 90 degrees of movement and 270 degrees of rest. What is the speed of the intermittent?

The correct answer to this question is another question. It is, What do you mean by speed?

So far as we know this particular nomenclature has not as yet been taken up by the Committee on Standardization of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers but no doubt it will be soon. To us it would seem that the speed ratio would mean the time of rest compared to the entire cycle time. In other words the intermittent just described would be said to have a speed of 3:1. On this same basis an intermittent where such a period of movement is but 72 degrees would be said to have a ratio of 5:1.

Some other experts have ascribed a ratio as meaning the period of movement compared to the period of rest. On this basis a movement that boasted a 72 degree period of travel would be called a 4 to 1 intermittent. So as you see, until the nomenclature is standardized either statement is correct but to be understood it is necessary that the speaker explain his method of arriving at the speed ratio.

According to your letter one expert has lost his speed on the blade width. This is an arbitrary method and can not be considered a strictly mathematical solution since it is true that two prods in the intermittent one may be able to trim off several degrees from the blade. Surely this does not make the movement faster. Then there is the intermittent acceleration and deceleration so proportioned that it is possible to vary as much as 10 degrees from the blade width without affecting travel. This is made possible by the fast that the first part of the travel of the sprocket is slight and that on account of it there is no necessity for covering blade to complete its cutting action until the intermittent has moved 10 degrees.

The blade width theory is not correct and should not be followed because it permits of too wide a variation in results. This department rarely goes in for the "explosive stuff" so our exclamations on your statements about "trade paper editors" will be purely imaginary. There is no reason why a conductor of a department such as this should fear "bad treading." It's a small man that can't or won't admit his mistakes.

We thought down here that you men up there were pretty well satisfied with the examinations given out but your present letter tends to disprove it. With individuals for the sprocket blades to complete their cutting action after the intermittent has moved 10 degrees.

Out of Focus Effect

Walter L. Greene, Morgantown, N. C., writes:

I am running a Powers 6-B, Motor Driven Machine with Modra Light Equipment, it is nearly new and runs fine, but for the past month I have been bothered with an out of focus effect in the center of the picture. Thinking that it was the aperture plate tracks worn I put on a new one but this did not remedy the trouble. The sprockets are all in alignment, the aperture plate and the tension springs set-square on both tracks of the apparatus and are adjusted right. This trouble seems to occur more frequent when running Pathé Films, and when running such films as Para-\footnote{Note—see our next 36 page folder, illustrating and describing our complete line.}mount-Arcitact and National the out of focus effect does not occur.

Please advise me if some film perforations causes this or it is due to some machine trouble.

I have been a member of the N. A. M. L. for a year and I think it is a great thing. I have been operating for seven years and have always inspected the films before each show, so I have really been a member of seven years.

Reply: It seems quite probable that the surfaces between the lens case and the jacket of your objective have become worn, and a slight change in your adjustment is caused by the vibration of the machine. This trouble may be remedied by placing a thin piece of felt between the lens case and the jacket and thus preventing any movement due to vibration.

I. P. A. Holds Interesting Meeting

The International Projection Association held its annual meeting at the club-rooms of the society on March 15th. The speaker for the evening was one of the engineers of the General Electric Company who gave an interesting talk on "Motor Generators as Applied to Projection." Beginning with the next meeting, which will be held on March 27th, the lectures will be on Saturdays, the change being due to the desire of the society’s officers who wished to make it possible for as large an attendance as possible.

A Portable Switchboard for Studios

The Motion Picture Industry is greatly indebted to electricity for its success, in that for studio work one of the essentials for artistic filming is a proper lighting effect. It would be impractical and costly to depend upon uncertain sunlight for filming, and consequently powerful arc lights, skillfully manipulated have been put into play. In the modern studio any scene may be photographed irrespective of dull cloudy weather or darkness outside, and a picture flooded with artificial sunlight, perfect in realism, can be produced by means of the arc light.

The operation of the arc light, however, demands the attention of experts, and it is further necessary that these experts have efficient equipment at their disposal in order to obtain good results.

The International Film Company of New York have installed in their thoroughly modern studio, an elaborate lighting system capable of producing some wonderful effects. An interesting part of this installation is a portable switchboard that can be quickly and easily transported from one part of the studio to another, and gives excellent serviceability.

This board which is shown by the accompanying photographs is a Westinghouse-Krantz product, and specially designed for portable work since it can be connected by means of a heavy three-conductor stage cable directly to the incoming switchboard. The board may then be placed in any section of the studio where spider boxes are required for cutting in lights. This piece of apparatus consists of a slide board and switches together with Kluge receptacles contained in a No. 12 gauge steel box for protection, and mounted on caster wheels for portability. On the board are six three pole, single throw, 125 ampere knife switches, each feeding to three point Kluge receptacles, which in turn may be connected to six-way spider boxes for distribution to the individual lamps.

This switchboard, which is about thirty-six inches wide by thirty-two inches high by eighteen inches deep, weighs approximately 350 pounds, and since it is entirely enclosed is amply protected for safety.

This apparatus may be connected in a very short interval of time and due to compactness and portability proves very useful in distributing power for arc lights.

A Progressive Orchestra Leader

For the past ten years I have been watching musical directors throughout the country, and have tried to study their work from every conceivable angle. One of the surest signs that a musical director is appropriately accomplishing his mission is the fact that he is always in the market for plenty of music. I am in a position to know who is buying music and who is not.

Among the many musical directors who are struggling to acquire a large and up-to-date library, Mr. R. E. Mouton, of the Sexton Theatre, Great Falls, Montana, Mr. Mouton has had a great amount of experience in this particular line. As early as 1911 he played in Pantages Theatre, Omaha, Nebraska, the Imperial Theatre, Great Falls, Montana, Amos and Andy Theatres, Berwick, Maine. He can be considered a pioneer when a snare drum indicated a fainting spell of a vamp.

Readers may wonder why I say all this and of what interest it may be to them. I am sure that there are many orchestra leaders who are still adhering to the old chip tap style of accompanying pictures. They are still trying to get away with libraries of 14 minutes, 18 minutes, 21 minutes, 25 minutes, 30 minutes obtained through orchestra clubs, and professional favors.

Mr. Mouton recently sent me several programs which he played in connection with certain pictures. I can, to the conclusion that although his orchestra consists of a combination of only eight men, he is nevertheless, playing such numbers as "Enrich" by Griez, "Romanza" from the Wielochowski Concerto No. 2, and many other of such standard compositions.

From a newspaper clipping which I received from the Great Falls Daily Tribune, I learned that Mr. Mouton is setting his own musical suggestions, and he spends a great deal of time preparing his musical programs.

"Told In The Hills," a picture recently shown at the Sexton Theatre, was one picture I happened to see myself, and I am therefore in a position to judge the musical setting selected by Mr. Mouton, which hereafter follows.

The above musical quotations absolutely reveal the fact that the work of Mr. Mouton and his associates, deserves to be commented upon. Of course, as in every instance, a lot of credit (or blame) is due to the gentleman doing the work, Mr. Mouton, owner of the Sexton Theatre. Money spent on music is considered a surplus expenditure. By this I mean that the majority of exhibitors and their managers consider music a surplus item, because, figuratively speaking, it cannot show any net returns. I believe, that is therefore very important that the manager of a theatre be progressive and modern enough to realize that money spent on music cannot be figured in the same way as money spent for a film. Music is nothing but an asset which indirectly brings returns, and it is a master mind in exhibition of pictures to be able to realize this.

Milton Fierero ever so much. You should consider such men as Mr. Mouton and Mr. Stege as proponents of trade, which will result to the advantage of all parties. See you.

Two Christie Comedies
(One Reel Each)

FOR light comedies these latest releases from the Christie workshop will generally please, although there are no spontaneous bangs concealed anywhere in the two reels. The ideas behind the offerings are "No Babies Allowed," and "Marry Me," are genuine and are brought out without any resort to slapstick. And since the treatment of them is not exaggerated but considerately human they should find response from picturegoers who do not ask too much for their money.

As its title indicates, "No Babies Allowed" presents the youthful couple who are unable to find an apartment because of the objection to babies. The parents almost give up in despair when they return to camp and gain admittance by employing a tradesman to carry baby up in his basket. At which point the complications begin. The busy, spoiling landlord causes the parents to deposit the infant on the dumbwaiter and before they get it back the child is lugged off to an orphan asylum. The conclusion reveals the happy couple building their own home. Jimmy Harrison and Dorothy DeVore are the principals but the honors go to the infant. It is a good natured child that can smile when it is being tossed around like a lamp. Babies have brought bright spots to more than one picture.

"Marry Me" is a satire on the leap year proposal and offers Bobby Vernon in the role of the chap who scoffs at the idea of girls proposing. Just to prove that he is wrong his claims conceive the scheme of having Vera Steadman pop the question. Of course she is not in earnest at first but when she sees another woman taking advantage of leap year by proposing to Bobby, she quickly decides that he is worth having after all. This comedy is more compact with incident and humor than the other and scores with better results.

—LAURENCE REID.

"The Evil Eye"
(Hallmark)

"THE EVIL EYE," the new Ascher serial starring Benny Leonard, the lightweight pugilist champion, does not promise, from the first three episodes, to be a step forward in serial making. Leonard ought to have been satisfied with being a good fighter and let it go at that. Not that the plot gives him much acting to do. It is a story of a relentless, powerful gang of crooks, who are purging a million dollars in bonds, the heroine, and the family jewels. The star is shown in few, if any, close-ups. One thing, however, he does do—he supplies good action in every episode. His fight scenes are truly realistic and display the cleverness and speed that brought him fame in the prize ring.

Of course there is a "master mind" of the underworld, who plans the daring Wall Street bond robberies. This time he is a combination of Shylock, the witches of Macbeth and the notorious Mr. Hyde. He is wheeled about in an invalid chair, burning his "evil eye" into everyone he meets, and blinding those who fall under his disfavor. He is hideous enough to make a good comedian.

The best way to describe the serial is to say that it is no better and no worse than the old time mystery serials. It lacks remarkable thrills, the producer probably thinking that Benny's being several guineas per episode would be enough. The story in the early episodes at least, coincides almost exactly with the recent Wall Street bond robberies, which ought to help make it draw. The star's name will also pull tremendously—MATHEW TAYLOR.

"Haunted Spooks"
(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Pathé—Two Reels)

IT is customary to speak of every new Harold Lloyd comedy as his best. The rich incidents, the humorous details of his previous efforts are swallowed up in the rich assortment of tricks in the succeeding piece. So it is with "Haunted Spooks." No matter how funny his other pictures were his latest offering seems to eclipse them all. No spontaneous laughter is the flow of ridiculous incidents, so firmly established are its manifold points that the thought is brought home that the Doblin company labors with paint-by-numbers care. Not working on schedule, Messrs. Roach and Lloyd have time to THINK up some new and clever business, and it is not transferred to the screen until it is perfect. The impression is gained that as much time and study are put into these comedies as in a special feature production. The result is Harold Lloyd is making just about the best pictures that are coming from any film factory.

"Haunted Spooks" is a satire on spiritualism. Timely isn't it? Boy—page Sir Oliver Lodge! But before the spirits start dancing around the house which will go to the ghost if she marries and remains there a year, the loggled up Harold and a Spanish girl are found. They are not particularly funny. And novel too, don't forget that.

The piece starts with all its cylinders working and the first laugh is sent up with the introductory caption which informs the spectator to "hold on tight, we're going around a curve." The boy is in pursuit of love, the girl is sixteen and never been . . . . but once or twice, and to find the locale the embarker is advised to go down the Mississippi as far as he can and turn to the right.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Madonna of the Slums"
(Stage Woman's War Relief Series—Universal—Two Reels)

SOME way the Stage Woman's War Relief series impress us as being the product of some one who has but slight belief in the intelligence of "movie" audiences or else he has decided that anything is good enough to long for "charity." Anyway the stories being presented are decidedly commonplace. Any good continuity writer could turn out one or two in two hours.

The picture under the above title is no exception. It tells the story of a rich artist who has never completed a master painting because he could not find a model for the face. Then Jeannette Eagles as the young wife of a chap in hard luck, same being Holbrook Blinn, goes out on the street to beg so she can buy milk for her baby, and the artist senses just what he craves.

Besides Miss Eagles, just now securing a considerable personal success in the current stage play "The Wonderful Thing" a number of other real celebrities are in the cast. Helen MacKellar of "The Storm" company and mild recently appearing with Richard Bennett in "Beyond the Horizon" has a part which presents no possibilities. Galli-Chaire appears in a double of scenes which show her standing at the Metropolitan opera house. Holbrook Blinn who will be remembered for some good roles cuts up some dutes which are embarrassingly humorous. We hope that the last named probably will not mean much to people outside of New York. J. S. DICKERSON.
INDEX TO COMPLETE PLAN BOOK AND EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here complete lists of all feature pictures for last twenty-six weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the pictures, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion concerning each picture, plus our opinions regarding the business aspects of the films. As many of the exhibitors receive only the comment and opinions in their daily papers, we are not publishing the reviews. However, we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual work of the writers but also from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have given us their opinions.

And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all the opinions, if not on every picture, but at least on all pictures which have not received any comment from our reviewers. As a result, exhibitors are able to see at a glance which reviews are entirely satisfactory.
"THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOL" (Universal)

Star, and Director Create Excellent Turkish Picture

I.

T is not very often that in a picture dealing with a foreign and little known story, the director is able to truthfully create the atmosphere of the story. But in "The Virgin of Stamboul," Universal's seaventured feature of Constantinople and the desert, with Priscilla Dean as star, we spend an hour and a half wandering in the Turkish city and galloping over the sands. Besides the atmosphere of this picturesque locale, the picture is splendidly set and desert exteriors, and an excellent star and supporting cast.

Priscilla Dean is a beggar girl of the streets, unatamed, wild and impetuous, and she makes us up as well as an Oriental. Her acting is one of the best things of the picture. The story isn't startling and we come away with a memory of the girl and the desert, and the thrilling battle scene of the final reel, rather than the plot. The spoken subtitles appeal, demand a constant repetition of some Turkish words, but the descriptive titles are a little too descriptive. An anti-climax rather detracts from the action at the end, when we flash from two realistic individual struggles to the big general melee at the city's gate.

The story of the little Turkish girl, forced by inescapable customs into marriage with an unseen husband, arouses the sympathy. Wheeler Oakman, the globe-trotting American, furnishes good action and makes a fine appearance, although he is not too pretty to be offensive. Wallace Beery makes an admirable hearty.

The one objection to the picture is that it is a trifle too long. The first reel hardly introduces the characters and shows a number of street scenes. This, of course, creates the atmosphere, but lengthens the picture too much. But this is a big feature and will be well liked.—Length, 7 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

You may have seen pictures of the North-West and of the South Seas, but you have never seen such a picture of the wild, barren desert as is "The Virgin of Stamboul." Coming to this theatre on March 29th. You are carried to Stamboul, the city of crime and filth, in the heart of Turkey. You will wander among its cosmopolitan throngs of veiled women, motley beggars, and richly-attired aristocrats. You will have the thrill of the strange and the exciting.

SUGGESTIONS

You have many angles to advertise in this feature. First there is the star, whose name will draw the public in by itself. She is also supported by a cast, none of whose roles are well known. Dwell on the fact that the story is by H. N. Van Loan, and that this picture is a departure from his work, and it will be unusually spectacular because of its unusual length. If you can borrow some cameos from a memoirist, they would tell you how the story could have, Dress your box office up as a tent in the desert. Put turbans and Turkish costumes on your box office girls. Use a background of some desert scene of Stamboul, where the best is like the worst. You will see Priscilla Dean as Sari, the beggar girl, and you will get one of the most thrilling and battle scenes of recent years.

The date—March 29th! The place—this theatre! And the result—a mighty fine evening's entertainment.

CATCH LINES

"The Virgin of Stamboul"—the story of the little beggar girl of "the wickedest city in the world," the story that revolted against cruel Turkish customs.

Seven reels of tense, appeal-drawing drama laid in picturesque Stamboul and the wild, open desert.

"MY LADY'S GARTER" (F. P. Lasky)

Mystery Melodrama Which Should "Get By"

HIGHLY improbable, wildly melodramatic in spots and decidedly episodic in plot development is this adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's mystery detective story of the same name, but in spite of the picture's technical faults we are inclined to think that it will pass with the average audience.

To begin with stories of this sort, the hunting of a notorious criminal with information as to his identity withheld from the audience together with the bringing forward of much circumstantial evidence pointing to the identity of the guilty man, are popular. They carry suspense and interest even when they are not so well worked out.

Next in favor of this production is good action in the various individual sequences even if those sequences are unnumbered and not well connected. Third, the picture makes a good bid for popularity because the hero turns out to be the secret service chap and everything ends according to Hoyle.

The feature is not Tourneur's best by any means nor is it to be classed as his worst. The lack of a good continuity probably can be blamed on fault of the original story, along with another probability of having done too many scenes and therefore forcing artificial footages. This latter difficulty, it seems might have been avoided by following a sequence having to do with some English history showing the origin of the "My Lady's Garter" part of the picture and which has nothing to do with the present plot, but rather with the subject of capturing "The Hawk" and letting the hero get married. Length, 5 reels.—J. A. McPherson.

THE CAST

From the novel by Jacques Futrelle. Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Another of Maurice Tourneur's famous melodramas, "My Lady's Garter," has been booked for the Theatre for a four days engagement beginning March 29th.

To those who remember "The Life Lines," "Weedman," and other of this director's productions, the coming attraction will need no guarantee as to its excellence. Mr. Tourneur always produces pictures brimming with the same fine quality of writing and acting that has made "My Lady's Garter" no exception. The picture is adapted from the widely read novel by Jacques Futrelle (Mr. Futrelle was one of the heroes of the Titanic disaster) and is a mystery story concerning the efforts of an American secret service man to trap a master criminal whose alias is "The Hawk, The Hawk." It is a barnstorming story with plenty of the game, action, and suspense that are the essentials of a Tourneur production. The plot is a little complicated, but the suspense is continuous, and the end is a real shocker.

SUGGESTIONS

We would dwell heavily on the feature of the director for producing melodramatic productions, with reference to the many other pictures in the book, with mention of his death on the Titanic, good billing and play up the fact that this is a mystery detective story, without giving much attention to the cast unless you consider Standish and Bremner strong enough to feature. A bit of interest is that the picture is full of stories concerning robbers being committed in which it is hinted that there are obscure agencies working in the various crime districts. Let your exploitation dive into the news events, stating that "My Lady's Garter" concerns the crime which the photoplay tells about. We have carefully followed the historical sequence of this feature since telling the origin of the order of "The Hawk," the part which the photoplay represents. We have been careful not to spoil the mystery of the feature as which it is a bit complicated, but the flash is that there is a costume sequence in the production at all. If you want the high lights of the picture for selling purposes, why not use the idea of the two boats, a rescue from drowning of the heroine by the hero, the beginning of the romance, and the chase. The picture gives you some views of the Hudson River and of famous Riverside Drive, New York.

CATCH LINES

Jacques Futrelle died a hero on the Titanic, but his great novel of the master criminal who was brought to justice by the Secret Service, has lived on in book form and just as exciting and interest holding in the photoplay. This will be released by the Majestic. In book form this feature is just as exciting and interest holding in the photoplay. This will be released by the Majestic.

“KING SPRUCE” (Dial-Hodkinson)

Lumber Story Pleases Despite Complicated Plot

MITCHELL LEWIS has been given a role that fits him well in this latest story of the “big timber” country, and despite the rather confusing series of incidents that comprise the plot, we find ourselves quite genially disposed to the entire production. The result is another welcome relief from the banality of the ordinary movie hero.

His toughness, virility and strength are in perfect harmony with the reshaping of timber and the cries of the lumberjack. He would be raised by a full dress suit. But the production does not come near to equalling the “The Barrier,” the Rex Beach story in which Lewis played the lead some time ago.

This picture ought to please everyone except the maudlin girl, but Mitchell Lewis has appeared in better productions.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

“KING SPRUCE” is a story of the tall timber country, with the popular Mitchell Lewis in the lead role as the hero. The story is full of excitement, with a cast of characters that are well drawn and interesting. In the plot, the star’s virile personality is perfectly in accord with this story of strong, rough men who spend the winter in the heart of the deep woods and the spring in driving the felled logs to civilization’s farthest outposts.

Dwight Wade is a college graduate and a school teacher in a little town on the outskirts of the woods. He is in love with Eve Barrett, the daughter of a rich lumber king, who is seeking the nomination for governor. In order to separate the two loves, Barrett brings Wade to the woods with lumberjacks. Barrett himself leaves his pay as residence to go to camp for the first time in twenty years. There he learns a good deal about the ferocity of the woods, and that some pawsers who have “squatted” on his land. But one of them, a girl known throughout the woods as “Skeets’ girl,” has a heart of gold. Wade, a charming brand of the woodsman, finds his way into the underbrush, although a quartet with the boss of Barrett’s camp has caused his diabolical, habitual existence. He is exiled to the outskirts of the woods.

Here we learn something of Barrett’s earlier life. Twenty years before he stole the girl with whom he is now engaged, he was a headstrong young man. His character is preserved, as he is forced to promise that he will give the girl a name. When Barrett realizes that he is marrying in the woods, he becomes a true lumberjack, and “Skeets’ girl” is brought to the home of her plighted youth in the city.

The plot thickens, when the giant logs are floated down the river, matters are finally cleared up. Barrett renews his unjaded actions and the foreman marries “Skeets’ girl,” who loves Wade. Wade is united in love, an efficient lumberman, instead of a teacher.

PROGRAM READER

Here is a story told in the picturesque lumber country. And besides this excellent locale there is a story that is full of dramatic incidents. And above all there is the incomparable Mitchell Lewis as Lewis. Lewis is unique in the motion picture world. No other star on the screen to-day would be able to take part of this part of a rough and ready lumberjack, hard fighting, yet ever kind and ready to defend the weak. Lewis is supported by an excellent cast, and the story is crowded with such scenes as:

- "Forest Fire"—A lumberman's home is threatened by a jumbo fire.
- "Skeets' Girl"—A true lumberjack's story about a life of adventure in the forest.

The love interest is not lacking, and it is a picture that will leave no impression.

SUGGESTIONS

Mitchell Lewis is a star who is well known and has a large following. Admit him, but never him alone. Tell what kind of a story he is in—a story of the lumberjack, "Jackets of the Silver North." He has done excellent work in a number of pictures before, such as "The Clearing," and "The Rich Man's Tomb." Your patrons will remember the story of "The Clearing" which is the story of a lumberjack, and "The Rich Man's Tomb," which is a story of a lumberjack.

You could use a large size in front of your theatre reading, "Danger! Beware of forest fires!" See "KING SPRUCE," and see what you can do.

CARIOCLE:

"KING SPRUCE" is a story of the country where the cry of "t-l-m-b-r" echoes through the forests. A forest fire is moved by the crash of giants of the forest tall.

Mitchell Lewis, the strongest, most virile star on the screen, in an attractive story of the tall timber country.

“THE THIRD WOMAN” (Robinson-Cole)

May Be Considered as Fair Entertainment

CARLYLE BLACKWELL is responsible in many ways for the success of this feature, which, by the way, might be considered as fair entertainment.

If the locale is taken into consideration, we might call it rather weak, and elemental, for it is divided into three parts, each one of which is a tale of adventure, without the deeper connecting links to give it the right blending. The locale is laid in the woods, and the adventures of the Mildred are among the Pueblo Indians.

The opening scenes show the star as the son of a wealthy man who has made his money in the west and has come east to live. The young man is engaged to a society butterfly, but breaks his promise when he realizes that his mother is an Indian. The call of the latter race now becomes stronger, and the boy, who is eager to marry the Indian woman, is about to leave the tribe. After wandering about, he finds true happiness in the daughter of his father's old colleague, who does not object to his Indian blood.

Carlyle Blackwell looks and acts the part of the young half-breed very well. In many instances, however, he is too much in evidence and certainly "loves" close-ups whether necessary or not.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

“The Third Woman,” a Robertson-Cole production, with Carlyle Blackwell in the leading role, will play this theatre on — of next week.

It is the story of a man who conceals from his son the fact that the son's mother was an Indian squaw and who brought up the young man to believe that he was of pure white blood. Carlyle Blackwell plays the role of the young half-breed to perfection, injecting such naivete into the character that one would be led to believe at times that he was a descendant of the Pueblo.

Arriving home from college, Luke Halbley becomes engaged to a society butterfly, whom he believes he loves. But then comes Marcelle Ritter, daughter of his father's old colleague of schooldays. She is pretty and her frankness and unselfishness win the young man. As the story is told, the fact that one is connected with the other is a matter of much consideration. The hero's race now causes Luke and we next see him dwelling among the Indians. At times, however, he becomes engaged to the daughter of his old colleague and begins to marry her, when the call of the white man enters his soul and he finds he cannot. He leaves the pueblo, but the interest is carried for a time about for his return, and after a period of living among the Indians, he has informed him of his Indian blood and is about to choke him to death when he sees another and former arrival, whom he finds to be his committing murder. The washer is invited to the young woman's home, where he leaves permanent effect on the hero. The half-breed woman transcends all different of race or conventional idea of "blood ties."

PROGRAM READER

Manager announces that “The Third Woman,” a Robertson-Cole production, with Carlyle Blackwell in the leading role, will play this theatre on — of next week.

It is the story of a man who conceals from his son the fact that the son's mother was an Indian squaw and who brought up the young man to believe that he was of pure white blood. Carlyle Blackwell has never done a better piece of character work in his long career upon the screen, for he has drawn the likeness of the young half-breed with a trueness that could not be bettered. The opening scenes show the star as the son of a wealthy man who has made his money in the West and has come East to live. His son, Luke, is engaged to a society butterfly, whom he believes he loves. But Marcelle, the daughter of an old colleague of his father's, appears upon the scene and Luke begins to feel that he has found his true love. Through an accident, however, he discovers that his mother was an Indian squaw. The call of the Indian race now causes Luke and we next see him dwelling among the Pueblo Indians. At times he is engaged to the daughter of his old colleague and begins to marry her, when he finds he cannot. He leaves the pueblo, but the interest is carried for a time about for his return, and after a period of living among the Indians, he has informed him of his Indian blood and is about to choke him to death when he sees another and former arrival, whom he finds to be his committing murder. The washer is invited to the young woman's home, where he leaves permanent effect on the hero.

He leaves the tribe and wanders about for many days until by accident he meets Marcelle, with whom he finds true happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

This production if taken as a whole can play almost any house and give the patrons a pleasing afternoon or evening's entertainment. The story, although not a novel, is very interesting and will go well with the public. It should be in your advertising. It is one of those peculiar tales, which if told right, and those which will give the audiences the right amount of thrills, will then be appreciated. The story of the character of the Indians is treated with care and sympathy, and the hero is a true Indian, who does not tell his son that he is of Indian blood. What did the Young Man do with the daughter of the Chief of the Comanche Indians, and what is the secret of the Feature, do not lose sight of the fact that the pictures are good. It is a story of the Indian life, which is bound to excite attention. Play these up also.

“SOONER OR LATER”  (Selznick)

Farcical Idea Is Frail But Fairly Amusing

No mental concentration is demanded in Owen Moore’s latest expression, “Sooner or Later,” because it is too absurd to make much of a fuss over. The story establishes the theory that every fellow falls sooner or later for some one girl even though he may call himself an ‘unattached’ character. In bringing this point the idea is stretched to the breaking point. While it starts off on a fairly reasonable premise it soon becomes outrageously farcical and in carrying it to feature length oxygen is supplied by the padding expert in the shape of Keystone fireworks. If one wants to fool himself by taking it seriously, one will realize that the piece has not the idea or finesse needed for high-class comedy, nor the speed demanded for slapstick farce. There appears to be no happy medium between these two extremes. On element of patron’s demands the one—the other. “Sooner or Later” is neither the one or the other. There is really no substance to the thing, but it is so palpably ridiculous and treated as such that the spectator is disarmed from an analytical standpoint. Much amusement is gained in the antics of the slapstick burglars who dodge in and out of trick doors in their efforts to elude their detective patrons. This bit of outrageous action takes up the better part of two reels and is so concentrated that the thin thread of romance is buried in the background where it remains until resurrected for the final clinch. The picture in the earlier reels could be called “Motoring with Owen Moore” since it presents him racing over a highpowered car, and these scenes become rather tedious because the chief characters are always in the limelight. There is no continuity visible, the action presenting a series of episodes. But it amuses after a fashion—what with the drollery of Owen Moore, the burglars and the pointed subtitles—

THE BOWERY THEATRE

Harry Morey Has A Vigorous Melodrama Hero

As an exponent of rough and tumble melodramas Harry Morey stands in a class by himself. In giving him subjects of such melodramatic vitality as “The Flaming Clue” to interpret, his sponsors have given him a personality to justify. "The Flaming Clue" is a story of such spadework that entertainment will find it here. The plot takes up the familiar subject of the underworld in which a Secret Service man is intent on capturing a band of counterfeiters—a subject incidentally which is always interesting and provides it is worked out, as is here, with dramatic intensity.

If it may be said about the underlining of the film that it has overwhelming odds, but he doesn’t falter, he doesn’t fail. Even since does he go about his work that the action is made reasonably likable. One sympathizes with the sleuth because he is painted as a regular fellow instead of the usual ruthless type. The romance is not a negligible factor as in most rugged melodramas to actuate the plot. But it is worked out in accordance with modern methods of detecting crime. The story is built on the necessities of the case, and the characters are human in their reactions and actions. The director has paid particular attention to his atmosphere which is brought out in appropriate backgrounds and types. Some of these are tough looking customers, but they are handled here.

“THE DEADLIER SEX”
(Hampton-Pathe)

Ilogical Story Lackin9g in Many Points

JUST an average program feature which should get by in most any house, the audience are in the big city and the north woods with preferences given to the latter.

Bayard Veiller, who is the author, has given us a fair though illogical story. He has not much to tell and becoming short in ideas has resorted to the old fault, padding, thus lengthening a three reel story in six. And his characters are strong and a little stiff but are rather pleasing in a weaker kind in that they resort to cunning and trickery to obtain their ends. Of course there is always a fascination in scenes which picture the great outdoors and many authors know this seems to have limit their stories around them, thus negating or being unable to develop the characters as a whole.

Blanche Sweet is a pretty star, but she is far from convincing in the roll she plays, as it offers no adequate opportunity to her.

She seems to the author’s lesson to be one to protect the sex in a time protect her stockholders’ interest. So she has had kidnapped and brought to the north woods where she taught him that the female of the species is more deadly than the male. After she had named him she promised to become his wife in order that they might fight life’s battles together.—Length 1 reel.—Frank Leonard

THE DREAM CHEATER
(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Balzac Story, Starring Kerrigan, Makes Clean Entertainment Picture

GOOD sets and a good cast support J. Warren Kerrigan in this interesting picture adapted from “The Wild As-Sk” by Balzac. The story has been made into an silent picture many years ago, is evidently modernized and Americanized. Apparently harsh conditions in France during the past century were somewhat parallel to those that exist in the United States today.

The star, as usual, is drawn in many close-ups to display his heart-breaking self to better advantage. However, although the story makes a fine drama, there is room in spots for more emotional acting than Kerrigan displays. The theme is a variation of the old “wishing lamp” plot, only this time it is a piece of real skin that is in shrivel with every wish until finally it will disappear, and the life of the wisher will end.

The star comes into possession of the skin, and like Mida’s with his touch of gold, finds it torturing him to death. Everything must be supplied, for if he wishes for even a match to light his cigarette, the parchment will shrivel and death come closer. Finally he succeeds in a bright idea, to cause the thing out of his life, and out it goes together with all his troubles. A pretty romance runs through it all, and various “types” are presented which are very well done.

Frizzi Brunette pleases the eye as Pauline Mahon, and in fact little fault can be found with the story. J. Warren Kerrigan plays to date the role, but not unusually entertaining although we see the hero’s wishes being fulfilled in a perfectly logical and natural manner.—Length 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

“The Dream Cheater,” an entertaining photoplay featuring the popular star, J. Warren Kerrigan, will play at this theatre on—of next—of next.

The picture is adapted from a story by the famous French master, Balzac. The star is cast as Brandon McShane, a young writer left almost destitute by the death of his father. He befriends his aids and takes a room in the home of Pauline Mahon and her mother in the tenement district. Here he falls under the influence of certain characters and is bewitched by a young widow.

The plot is this: He can cap her aside and another of her former admirers, an Oriental, presents the jilad lover with a magic skin, by means of which the possessor’s wishes come true. Balzac has never written a better story, and this picture is a most interesting comedy-drama of the year. The supernatural element in the picture does not destroy its interest. The star possesses an Oriental rug that grants its owner every wish, but the wishes come true in a perfectly natural manner in the logical sequence of events. You will never forget this picture that shows him the possessor of millions and a poverty stricken young writer.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have a number of Kerrigan admirers in your district, play him up big, for he really does well in this picture and he has a role that will suit his following.

In better advantage and that she plays her part in an up-to-date manner.

The story is taken from “The Wild As-Skin” by Balzac. Remember that Balzac enjoys a remarkable popularity in literature, but also remember that he wrote some books that are not in Sunday school libraries. So when using the author’s name, many people may not be familiar with it. Possibly a picture that shows him the possessor of millions and a poverty stricken young writer.

CATCH LINES

Like Mida’s, he had a magic gift, and like Midae, it meant his death. How he saved himself and returned to the girl he loved is shown in “The Dream Cheater.” It tells of a story made the live a hundred years ago. Kerrigan re-creates it on the screen 4-29.

"A MANHATTAN KNIGHT" (Fox)

Crook Melodrama Makes Lively Picture

PLACE a band of crooks in an underground den, gather together certain members of select society, add the valuable jewels, introduce a courageous hero, provide the long arm of the law with a number of policemen, mix well and you have a favorite recipe of crook melodramas. "A Manhattan Knight" may carry all these ingredients, but it is so highly spiced with strong action and travel at such a rapid tempo that it is bound to appeal even to the most jaded and indifferent viewer. George Beanger has made this picture a success through keeping in mind that the incidents must carry punch and suspense. George Walsh, the star, doesn't dominate the story here so well distributed are the several roles. In fact he fails to appear until the second reel.

A "Manhattan Knight" is as "instructive" as most crook melodramas, but it is also as enjoyable to see light. So much for a well Allahlujah continuity. The jewels provide the tangle of the plot and to gain possession of them a suicide is aided, a murder is more than indicated, and several "knew 'em down and dragged 'em out" scenes are introduced. Although the plot is penetrable there is considerable mystery attached to the separate groups of characters and an added hook is applied to make the hero eligible for romantic expression.

Mr. Walsh has his work cut out for him here and he executes it with all his familiar fireworks. He sails into the gangsters single-handed and comes up smiling. The romance doesn't have much of a chance to establish itself. But that is of no consequence. What is important is that the hero's adventures are highly amusing and that he is in tune with action. Assisting the star in giving color to his best work to date are Virginia Hammond and Louis Wolheim. Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

John Fenton, George Walsh, strawberry-stemmed; Gordon Brewster, John Hoskins, whom George Walsh acquires; Crook Butler, the peccadillo, Adam, The Mule. A Medium, Cedric Ellis; Detective, Jack Raymond; Margaret O'Shea, Louis R. Wolheim, a swell detective; Steel Pigon, Walter Mann; His Daughter, W. A. Sullivan; Her Sweetheart, L. J. O'Connor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Manhattan Knight," founded upon the successful novel by Gelett Burgess, will be offered at the new theatre on thursday night in the title role, the star, George Walsh, in the title role. There is in the picture everything that the public has come to expect from a Gelett Burgess story: an alluring plot, highly amusing situation, and a story that will provide interest for both the children and the adults. The script is rich in dialogue and humor, and the cast is excellent. There are several well-known characters that the public will recognize from the story.

The offering is with one exception the mellow story that Mr. Walsh has taken. The picture appears to be well produced and to be in tune with action. Assisting the star in giving color to his best work to date are Virginia Hammond and Louis Wolheim. Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

"ALARM CLOCK ANDY" (Ince-Paramount-Arctraft)

Charles Ray Scores Again as Bashful Youth

If there is one actor capable of appearing indefinitely in a part which his face fits, he is Charles Ray, who as Andy in "East Lynne" and "The Country Doctor," has been able to portray this character with such success that the audience can recognize no difference in his performance. Few actors can carry off this character with such success because the role is not unlike that of a young man who is bashful and inarticulate but who on occasion has the ability to express his feelings. Charles Ray has this ability and can carry off the role with such success that the audience is left with the impression that the character is not unlike the actor.

The story is set in a small town in the west where Andy, played by Charles Ray, is a wealthy young man who is in love with a local girl. Despite his wealth and social standing, Andy is bashful and inarticulate, but he is determined to win the girl's heart. The story is told through a series of scenes that depict Andy's life in the town, and through these scenes the audience is able to see how Andy grows and matures.

"The Country Doctor" is a sequel to "East Lynne," and the story is set in the same town. Andy is now married and has a family, but he still struggles with his bashful nature. The story is told through a series of scenes that depict Andy's life in the town, and through these scenes the audience is able to see how Andy grows and matures.

The casts of both "East Lynne" and "The Country Doctor" are excellent, and the actors are able to carry off their roles with such success that the audience is left with the impression that the characters are real people. The settings of both stories are well done, and the costumes are accurate to the time period.

The stories are well written, and the scripts are able to capture the essence of the characters and the town. The stories are well directed, and the actors are able to carry off their roles with such success that the audience is left with the impression that the characters are real people. The stories are well written, and the scripts are able to capture the essence of the characters and the town. “SINNERS”

(Realart)

Director Missed Chance to Make Big Picture

H ere is a picture which had enough sound elements to make a "small edition" picture. "The Miracle Man," but the director failed to grasp his opportunity. While he has turned out a fairly interesting subject, still the chance was his to give the screen something worthwhile had he realized the value of the theme and moral. "Sinner" is a "redemption" picture with the old, old story of the country girl who migrates to the city, sees the sights, gets caught up in the clutter and excitement of its life before she returns home, repentant and changed, to the love of her native heart, with the knowledge that this little stunt has "improved" her toward the ways of sin. He saved from the primrose path through an urgent appeal from her dying mother.

Having not seen the original play we cannot say how faithfully it is adapted. It is a story of the written word and the artist who is the stage property whose name she came in contact with, that is no reason why the director couldn't have improved upon it and conceived it upon a "Miracle Man" foundation. He has missed a fine opportunity and the construction he has placed upon it is full of loopholes. The gay crow from the city is a difficult one to capture with a country and forced to sacrifice some of his usual lucid details. The hero is drawn as a colorless individual who is not redeemed because he is good at heart. Why he should submit to the insulity offered the girl by the village hypocrite, who professes to love her, is inexplicable. This end is outrageously overdrawn and his counterpart never existed in real life. Why he should return home here as though a star of old and bring about his transformation? Why not have made a girl a genuine sinner? It is logical that she became one. Mist we gloss over truth? If picturegoers were given it occasionally they might grow to like it. And so the really fine moral that is woven in this story is lost. Half-hearted sinner cannot win sympathy. The picture is charming in its atmosphere and backgrounds and the acting of Miss Brady and her players is entirely capable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most entertaining photographs which Alice Brady, the Realart star, has yet been seen, will be shown at the —— theatre beginning—.

It is inspired by a certain phase upon the stage play of the same name, written by Owen Davis, in which Miss Brady achieved one of her greatest dramatic successes. The character is a difficult one to secure, but Owen Davis has come out excelling contrasts. The gay life of the city is set against the dignity and whole- some-ness of country life and there are some delicate and sensitive situations where the young man who goes to the city to seek work, fails to find that he is befriended by a woman of questionable reputation.

Failing to find her, he is befriended by a woman of questionable reputation. Failing to find her, he is befriended by Alice Brady, as Miss Brady's character is portrayed in the play. It is a difficult character to combine with them, to win over the audience, leads to false accusations and some practically impossible situations. The story develops through a trip the sinner makes to the home of the girl, after she has refused to return home, and carries a good moral and such elements as heart appeal and pathos.

Miss Brady contributes a convincing performance in the leading role and plays with considerable charm and naturalness. Her cast includes James L. Crane, Agnes Everett, Lorraine Srost, William P. Carleton, Frank Louse, Crauford Kent, and Robert Schable. Kenneth Webb directed the feature from a scenario by Eve Unsell.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the —— theatre have long since accepted Alice Brady as one of their favorite players. The management takes great pleasure in announcing, therefore, that included in the coming attractions scheduled for exhibition at the theatre, is "Sinner." Miss Brady's latest picture, adapted from Owen Davis' story, has appeared successfully for several months, the subject offers an hour of interesting entertainment. Miss Brady appears at a certain stage of her development, and the picture is fraught with situations which are highly dramatic and gripping. In the star's company are such capable players as James L. Crane, Frank Louse, Crauford Kent and Robert Schable. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

In announcing "Sinner" all that you should really need is a line to the effect that Alice Brady plays a woman of the wrong type in the country, who is befriended by a woman of questionable reputation, who is then found by the gay life of the city to be set against the dignity and wholesomeness of country life. The story develops through a trip the sinner makes to the home of the girl, after she has refused to return home, and carries a good moral and such elements as heart appeal and pathos.

Mystery Tale Has Interesting Elements Which Should Excite

A good program feature with enough thrills, love interest and suspense to carry it through and excite the attention. The star of his madoll self and gives a splendid performance of the young officer who, returning home from the front, finds that the epitome of a peaceful life have no charm for him, his inclinations laying in the direction of excitement and the joys obtained from it. Opportunity comes to him in the form of a job to his liking, a detective work which he employs to make amends for the mischief which may have entered his life. The problem is that of finding out the secrets which are bringing it to him. This is accomplished only after he has had many narrow escapes and thrilling encounters. And his reward is the hand of the girl whose father he had served.

The story is not new to the screen, as the theme has been used many times heretofore and appears to be overdrawn in many places. Still it is one of those mystery tales which if told well and the parts given to the hands of capable actors will always make a good impression.

And we must say that the cast, which includes such well-known players as Tom Moore, Christine Mayo, Ethel Stevens and Lionel Belmore, is an excellent one.

Proper direction also lends its charm to the picture, which, for detail in the arrangement of interiors, whether elaborate or mediocre, could not be bettered. The acting of all the players could be faulted, which gives the proper atmosphere to the story at all times. The lighting is up to standard.

All told, this picture should play most any house and interest.

Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore will appear in the leading role in his latest Goldwyn feature, "Duds." This is a mystery story containing all the elements of a well written story and is considered to be one of the best pictures of the year. It has thrills, love interest and enough suspense to carry it through and excite the attention of any audience.

Tom Moore in the title role is his usual self and gives a splendid performance of the young officer who, returning home from the front, finds that the pursuits of a peaceful life have no charm for him. As Captain Plunkett he accepts a dangerous job to find the murderer of a woman in the war swept area. After many difficult and dangerous adventures he succeeds in locating the precious gem which is hung from a chain on his sweetheart's neck, concealed in a pocket in which he has been carrying, which he never dreamed that the diamond was inside. The villains have escaped the heroine and are on the verge of being captured when the young man, in a thrilling manner, saves his precious gift.

Tom Moore never had a better vehicle in which to exploit his abilities and he has taken advantage of every point, never missing fire once, in this thriller of thrilling thrills.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Moore, Goldwyn's popular star, will play this theatre on --- of next week in his latest feature, "Duds." It is a mystery story containing enough thrills, love interest and suspense to carry it through and excite the attention of any audience.

It is also admitted that this is the best Tom Moore production to date, for the role he plays his better than any he has had in some time and gives him leeway to display his various talents, which become cramped if not given liberty to broaden out.

As Captain Plunkett, a young officer who has returned from the war and who is dissatisfied with the conventionalities of modern life, he is at his best. He does not care for the peaceful pursuits but turns more to the adventurous activities. Opportunity comes to him in the form of a job to his liking, a detective, who is employed to unravel a deep mystery. He solves the problem, which is that of finding the smugglers who are bringing diamonds from country to country. But this is accomplished only after he has had many narrow escapes and thrilling encounters, in which he rescues the heroine from the clutches of the villains and also saves the Smugglers so that the diamond which was in her possession is not lost but is the hand of the girl whose father he had served.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this feature lay stress on the fact that it is a mystery story with plenty of thrills, love interest and suspense. Although this story is nothing new it is well written, has good direction and a cast which could make up a story of this kind, still the interest is there and you can go far as you like. You can play this up as a package of the new and the conventional.

Also play up Tom Moore, for he gives a good performance of the young officer who is dissatisfied with the conventionalities of modern life, and the way in which he is being strung along while making his way back to his dear one. Tell your patrons that this is a new story written from a different angle and shows the star to good advantage, as it gives him room to broaden out and use all his talents.

have been asking for something "different" every day for years.

There have been a few really "different" and really good, practical ideas in moving pictures. 100% of them have been 100% successes from the viewpoint of all of these fans, all of these exhibitors and all of these producers.

"COMEDYART" is the latest and greatest of really "different," really good practical ideas.

8000 of the fastest thinking exhibitors have recognized it. Their inquiries have been received and referred to our branches, and their contracts are already flooding our offices.

Where do YOU stand in this list? YOU also have our postage-prepaid inquiry cards. There is still time to get in on the ground floor. Put it off and forget it, or use the card NOW and win with us.

is the 1400-foot comedy part of our first "COMEDYART" production released March 28th. For 1300 feet of rollicking, situation and classy slapstick comedy, there is not a subtitle nor a face on the screen. NOTHING BUT FEET. It is as "different" from the usual comedy as day is from night, and it's a knockout that will make your house the talk of the town.

GOD'S COUNTRY

is the 400-foot Artcolor with this release. It is stunning. It makes men think deep; it raises them out of themselves, it leaves them happy. When God fashioned the earth, His most awe-inspiring work became the "Rockies"—the backbone of the Americas. That's where this comes from. And because our Color process, latest child of Science, is fully protected by patents, you can bet that this is "different."

This 200-foot Novelty is a riot. A "different" comparison of yesterday's "rum-hounds" with today's "powder-puff-fans." Yes, it's "different."

2000 feet of "different" value. Use that card right now, and a "different" kind of price will reach you in a hurry.

Leroy Scott’s famous story of underworld life has been made into a picture that is the last word in speed and excitement. A splendid attraction for any theatre!
“Trimmed with Red” is Trimmed with Laughs

“Comrade” Madge Kennedy, partially concealed behind a fake harem veil and flowing robe, effectually wrecks the plans of the Greenwich Village parlor radicals to paint society a bright red.

Meanwhile, her sweetheart has cornered the market in army mules, and this most delicious of farces ends in a burst of sunshine.

It is the sort of picture every audience loves—for the simple reason that every audience loves to laugh.

THE OPEN DOOR TO LARGER PROFITS

A thousand possibilities will not make one truth, but one truth can make a thousand sales possible.

Five years ago, when Inter-Ocean Film Corporation first came into being, it occupied an insignificant suite of offices; today, the expansion of its export business has necessitated the exclusive use of a five-story building. Success has crowned its efforts all along the way.

The reason for Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's unparalleled success as an export house can be traced in its honest and conscientious dealings in behalf of the American Producer and the Foreign Film Buyer. Punctual and reliable in its transactions, upright to its clients on the suitableness of American Productions in specified territories, it has merited the confidence and esteem as the export house of satisfaction and service of the motion picture industry.

Besides its thorough and practical knowledge of the American market as related to foreign territories, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation possesses unusual facilities for export distribution, which are at the disposal of all producers who seek intelligent and profitable foreign representation.

Inter-Ocean Film Building is truly the open door to larger profits.

A Statement of Purpose & Policy by Associated Exhibitors Inc.
OVER a year ago a group of exhibitors, forward-looking men, realizing the well-nigh universal dissatisfaction with conditions in The Motion Picture industry, organized “Associated Exhibitors Inc.,” an association for protection and profit, based on mutual confidence and simple justice for all.
"CO-OPERATION" may be defined as the working together of two or more people for their mutual benefit. The ideal of Associated Exhibitors then is simply a closer co-operation between those concerned in both the production and exhibition of motion pictures.

Primarily its object is to accomplish a more equitable distribution of profits—by eliminating the superfluous middlemen whose actual contribution to production and exhibition is nothing.

By dealing directly with producers, stars, directors and authors, making everyone a partner in production and marketing, the Association hopes to knit the industry into a more harmonious whole.

By offering to those concerned in production a just share of the actual income from a picture it hopes to stimulate the creation of better pictures.

By establishing a basis of confidence and fair dealing, the Association expects to establish a new relationship between the forces of production and those of exhibition.

Its ideal is to keep faith with producers, stars, authors, exhibitors and audiences—by giving more.
WHAT IT MEANS TO EXHIBITORS

THIS organization was conceived and is directed by exhibitors—it knows and is in sympathy with the exhibitor’s problems and requirements. To him it offers a unique opportunity to secure the best pictures and the guidance of the most successful exhibitors.
THE membership of the Association includes men who control over 200 of the largest and best theatres in the country—the counsel of these men will guide its policy.

Thus the Association's ideals are tempered with solid, practical knowledge; guided by tried business principles; founded on experience—the only basis for enduring success.

THAT its ideals will be attained is assured by the prominence of its members, the financial resources and influence wielded by such an association of interests—an influence that will increase with the growth of the Association.

Membership in the Association is open to all exhibitors, who are invited to share a full measure of the benefits and profits of the Association by securing sub-franchises.

The value of these sub-franchises is such that the number immediately available will be taken up in a short time. It is, therefore, advisable that exhibitors who are interested should act without delay.

Detailed information may be obtained by communicating with the home office of the corporation in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York.
WHAT IT MEANS TO STARS

IN the final analysis it is the star’s popularity with the public that brings money into the box-office—the star’s name which actually creates profits. But between the box-office and the star today stretches a long line of middlemen, each taking his toll.
DISSATISFACTION with this condition is evident from attempts which have been made by combinations of stars to deal directly with exhibitors.

HERE then is the opportunity which the star has wanted—a practical means of dealing directly with the leading exhibitors—an assurance of showing in the finest theatres, to audiences accustomed to the best entertainment—such showings as will supplement the art and enhance the reputation of the star—exploitation which will hold and increase the star’s own standing.

THE object of the Associated Exhibitors is better productions as a whole, therefore, the star will be given every advantage in the way of adequate support and artistic staging throughout.

In addition, the star will participate in the actual profits of every release—will receive a just proportion of the value created by his or her ability and popularity.

The resources, standing and influence of this organization are so great that association with it will be attractive to stars of the first magnitude.

Artists are invited to communicate with the home office in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York, for more detailed information.
WHAT IT MEANS TO PRODUCERS

It is obvious that conditions obtaining at present in the motion picture industry afford only a limited incentive for producers to improve the quality of pictures, for the producer’s reward is rarely based upon the true worth of his accomplishment.
SINCE it is impossible to predict in advance the degree of success or box-office value a picture will achieve, producers too often receive less than their just due—it is easy to see who gets the advantage in this guessing contest.

The foundation for better pictures rests with the producer—no one but he can improve the quality of his own product and he must be encouraged to do so by the certainty that his efforts will be adequately rewarded.

THE most equitable arrangement possible is that now offered to producers by the Associated Exhibitors—that is, an actual partnership in the profits. Unquestionably this is a more liberal and fair basis of dealing than has ever before been open to the producer—an assurance of reward commensurate with the true excellence and popularity of his picture.

A still further advantage to the producer results from the fact that his creations are assured of a showing in the finest theatres of the country, before discriminating audiences and under the very best conditions.

Producers who are interested in the benefits of this new Association are invited to communicate with the home office in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York.
WHAT IT MEANS TO DIRECTORS

THOUGH there are undoubtedly many directors in the country who have the ability and the knowledge to produce pictures of genuine merit the number who are actually doing so is small enough to be counted on the fingers of one hand.
All too often is this due to the restrictions under which the director is forced to work—restrictions imposed by various forces to whom the director is now subservient.

These restrictions have grown with the growth of the industry and the tendency toward centralization of control in a few hands.

The truth of this is but emphasized by the outstanding success of a tiny handful of directors who have managed to divorce themselves from these handicaps.

Recognizing the fact that freedom of action is the first essential to the creation of better pictures, the Associated Exhibitors offer to directors of ability the opportunity of working under conditions which will afford full scope to their creative powers.

In addition to this freedom of creative opportunity directors are offered, for the first time, the opportunity to participate in the profits of their creations on the just basis of a share of the actual box-office receipts.

Directors who are interested in the opportunity to create better pictures as well as in their profits, are invited to communicate with the home office, Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

Pathé Distributors
THE foundation of the photoplay is the story—without it stars, producers, directors, are powerless. Without good stories it is obviously impossible to produce pictures of true dramatic value and artistic merit. On the author rests the structure of the motion picture industry.
THE importance of the story has been consistently underestimated and seldom have authors concerned in the writing of successful photoplays received a reward truly commensurate with their contribution to that success. The returns have not been comparable with those from a successful play or book.

Many excellent stories have been garbled or inadequately staged in pictures, and this has deterred authors of standing from permitting their works to be screened.

For this reason the standard of stories available for motion picture production has been lowered inmeasurably.

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors by dealing directly with authors, eliminating the waste and the restrictions incident to present methods, feel that the greater rewards thus made possible will result in a standard of stories worthy of adequate production.

To this end their arrangements with authors will be such as to assure to the writer his just share of the returns, and a guarantee of worthy production and casting. This reward will be based upon a profit-sharing basis—a percentage of the actual box-office value.

Associated Exhibitors Inc., invite correspondence from authors of merit. Correspondence should be directed to the home office, Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

Speaking of

MASTER WORK OF GRIFFITH

"Again the magic, which in this case is another term for the imaginative insight of David Wark Griffith, manifest in the new film at the Strand Theatre. 'The Idol Dancer' is a work that takes its place in the growing list of master works by this arch wizzard. Here is a story of the South Seas told with all the tropical wealth which the story demands. The watcher, lost in enchantment, rides the surf of the Pacific, wanders in the tangled jungles, watches with many thrills the head-hunters and the cannibals. Mr. Griffith's genius is not only apparent in the excellent picture but in the alluring quality of the presentation."—New York Telegram.

FULL OF EXCITEMENT

"A pretentious photoplay. A background of scantily clad natives with an attack by cannibals led by a villainous white, which furnishes enough excitement for a dozen films, and a succession of beautiful scenes which are a delight to the eyes."—New York Evening Post.

DANCING SOUTH SEA BEAUTY

"The Idol Dancer is a dancing beauty of the South Seas. The conflict between the characters involved, staged by the artistic hand of Mr. Griffith, makes the picture very entertaining."—New York Evening Sun.

REMARKABLY ATTRACTIVE

"The atmosphere of the production indicates that Mr. Griffith both knew what he was doing and gave all his attention to doing it. Clarine Seymour makes Mary (the Idol Dancer) remarkably attractive."—New York Evening Mail.

THEATRE IS CROWDED

"Filled the Strand for the first showing of the cinema-conjurer's much heralded new picture. Interest is carried through the tale of Mary's half cl ad posturing and dancing."—New York Morning Telegraph.

Day in History of the Strand

"The Idol Dancer"

GRIFFITH DOES IT AGAIN

"Mr. Griffith has gone and done it again! Twangling upon the harp of life with all his might, he has made a pictorial love story of the tropic seas. Clarine Seymour is a big hit in the Griffith film. She fits very well into the role of the maid who dances wild, strange dances to her devil-devil and who wears a sort of super Hawaiian costume."—New York News.

A REAL THRILLER

"A real old fashioned thriller."—New York Morning World.

SHE IS SOME DANCER

"Exciting enough to make one want to go away and beat up a Bolshevik. Miss Clarine Seymour, who attracted notice in her Broadway 'movie' debut by her wriggle, is the logical candidate for the role of the hula hula dancer, and plays the part well, especially with her diaphragm."—The Sun and New York Herald.

PICTURE THAT'S DIFFERENT

"Mr. Griffith may be commended for another effort to keep out of the rut worn deep by others."—New York Times.

A VOLCANIC DANCER

"A great deal of beauty. Some of the scenes are like a flaming Winslow Homer canvas, and others are like a particularly wild night in the 'Cocanut Grove' roof garden. But it is possible to enjoy Winslow Homer and the coconut cabaret with equal enthusiasm, and from the burst of applause which followed the picture you would gather that Mr. Griffith has not lost his discriminating audience in his appeal to the gallery gods.

"The exotic setting, the frenzied love story, and, most of all, the dance motif which runs through the entire film, were obviously woven around the personality of Clarine Seymour, the latest Griffith discovery. She is a volcanic little creature, with provocative eyes and movements, and as the idol dancer she is the symbol of the smouldering, ominous tropical nights. Her dance shocked all the missionaries in the cast and perhaps some in the audience.

"Richard Barthelmess as the handsome, scawling young derelict made an instant appeal as he dared the audience to reform him. The remainder of the cast has the usual level of perfection under the Griffith direction."—New York Globe.

"O, God! Why should this happen to me?"
for Sorrow and Suffering, that are the lot of all women.

is Experience that refines the Soul of all women.
is the great Unknown in the fascinating game of Life.

J. PARKER READ, Jr. becomes one of the greatest of all creative producers with the release of "SEX."

LOUISE GLAUM becomes what she has been growing to be for the past six months—the screen's greatest and most successful emotional star.

FRED NIBLO goes many steps forward and will be reckoned with henceforth as one of the greatest of directors.

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN has never before in his distinguished career written a story so big, so enthralling as "SEX."

FIVE SUPPORTING STARS do the biggest work of their careers in "SEX," reflecting the splendid liberality of Miss Glaum in desiring all of the players to have their share of success.

"SEX" is not merely powerful and technically fine—it is commercially sure-fire and artistically amazing. And in treatment it is as wholesome and genuine as a mother's embrace.
In "SEX" J. Parker Read, Jr. has produced, C. Gardner Sullivan has written and LOUISE GLAUM has acted the picture extraordinary. It is a picture for supershowmen. No exhibitor who is a poor showman ought to be permitted to book and play "Sex."

The story in "Sex" is the story of life with all of its mad, glad realistic garb; with irresistible "punches" here and there and a gloriously adequate cast to put these punches over.

Some of the trade press critics have been duly shocked—all have been startled by "Sex." The value of the trade press reviews of "Sex" to the exhibitors who book this production could not be duplicated or equalled by the spending of Fifty Thousand dollars.

"Sex" is pre-released April 11 for two-week or one-week engagements only.

We are asking high rentals and it is worth higher rentals than we ask.

Tod Browning’s Triumph

In booking the "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" be sure to give this really huge production at least twice your ordinary run. We do not want to over-sell you on any picture but the simple fact is that "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" is one of those gorgeous, glowing, mind-filling photo-dramas like "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Birth of a Nation" which instantly lay hold of the public imagination and grow bigger in box-office power with each day’s showing. For this reason, you ought to net more from "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" than you have netted from anything else except, possibly, the other two productions mentioned. Do your big work in advertising this marvelously acted and masterfully directed super-drama right at the start—you’ll hardly have to turn a hand after you’ve opened. But don’t write us after it’s all over, saying that you could have run it for another week at the same profit. Book that other week now. Why let the other fellow clean up later on your advertising?

THE GREATEST NOVELTY REEL EVER PRODUCED

What the Reel Is
Within a few weeks, Universal will release a 1000-foot novelty reel. This release will consist of a number of startlingly old and original subjects. The entire world is being combed for material which will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons possessing even the most jaded of appetites. It will be a combination of humor, travel and adventure. It will contain examples of marvelous trick photography, the like of which the industry has heretofore never seen.

The Name We Want
We want a New NAME that will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons of every degree, from the type of audiences which attend the palatial picture palaces, to those whose sole amusement resort is the 200-seat house. The name should be short and distinctive. Under no circumstances will a name in which the word "magazine" appears be considered.

Terms of the Contest
This contest is for the single prize of $250. It is open to Exhibitors only. There are no other prizes. It costs nothing to enter it. There is no limit on the number of names you may suggest. IF MORE THAN ONE EXHIBITOR SUGGESTS THE NAME SELECTED BY THE JUDGES, AN AMOUNT EQUAL TO THAT OF THE PRIZE WILL BE AWARDED TO EACH OF THE WINNERS.

Contest Period
The contest for this $250 prize for the best name to be given Universal's wonder-reel, opens with the publication of this advertisement in the current issue of this trade paper. IT CLOSES FRIDAY, APRIL 30th. All suggestions must be in the hands of Universal by midnight of that date.

Write your suggestions on one side of the paper only, and be sure to give the name and address of your theatre. Write clearly and legibly. Lists of names not containing the name and address of your theatre will not be considered.

THE JUDGES
In selecting the Judges for this contest, Universal has obtained the services of three men who are known wherever motion pictures are shown. Their decision will be announced as soon as possible after the closing of the contest. They are:

The capacity of the PALISADE LABORATORIES is 1,500,000 feet per week. The dead line, however, is 1,000,000 feet, and we will not, under any circumstances, print more than this amount. We are thus enabled to give extraordinary attention to everything we turn out.

At the present time we are open for approximately 300,000 feet per week. Our past performances have caused us to be known as

We do not use any so-called “developing machines,” nor do we turn out our product with a sausage grinder, therefore our slogan is

We have seen so much in motion picture advertising, and in fact in all advertising, about the “biggest,” the “greatest” and the “finest,” until the words have all but lost their power to describe.

We make this statement as a foreword to explain our embarrassment in an effort to really tell the entertainment quality of Mr. Fox’s newest picture in which Tom Mix is the star. Its title is DESERT LOVE but the title doesn’t even begin to suggest the importance and the value of the offering.

In our opinion DESERT LOVE is far and away the supreme production of all of the Tom Mix successes.
About Mr. Fox's Star Mr. Mix

Against a background of a fine story the action of the play proceeds with certainty and swiftness and there follow a series of amazing climaxes so tense, so startling, so appealing as to carry you out of yourself and into the very action of the picture.

To detail the story might mar the treat that is in store for you because in DESERT LOVE that daredevil of a Tom Mix gives you surprises that are absolutely amazing, even for a Mix picture.

Don't take anybody's word for this production—see it yourself. We know the result.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS
Concerning an Emotional Actress

When William Fox selected Madeleine Traverse from among many artists he had in mind her remarkable ability to portray emotional roles with power and fascinating charm. His judgment has been more than proved in plays that have gone before.

In her newest vehicle, "THE TATTLERS," Miss Traverse reaches the zenith of her extraordinary genius as an actress.

We desire in this modest manner to register this important point with exhibitors everywhere that they may know the value of this really great attraction.
In a Play that's Totally Different

The story of "THE TATTLERS" is so vivid, so real, so absorbing, that it will rank with the great successes of the screen.

The far-sighted showman will play it and advertise it as he would a great special because it has class atmosphere, size and beauty as a background for its remarkable dramatic action.

We are moved to congratulate exhibitors in advance upon a motion picture that will bring rich rewards in money and additional prestige to every theatre that shows it.

Gentlemen:

Permit me to congratulate you upon the announcement that Miss Wanda Hawley is to be starred in pictures produced under the Realart Brand.

I am delighted also at the opportunity given Miss Hawley to star, for I feel that she has long since merited a stellar position in the film world.

In a number of my special productions, notably "Old Wives For New," "We Can't Have Everything" and "For Better, For Worse," Miss Hawley has evidenced the possession of more than ordinary talent, and of a whimsical, ingenuous charm which renders her work and her screen presence wholly individual.

I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the entire motion picture field and I can only reiterate that I heartily concur with your judgment in engaging her for stellar purposes in Realart productions.

We hope every independent exchange man and producer will read the interview on Page 3069 with A. Dresser, of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Dresser voices a protest which is frequently heard from territorial buyers whom we meet in the Times Square district. Whether it is justified or not is a question that remains for the discussion we hope to arouse to settle.

True it is that state rights buyers are prone to complain—about pictures, prices, percentages and territories. Complaining comes easy to a man who is buying. And it can't always be possible to read behind his words to his real intentions.

But on the point of territorial divisions, the exchange man is armed with actual knowledge of his field and is apparently discussing a subject that does not entirely concern price and purchase.

So—with our fingers crossed—we are hoping for a real five discussion on the point raised by Mr. Dresser in this issue. If there is room for improvement in the division and apportioning of state rights territories—what better way to secure it then from the men who sell the pictures and the men who buy them?

At no time has such discussion been more needed than at present, when all signs point to an unusually active and healthy independent market. Anything that can promote real business talk about this field is of value. Progress that would have come long ago has been retarded by the fact that too many state rights men are prone to guesswork and catch-as-catch-can conversation to hide both facts and the lack of them.

THE DIFFERENCE

AS FAR as the exhibitor is concerned there is just one difference between posters—some sell tickets, and some don’t! The RITCHEY poster does! It does because it always has the maximum of advertising value. It has that quality because the keenest poster advertising experts in America contribute their best efforts to it. Their efforts are blended and harmonized, are made effective and potent, through the leadership of the greatest poster expert in the world!

The RITCHEY poster is as colorful as a flower show. It is as attractive as a magnet. In its design and execution it is absolutely true to nature. Therefore it is convincing. Because it is convincing it sells the maximum number of seats. Therefore it is a boon to the exhibitor!

To make the RITCHEY poster the finest poster that it is possible to make, neither time, nor thought, nor effort, nor expense is spared—for the money that the distributor might save by using cheap posters, the exhibitor would lose a hundred fold at his box-office. All motion picture poster experience has demonstrated this one truth:—RITCHEY posters pay!

"Continuity's" Important Place

Better theatres are springing up—everywhere—in the face of almost a prohibitive building situation. Better exhibitors are behind them. A better class audience will fill their seats—provided better pictures are made.

Never before was the need for better pictures more vital. And we shall have them.

The policy of greatly increased production is increasing picture quality and the policy is now a general one. It is significant, for instance, that Thomas H. Ince, whose well built organization is probably better prepared than any other to turn out good pictures fast will shortly adopt a policy of but six pictures a year.

It is generally realized today that one producing unit—and this unit must have a producer at the head of it—should not turn out more than four or six pictures a year.

But we are also in the midst of another sharp change in production—one not so broadly economic but very vital nevertheless to better pictures.

We have previously referred to this change; we mean the selection of a theme altogether suited to picture expression; and then the elaborate and sincere preparation of this theme for the camera.

Looking back upon Los Angeles, however, this new phase in production—it is new only because it is being more generally adopted assumes even greater importance.

Let us state again just what we mean. We mean story creation and preparation; not these elements separately but together. They must be together—a closely related operation. One doesn't get far without the other. A good picture story will be lost if it isn't well prepared for picturization; and, vice versa, good preparation can't do much for a story not meant for pictures.

For comparison, let us say that the story and its preparation is like the steel framework of a modern building. The other operations should follow smoothly once the builders have this perfect and indestructible skeleton to add to.

So with a picture, the camera should never click till this indispensable framework is finally complete and inspection proof. And we might add that this work takes months not weeks. It is the foremost argument for fewer pictures—and better ones. And it takes brains, too; not merely brains to produce the theme but brains to adapt it to pictures—and just as good brains.

We trust we make our point clear.

Most anyone will say today that the story is the thing. So there is an indiscriminate rush to buy the best stories. The market is combed for best known books, best known plays, best known authors' names, best known short stories (via the Saturday Evening Post circulation route). And any old prices are paid.

But does "best known" mean best for pictures? Certainly not. If the story wasn't created for picture expression, it isn't capable of expression in pictures nothing will save it from mediocrity.

Then the next common step is to turn the high priced vehicle over for adaptation to pictures, to someone who may lack the ability to create a "best known" book or play or story. And this individual—also for a goodly price—does the work possibly in two weeks, probably, in over time. Good pictures will never be made this way; high cost failures will abound.

It seems to us that a capable producing unit today has got to be built upon, or around, a staff capable of, equally capable of, creative and continuity work—in other words the creation of picture themes and their finished preparation for the camera. And it seems to us that producing units will turn out good or poor pictures, according, very largely, as they possess such staffs.

We are not decrying stars, or casts, or directors, or studio facilities or any other such very important picture essentials. Speaking of directors, by the way, there is much confusion, today, on this subject. The tendency is to class as directors men who are really producers, men who, even though they may direct, also select themes and supervise continuity—as the producer should and must.

We mean, simply, that the story and its preparation is the basis—the indispensable basis of the picture. Other values are added values.

In closing may we cite again the statement of Marcus Loew, who in our opinion has summed up present production in the best and fewest words: "We won't make mistakes in production," said he. "Pictures will be good or poor according to their themes."

But we would add: "According, also and equally, to the preparation of their themes."

Independents Meet in Chicago to Form Body

With the earlier steps taken in harmony, and adequate financial backing, the meetings held in Chicago the week ending March 27, gave promise of the development of an important organization of independent producers and exchange men.

The sessions were called by Joe Brandon, president for organization which would assure close co-operation and economy in production and distribution were designated first by each group separately and then in joint session.

The primary objects sought were to secure a constant and adequate supply of pictures for independent exchange men at fair prices, and an assured market for producers' output at a legitimate profit. Producers attending the meeting included Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow Film; Jack Cohan, A. I. Sawyer, R. Edy, Eckles, H. L. Barnhardt of Capital; Joe Brant, Al Chester, Harry Sherman, Louis Burston, Murray W. Garson and Marion Kohl.

Sunday Closing Finds No Friends in New York

At the instigation, presumably of the New York State Motion Picture League, a bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature during the past few days by Assemblyman Hunter, which has for its purpose the closing of all motion picture houses in this State on Sunday. The bill has been referred to the Codes Committee and it is generally expected that it will not be reported from that committee until April 24, and will thereby die.

Among senators and assemblymen, there is said to be little or no sentiment in favor of the bill. Mr. Hunter is a newcomer in the Assembly and he was secured to father the measure only after several others had been interviewed and had turned down the proposition. The legislators asserted that on account of the excellent manner in which motion picture theatres were now being conducted in their own cities on Sundays, they could not consistently support Mr. Hunter's bill.

Y.M.C.A. Committee to CANVAS INDUSTRY

Fifteen thousand dollars is the share of the million and a half dollar Y. W. C. A. campaign in New York apportioned to the motion picture industry. The committee has the endorsement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Under the chairmanship of Miss Rose Tapley, plans are rapidly materializing for a thorough canvass of the studios and exchanges in New York.

BROADWAY FILMS TAKES OVER LARGE PLANT

For some time past rumors of big film deals in Europe have been rife, but the first to bear fruit is the one concerning Broadway Films. This British firm has taken over the entire control of the Windsor Film Co., Ltd. This deal is highly important to the British producers.

Federal Commission Investigates Saenger Co.

INVESTIGATION of the Federal Trade Commission into the charge that the Saenger Amusement Company is operating a monopoly in the retail trade in New Orleans was started March 23, with Charles Rosen, attorney for the company, urging a continuance of the case out of date.

Mr. Rosen protested the defense had been unable to get its witnesses to New Orleans, W. T. Roberts, examiner for the Federal Commission, said, to show that Saenger had an agreement with certain motion picture concerns by which those who did not recognize the Saenger Booking Agency were refused films by those who dealt with Saenger.

Details of the conflict of the Saenger Company and the Independent Exhibitors Corporation were gone into at length.

A number of exhibitors and exchange men testified to the effect that the Saenger interfered with their business. J. Eugene Pechak, who runs an exchange in Shreveport, testified that "if the Saengers did not resort to pernicious practices, and sold film in the open market, he and other distributors could make from $600 to $800 more a week.

Among others, a woman exhibitor, Mrs. J. A. Bevitt, said that she had been refused pictures by Goldwyn, Metro, First National and Paramount, when a new theatre, alleged to be run by one of the members of the Saengers, opened. This despite she had for three years run these brands.

During an interview, E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Company, by George McCorkle, Government's attorney, on March 23, bad feeling cropped out, almost resulting in a battle. Richards insisted throughout the hearing the Saengers were not guilty of forcing a sale of their films to the other motion picture men from operating, although he did say the Saengers, for their own purposes and with exclusiveness, had signed contracts by which pictures could be used by them only.

The first hearing in this case was held almost eighteen months ago.

Association Acts Quickly to Help Exhibitors

Prompt action last week on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry saved the exhibitors of Texas from a very serious situation, and stopped a movement which, if it had been permitted to spread throughout the country, might have cost the industry many millions of dollars each year.

By an arbitrary order issued by a local express official at Dallas, Tex., all in and out express service on motion picture films for Sundays was to be eliminated on March 21st.

P. H. Stilson, chairman of the Transportation Committee of the National Association, called a special meeting of the committee for Tuesday, and on Thursday an order was issued rescinding the closing order, and film shipments in and out of the Dallas exchanges can be made as formerly.
W. A. Johnston have called forth expressions of hearty endorsement from various sources within the industry. The following statement, received from Roy L. Manker, general manager of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, voices a warm approval of the content and spirit of Mr. Johnston's editorial on "The Film Story of the Future," which appeared in the issue of February 28th. Mr. Manker writes:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

Your editorial, 'The Film Story of the Future,' has deeply impressed the writer with the undeniable fact that you are possessed of an intimate insight into the greatest problem the motion picture industry ever has or perhaps ever will have to face.

You are probably not familiar with the long, hard fight we have made to impress the producers of Los Angeles with the dangerous days that are ahead of them. A few of the more alert have sensed the imperative importance of training new writers, but many of them are still in a somnolent state.

For many, many years the man or woman with an idea for the film received the most ungracious treatment that ever was accorded to the worker in any creative field of writing. True, many of these neophyte writers presumed too much in offering their half-baked ideas to the studios, but, unfortunately, many who did have something of merit to submit, were told, by inference at least, that their stories were "rotten.

The result of this long campaign of discouragement is now apparent. The crop of new writers that should have received more than passive encouragement at the hands of the producers has been killed off by the brutality of the very people who were so unselfishly and so humbly trying to serve. And now we find in the studios a group of 'hack's' and incompetents who are fighting like grim death to hold their jobs.

For fear I may be misunderstood, I do not mean that the staff writers are all incompetent by any means. There are many able men and women in the studios who are doing surpassing work. But I do mean that there are too many 'insiders' who are side-tracking good stories for two reasons: (a) to avoid a comparison with their own inferior work; (b) to either make secure their jobs or to earn an extra stipend through the sale of their own stories. And in both cases the producer gets the worst of the deal.

The remedy I would suggest for this condition is this: Separate the editorial and creative departments, absolutely. Permit no creative or staff writer to read the manuscripts submitted by free-lance writers. Allow no staff scenario writer to gain access to the reading department under any circumstances, and, above all, dismiss any staff writer with whom they tried to side-track a good story in order that he may sell one of his own. There are, of course, other evils, but I believe that this inside influence is one of the most harmful of all.

To cite a concrete case: Our sales department, which is probably handling the greatest volume of stories of any organization in the world, recently submitted a number of exceptionally good stories to a producing company with the request that they be handed to the producer himself for personal consideration. The scenario editor (almost too gladly) promised that these manuscripts would immediately be handed to Mr. B., his employer, for reading. In about one week these scripts came back minus any comment whatsoever. We suspected that Mr. B. had never seen them, although he had requested us to submit material direct to him. Investigation proved that our suspicions were well founded. Mr. B. had never seen the scripts! But he had paid K. A. for production a story from the pen of his scenario editor, which, judged by some of the editor's previous stories, were of the usual mediocre quality.

"There are, of course, honest editors who also do some creative work of their own, but it does not follow that this makes the present system right."

"In your editorial you state that the picture was never meant to borrow from other modes of expression, and you further declare that the picture must have—and can have—its own story.

"In proof of the correctness of this, I can but point to the consistently high quality of the Thomas H. Ince productions. Mr. Ince is a firm believer in the superiority of the original story. He has developed screen material and he has paid them well for their work. This policy is reflected on the screen. He has been made from original stories. Louis Weber's biggest productions were originals. D. W. Griffith's most spectacular successes were originals."

"We are as strong for a novel, short story or stage play as we are for originals, for we market all kinds of stories and play no favorites. But we are strong for the works of the other arts only when they are screen material.

"A number of producers attach a great deal of importance to the fact that a story has been published. They attach so much importance to this that they are falling all over themselves bidding against each other to secure the motion picture rights to a lot of 'fine writing' that has little, if anything, in it to justify its adaptation to the screen."

"We are now conducting a research campaign among the exhibitors of the United States in an effort to find out what the public will pay for in the way of stories."

How the Rialto, Tulsa, Okla., Put Over “Eyes of Youth”

When William Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Tulsa, Okla., booked “Eyes of Youth” he secured the co-operation of the Peacock Productions, Inc., in exploitation of the picture.

On this page is shown a portion of this campaign in pictures. Other stunts used were as follows:

A projector was used to throw a slide on the sidewalk on one of the principal downtown corners at night, reading: “See Eyes of Young in Eyes of Youth.”

One of the most effective stunts employed was a street car, rented from a local traction company, and operated all day long on Saturday, over every line in the city. This had never before been done in the city. Cut out figures of humorous “comic section” types were set up in each window on the inside of the car, giving the appearance of a car load of people, but with the added attraction of types that were sure to get laughs from spectators. Street banners painted in black on yellow cloth, heralded the fact that “WE ARE ON OUR WAY TO SEE ‘EYES OF YOUTH’ at the Rialto, Sunday, February 22nd.” Similar signs were painted on the windows on either side of the motorman and the front end of the car was covered with a striking banner, consisting of a pair of eyes, with the headlight forming the nose and the word “Youth” the mouth, the whole giving the appearance of a huge, grotesque face.

The Lobby display was featured by cutouts at each end of the unusually wide lobby. One of the life-sized figure of a Yogi. Facing him was a cut-out of Clara Kimball Young. Between them was a black pedestal on which sat a crystal globe, illuminated from the inside.
John C. Ragland Joins A. S. Kane as General Manager

Resigns from Sales-Managership of Realart; Has a Wide Experience

JOHN C. RAGLAND has resigned from the position of general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation to become general manager of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, in which he has been elected a director. Mr. Ragland, who has had a brilliant career in the selling end of motion pictures, and whose record with the Realart Company has been unusual, took over his new office at the Kane Corporation on Monday, March 22.

With a background of experience in the theatrical and motion picture business extending from young manhood, Mr. Ragland is considered one of the best posted film executives in the industry and brings to the Kane Corporation not only a technical knowledge of selling and distribution, but also a wide personal acquaintance with hundreds of exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Starting in his youth as assistant treasurer of the Academy of Music in Richmond, Va., Mr. Ragland's first promotion was to treasurer of this house, following which he was transferred to the management of the Norfolk Academy of Music, one of the biggest houses on the Keith Circuit. His progressive ideas of theatre management led to one promotion after another in the circuit, and by taking over management of the bigger houses of the Keith chain, Mr. Ragland extended his activities to all the important cities in Virginia and North Carolina.

After his strenuous "front of the house" experience, Mr. Ragland became a manager of road companies, going first with the then famous Barlow Brothers Minstrel, with which organization he remained for two years. Then followed several seasons as the road manager with a number of notable stage productions, among them being "Brewster's Millions," "The Man of the Hour," "The County Chairman," "The Three Twins," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," "In Old Kentucky," and "The Red Woman."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Ragland was also manager of the tour of the original "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," which Charles Ray is now about to make into a film for the Arthur S. Kane Company, with which Mr. Ragland allies himself.

Following his long experience as road manager of theatrical enterprises, Mr. Ragland was initiated into film circles, becoming business manager for George Kleine at the first presentation of "Quo Vadis?" in this country. Later Mr. Ragland took over charge of booking the various road presentations of the Cines production, "The Last Days of Pompeii," also one of Mr. Kleine's attractions.

The theatre again claimed Mr. Ragland's services when he took the grand opera "Parsifal" on tour, after which followed several other successful tours with such famous musical comedies as "The Merry Widow," "The Prince of Pilsen," "The Red Mill" and "My Best Girl." A second excursion into the motion picture business was followed by a big theatrical venture as business manager for Neil O'Brien, the famous minstrel star.

It was at the close of Neil O'Brien's season (in the spring of 1918) that Mr. Ragland became acquainted with the president and organizer of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures. At that time, Mr. Kane was general manager of Select Pictures, and the splendid record of Mr. Ragland in sales work with theatrical and motion picture enterprises attracted the executive's attention. As a result, Mr. Ragland was appointed St. Louis manager for Select a position which he held until the organization of Realart by Arthur Kane, when he was invited to join his former associate in the new venture.

Mr. Ragland's record with Realart Pictures has been one of the big accomplishments of contemporary sales work. Beginning his connection there as manager of the St. Louis branch of the newly organized film company, Mr. Ragland proved his rare ability in short order and was soon asked to become general sales manager in the home offices where he has remained up to his present affiliation as general manager of the Kane Company.

Mr. Ragland's positive achievements and his fine personality earned him a host of friends in St. Louis, and when his new position took him to New York, he was tendered a farewell banquet by the local film board of trade. As an evidence of personal esteem, Mr. Ragland was presented with a gold watch and Elk's charm, and an Elk's card-case of gold. In addition, he received a gold fountain pen from his former associates.

In leaving the Realart Company to go with Arthur S. Kane, Mr. Ragland expresses a deep appreciation of the fine spirit of friendliness and co-operation which he has experienced in that concern at all times. The film executive declares that in ending his services with Realart on the best possible terms, he terminates one of the most pleasant associations of his theatrical career, and retains for his former colleagues only the warmest of good wishes.

In a statement made by President Arthur S. Kane, the latter declares himself and his organization highly gratified to obtain the services of John C. Ragland in the work of building up the new Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. The statement follows:

"The election of Mr. Ragland as a director of the Kane Company and his appointment as general manager is regarded with the greatest satisfaction by officials of this company. With a record of sales activity behind him that is hard to equal, Mr. Ragland represents, in addition, the highest type of the gentlemanly quality in business. For a long time prominently identified with the business management of big theatrical and motion picture enterprises, he has established a reputation among showmen of the country as a straightforward, plain dealing business man, whose honesty and human personality have won him personal as well as business friends. This is the element that makes for progress and co-operation in any industry and by a long practice of man to man relationship with exhibiting interest, Mr. Ragland has won the confidence and esteem of the entire industry."

"Aside from the personal value of a man of Mr. Ragland's good character, the Kane Company feels that it is adding to its forces a film executive of vision, whose knowledge of picture conditions is not of one territory, but extends to the far ends of the country, and who appreciates the problems of the owners of small houses as well as the needs of the big chains, with which he has long been associated. Mr. Ragland will bring to the directing councils of our company an intimate knowledge of national conditions and a personal acquaintance with film men."
Novel Musical Attraction at 'Frisco's California

Under the direction of Eugene H. Roth and Jack A. Partington, a novel musical attraction was added to the program of the California Theatre for the week of March 7th. It was named "The Melody Shop" and permitted the singing of the latest in popular songs. Girls of beauty were included in the cast of twenty people and to say that the response accorded the act by the patrons of the big, dignified theatre was spontaneous and enthusiastic is putting it mildly. A ball room couple dancing a late fox-trot, a two year old baby singing "Bubbles," and a scenic effect involving the "Venetian Moon" with clouds, stars, and the moon itself carrying a pretty maiden into the dark blue sky simply "stopped the show." Patrons were so vociferous in their applause and comment that the management is considering bringing the act back for another week.
THE Universal branch exchange managers for the Eastern district were assembled in New York City early this week for an important "pow-wow" to consider plans for the Universal sales campaign. The convention had for its purpose an attempt to get the exhibitor's point of view, through the territorial manager, before establishing new policies for the coming season. Similar conventions will be held in other sections of the country. The second, in Chicago, will begin Sunday, March 28th.

The New York meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering of Universal men ever held. The assembled branch exchange managers represented the most important centers in the United States, and each gave voice to ageth accounts of Universal popularity.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, presided at all meetings of the film men, held at the Universal office and at the Hotel Astor. They greeted with enthusiasm his announcement that Universal plans to mould its ideas of the fall campaign, with the policies of the country's exhibitors. The exchange managers, being in close touch with the exhibitors, were solicited for information as to what the exhibitor likes and wants. Upon this information, all new Universal plans will be based.

The discussion revealed that Universal does not intend to set any new and questionable precedents in the film world, or to promulgate any new "wrinkles" but is projecting a plain, open-face policy, calculated to give the exhibitor what he wants, says the Universal statement.

The main business of the conference was transacted in the Universal offices on Sunday, the opening day of the convention. The exchange managers in rotation, were given the floor and "pumped" for their ideas. E. H. Goldstein, general sales manager, wound up the meeting with a red hot sales talk.

All phases of the Universal product was discussed with a view to possible improvements, every brand being taken up in its turn. The serial subject came in for an unusual amount of consideration. Every exchange manager reported extraordinary success with serials, giving as a reason, the unusual advantages this form of Universal product extends to the exhibitor, in the way of guaranteed product, advertised stars, protection against competition, and advance advertising.

Art A. Smith, district manager for the Universal territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, was the principal out-of-town man on hand. George Uffner and Charles Rosenberg of New York, F. S. Hopkins of Buffalo, Herman Stern of Pittsburgh, E. J. Smith of Cleveland, Louis Baun of Cincinnati, W. D. Ward of Detroit, Ralph Abbott of Indianapolis, Edward Golden and W. H. Hill of Boston, Verne Carrick of Philadelphia, Morris Josephs of New Haven and Julian Levy of Toledo, completed the list of visiting exchange men. Mr. Maurice Fleckles, an official of the Universal Company, also attended.

Sunday evening, Mr. Berman was host at a dinner at the Hotel Astor for his assembled managers. After the dinner, the entire assembly adjourned to the Broadway theatre to attend the opening of Priscilla Dean's new picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul." The exchange men were delighted with the picture and enthusiastic over the prospect of selling it.

Despite the volume of business transacted, the visitors found plenty of time to pay respects to Times Square and other points of interest. The Ward, of Detroit, even hopped a fifth avenue bus and dashed over to the Hippodrome (via Grant's Tomb, which was just passing at the time he realized his mistake).

Louis Baum, Cincinnati's bid for fame, won the leather D. S. C. of the New York engagement. He proved by word and deed, that the most "non-consequential" part of the convention was the business conference. He strongly urged that the next convention held in Charlestown, W. Va., where, he maintains, there would be no disappointing factors.

The light watermelon of the conference was reached in an able speech by Charles Rosenberg of the New York office, on how to sell film. He concluded, modestly, with the remark that his knowledge of the picture game extends as far north as the Bronx and as far south as Tenafly, N. J. He was loudly applauded reapin rich reward, later, in the form of Rosenberg's abundant hospitality.

Secoifs J. D. Williams' Recent Statement

Exhibitor Deardorff of Indiana Endorses Call for Active Defensive Measures

FOLLOWING is a statement, received from Bert Deardorff, manager of the Princess theatre, Kendallville, Ind., in which hearty endorsement is expressed for the pronouncements of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, on the topic of the alleged invasion of the independent exhibitors' field by producer-exhibitor interests:

"As an independent exhibitor I certainly endorse Mr. Williams' statement. I trust that all independent exhibitors will join hands in array to fight these monopolies now trying to invade our territory. I, for one, am ready to board the ship of Mr. Williams and make a final fight with the other independent distributors against the producer-exhibitors now endeavoring to establish their almost impregnable defenses into a chain welded so strong that it would be almost indestructible. One either has to be an independent exhibitor ready to fight for his own individual rights or yield to the alleged combine. You must remember there are other fishes in the pond. First of all, one must withdraw his business from the combine that is soon to be his strongest competitor. You are just nourishing the hand that is soon to reach out and crush the very life right out of you. The thing to do right away is to drive the producer-distributor-exhibitor out of your field by refraining from patronizing him. "I believe strongly in independent producers; I can see disaster and chaos ahead for we independent unless we awaken to the hour and need of a death struggle in the movie game, which is now being gripped by the producer-exhibitor. If they get a foothold in your town what possibility has the independent exhibitor in offering certain high class productions when he is completely frozen out? It would mean that the independent exhibitor would be completely annihilated, and might as well forget about his past success and engage in some other business or be kept busy driving the wolf from the door. W. D. Ward, of Detroit, even hopped a fifth avenue bus and dashed over to the Hippodrome (via Grant's Tomb, which was just passing at the time he realized his mistake). "It is my candid opinion that this menace should be blasted at once, and while it is not pleasant to contemplate, I believe in a showdown. It is like the old-time adage, 'too many cooks spoil the broth.' Naturally, the way to sound the death knell of this alleged sidestepping of the producer-distributor is to patronize the independent. The time is ripe when producers who seek independents and a competitive market and exhibitors who want to conduct their houses in opposition to exhibitors and not the big combine-producer-distributor must support one another and co-operate in downing the would-be-theatre monopoly now grasping out like a monster octopus for all. The independent stars and producers are working for your interest and mine. Let us be the minute men and make a final drive for our rights."

In Old Kentucky
NUMEROUS independent producers are robbing themselves of a good percentage of the possible return on a picture through their carelessness in dividing territorial districts and their adherence to schedules that do not jibe with conditions as they exist at present.

This was the statement of A. Dresner, general manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., to a New York representative last week. Mr. Dresner had been in New York several days purchasing the rights to several big features for his territory and refusing twice as many more because they had been "territorially mishandled," according to his declaration.

"The shelves around the film district must be filled to overflowing with good pictures, according to the offers made to me," continued Mr. Dresner, "but I could not touch most of them no matter how reasonable the price and good the picture—and why? For the simple reason that the sellers have available only a part of my territory. They don't offer me the subjects for the territory which my salesmen cover, and which I can cover efficiently and must cover to operate on a sane business basis. No, they offer me pictures for a small slice of my territory, for an arbitrary division and for which they think I should buy.

"Judging by what I hear from other buyers who are in town the same condition applies to numerous other territorial districts throughout the country. That is why I say that instead of the hundred per cent return—or close to that—which the producer of a good picture at a reasonable price should receive, there are many percentage points lost solely through shortsighted business policy.

"Here are the facts in my case. The Exhibitors' Film Exchange covers the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. This is the only territory for which I will consider pictures. There is nothing related to good business sense in having my salesmen cover Virginia and then be forced to inform the exhibitors that on half of our subjects we cannot handle that territory.

"But what do the producers in New York say? Like a flock of sheep, they all turn to the First National schedule—forgetting the fact that this percentage table was devised for First National's purposes—and inform me that my territory consists of only the District, Maryland and Delaware. And then I am told that this territory is worth two and a quarter per cent.

"What are the facts? For one thing, the producers seem to forget that the District of Columbia is only a city. To hear the phrase roll off their tongues you would think it was a State as big as Wisconsin. It is a city in every film sense and no more.

"Then come to Delaware. Here is a State that might as well be a single city for all film purposes. After you get through with Wilmington you may as well consider that portion of the territory practically done for. It's State on the percentage tables, but when you go out after business you may as well consider you are going to eleven theatres.

"Maryland is a bit better, giving you Baltimore and a few small cities. But then you are through with the territory—and no reasoning under the sun can make such a territory justify the operation of a high grade independent exchange.

"But, on the other hand, from the Washington, D. C., office a salesman takes a short trip and he is in Virginia. And still, if I am to buy pictures according to the arbitrary schedule laid down in New York I am supposed to forget this territory right at my doorstep.

"What is to blame for this condition? The fact that the men who have to buy the pictures have never set down a definite percentage table based on field facts and adhered to it. The only man who had the courage to lay out a schedule and stick to it is J. B. Williams, of First National. For that he deserves praise. But the percentage schedule that is good for First National is not certain to be good for the rest of the field. Many independent producers do not think of this. Their sole knowledge of the field is contained in the list of First National percentages which they jealously guard.

"Take another fact concerning the Washington, D. C., territory. West Virginia is always included as a whole in the territory of the Pittsburg buyers. Yet there is a large slice of West Virginia which is nine hours from Pittsburgh, and only an hour and a half from Washington. There isn't enough business there to induce the Pittsburgh salesmen to cover it, and yet the Washington independent exchange hasn't the right. The result? Some bookings are being lost to the independent exchange and the independent producer. And exhibitors in one section of West Virginia must either face the inconvenience of trying to force their business on distant Pittsburgh or limit their bookings to the Washington exchanges that are able to enter that territory.

"It is time for a shake-up in this territory—and in others if what I hear from other buyers is true. And when the shake-up is over producers and brokers in New York will stop working by arbitrary, rule-of-thumb geographical divisions devised for some other purpose and adapt their methods to actual field conditions.

"I know the News can do a lot of good if it will secure the opinions of other independent exchange men throughout the country on this point. Perhaps, with the aid of the brokers and producers we can all get together and devise a territorial division and percentage scale that will be of incalculable benefit to the independent market.

"Let's hear from the other fellows!"

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, sailed for England recently on board the Mauretania. Mr. Goldwyn did not define the purpose of his mission. He will join Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; and other members of the company in London.

His only statement was in the form of a general message to the industry. The statement reads:

The motion picture industry has grown up so fast we in it have taken little time to consider whether the things we have built up were right. The further growth of the industry depends upon two things: stability of quality and a stability of price. Great strides have been made in the former, great strides will be made in the latter.

"To-day we are on the verge of a departure in the system of pricing pictures. Emphasis is being laid upon value rather than upon price, and the day has come when the motion picture salesman is no more effective than the product which he sells.

"The motion picture is not a standardized product, and its price is, of course, not standardized. Where a picture can yield a profit of several thousand dollars a week from one theatre and yet less than a hundred a week from another, there is bound to be some element of confusion with regard to the actual merchandising of the product. The important point is that a photoplay must be released at a price that will mean a profit to an exhibitor whether he has a two hundred seat house or a house seating over one thousand.

"There is to-day a definite attempt to seek for a sliding price standardization."

R. S. Cole Delivers Impressive Speech at Convention

Gives A Comprehensive Survey of Past Activities and Future Plans

As a fitting climax to the dynamic convention of Robertson-Cole branch managers, which was held in New York the announcement was made that the company will call its next semi-annual meeting in Los Angeles six months hence. The West is chosen in order that the exchange men, supervisors and other executives may visit the studios and study the working methods of the companies which are making Robertson-Cole productions.

The speech of R. S. Cole, delivered at the convention, was one of the most concise documents of broad-visioned and forward-looking motion picture administration ever given the trade. Sketching the accomplishments of the past year, the first in Robertson-Cole's history, Mr. Cole made promises for the future which indicate that this company is setting and will continue to set a standard not surpassed in America.

Mr. Cole said:

"First, a word of welcome. We had planned to delay our first convention until you had attained a certain quota. While you had been steadily moving in that direction, our plans for the future had progressed so much faster, and we had been so successful in our negotiations for big productions, that we decided it was best to hold our convention immediately so that you might learn of our plans and go back to your territory with a firm idea as to what we intended to do for you in the future.

"Furthermore, it was very important that we meet personally, in view of the fact that I had not had the pleasure of meeting most of the members of our organization while many also were not known by Mr. Kirkpatrick. We felt that we could explain better to you our policy and ideals, and the programme we planned, by coming in personal contact with you, rather than through the medium of the mail.

"So, we brought you in here; and, unless I am greatly mistaken, after you have heard what I have to say and what Mr. Kirkpatrick and others will tell you, we are going to send you back with a very strong determination on your part to meet our wishes and to fully justify the plans which have been formulated.

"We are exceedingly glad to see you here. We want to know you better and to send you back feeling that we are friends.

"At times it may be necessary for us to point out certain faults in your work through the medium of circular or personal letters, and these, perhaps, may disturb you unless you have firmly in mind the ideals of our business. You must realize that whatever instructions or criticism may be forward do you, it is intended simply to assist in your field work to attain and preserve such ideals.

"It was only a short time ago that an infant was born and you have to care for it. My birthday is on the 15th of December, and unintentionally I gave our firm a birthday present on the 15th of December, 1918, because on that day we started our distribution in the United States. We had been doing business in foreign countries, in which we had made quite a success.

"So we adopted a youngster in the form of Robertson-Cole Productions. The youngster was pretty well formed, a good strong boy, but we had to have a guardian for him. We picked out a guardian. We furnished the money for his food, and we furnished the money for his clothing. The food was represented by the productions which we released; the clothing by the commission we paid to have the productions marketed properly. You know as well as I do that the food did not seem to set well on his stomach, and he was not thriving as we might expect such a strong boy should.

"So far as his clothing was concerned, the money spent on it did not seem to give the baby the right appearance. We watched the infant carefully; but he was not growing as we had hoped for. After a lot of worry and study we called in a specialist. The specialist looked him over.

He said the boy was all right, but the food which we were buying for him, while good, was not being prepared in such a way that he would be nourished properly, and that we ought to do something to see that this food, for which we were paying a good price, should be so prepared that proper nourishment would result. Growth would then follow naturally.

"So on October 18th we started not only buying the food for the baby but preparing it, i.e., we commenced selling our own productions. Things went better, but the boy was still a little backward. Again we called in the specialist, and he told us that there was nothing the matter with the food. He said the trouble was due to poor judgment in selecting the baby's style of clothing. He advised us to buy his clothes for him ourselves, instead of letting others do it.

"That meant that in addition to selling our own productions we would have to take charge of their physical distribution. After mature consideration we decided to do this. Therefore, on the 3d day of January we took over the physical distribution of our production, which meant that we were taking care of our adopted child without the assistance of a guardian.

What we have accomplished since January 3d is well known to you, and very gratifying.

"We have had our troubles, but I rather imagine that in the year and a half we have been nurturing the infant we have, to a very great extent, attained many of the ideals we had in mind.

"In regard to the personnel of our company, I think we have a very great advantage, because there is no divided authority. There is no great corporation with many interested persons in it, all pushing along different lines, some perhaps with personal interests, and all together doing away with that one thing which is necessary—co-operation and unity.

"What we are trying to do is to get together a product which you will be proud to sell, and one which you will be very glad to offer to the exhibitor. If you can do that we have given you the nucleus of a strong organization. You will be able then to build the foundation which is so necessary in order that you may secure results from your investment.

"As to our financial facilities, there have been many references to the new bank roll that had come into the film business. In the beginning it was rather amusing to see how hard they tried to touch that bank roll, but it gradually tightened up, for it was plain that the bank roll was to be spent along certain lines, and that we were to receive a 100 per cent investment every time we touched the bank roll.

On this and the opposite page are shown one of the Imperial theatre's "Personality" presentation novelties in the shape of a fashion show staged with an elaborate stage setting designed for the occasion. All manner of smart apparel for the fair sex was displayed by the performers. The whole show was tied together by a specially written and rehearsed "act" which added interest to the fashion revue.
Fashion Show Bids With Feature for Public Favor

To call a theatre a "House of Personality" is one thing. And to vitalize the allured personality is quite another. Jack Partington has earned for the Imperial, San Francisco, through characteristic presentation, "Personality." Patrons first christened the Imperial the "house of personality." When a picture warrants a prologue, a fashion show or other atmospheric introduction, the requirement is supplied. Accompanying photographs depict the detailed lavishness embodied in a recent fashion show. Beautiful girls, beautiful gowns, culti-vative and sincere management; result—Imperial theatre, the house of personality, with due credit for Jack Partington, director.

Danforth Discovers New and Good Use for Broken Phonograph Records

Who says there is nothing new under the sun?

Just read the following from the Atlanta Sunday American: "There, little girl, don't cry, if you have broken the latest jazz record on your phonograph or your favorite grand opera piece is ruined past mending. Save the pieces and take them to the Criterion theatre, where they will admit you Monday afternoon or evening to see Eugene O'Brien in 'The Broken Melody'."

And understand this is not an advertisement. It was a newspaper contribution and comment on a real exploitation idea. Read further, as the Journal said, "The Criterion theatre has discovered a use for broken phonograph records. Just what commercial use the theatre can put the broken records to has not been made public. A lot of records have been broken at the theatre, it is true. These were mostly house records, however. Meanwhile the theatre is offering a wonderful program. Eugene O'Brien, who is the favorite of so many Atlantians, is to be shown in his new production, 'The Broken Melody'."

If you haven't the idea here is another explanation. Willard C. Patterson, manager of the Criterion theatre in Atlanta, has booked "The Broken Melody" and then called upon Ed. Danforth, exchange exploitation man, to originate a stunt to assist in drawing the crowds. Danforth, like a true knight of the press agent's realm, "carried on." He wrote two advertisements, of three column size, inviting the owners of broken records of "broken melodies," you know, to bring them to the Criterion theatre on the opening day and receive free admission to the theatre.

There was no object in asking for the broken records other than to hook up the picture with the idea of broken melodies. But it set all Atlanta to thinking. It was novel, was unique, and was something unheard of.

Some idea of the capacity business for the first day is shown by the fact that Manager Patterson found himself with three hundred pounds of broken records on hand. As one newspaper, the Journal, said, "In the Criterion attic today John McCormack hobnobs with Bert Williams."

When Bob Wall, owner and manager of Wall's theatre, Fremont, Neb., booked "In Old Kentucky" he went to its exploitation with unusual enthusiasm. Wall is a great lover of horse racing and owns a string himself. On the opening day and six of Mr. Wall's own horses, two of them ridden by negro boys in jockey costumes. At two o'clock the band gave a concert in front of the theatre and the first run of the picture was at 3:15. The band also gave another concert inside the theatre before the picture was run, and while the last reel was being shown were once more in front of the theatre attracting a crowd for the next run. Wall had also used extensive space on bill boards to attract people from the country districts surrounding the city into town during the run of the attraction, for Fremont boasts a population of but 10,000.
When George Mann, manager of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, Cal., finished his exploitation of Larry Semon in "The Grocery Clerk," every man, woman and child in that city was thoroughly familiar with the new comedy king and his antics. No corner of the large Western city was forgotten in the mammoth campaign to put this funnyman over big. Every available billboard, every grocery store and even the most out-of-the-way places carried a likeness of Larry Semon. At every hand the face of this comedian met the gaze of the passerby. Two hundred one-sheet posters and 100 three-sheet posters of "The Grocery Clerk" were used in the campaign. In addition to this special publicity was built. The Albers Milling Company co-operated with Mr. Mann in the building of cutouts of Larry Semon and grocery counters, which were displayed in every store in the city. Every 24-sheet stand available throughout the city was stripped of its gay posters to make room for special Larry Semon publicity. The lobby of the Rialto was turned into a grocery store, showing Larry Semon at work behind the counter. It was a display that created much favorable comment and attracted large crowds during the two weeks in which the comedy was shown.
Prologue and "Peacock" Dance Win for Manager Harris

"On With Dance" Given Elaborate Presentation in Columbus Theatre

DEFYING the hull of Lent, laughing at the inclement weather, ignoring the "fln" scare, Will D. Harris, impresario and manager-de-luxe of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ohio, put over "On With the Dance," in a way that still has the Ohio capital talking, and which merited a return engagement of the picture, already arranged by Mr. Harris.

Manager Harris is known in Ohio as the fellow who does things 100 per cent—when he gets an idea he puts it over just a little bigger than it has been done before. So when he thought of a prologue to embellish Mae Murray and David Powell's success, he decided it would be a real prologue. First, he had a special set made—a New York roof-garden effect. Then he was fortunate enough in securing Major Madja, classical dancer, who was in Columbus. She, costumed exactly like Mae Murray in her famous scene in "On With the Dance," brought to vivid life the "Peacock Dance" of the picture. Stanley Warner, widely known Columbus actor, was secured to enact the "man-about-town," introducing the series of dances that made up the prologue. The dance numbers were introduced with a written prologue "spoken" by the screen. Mr. Harris had the especially written prologue made into a film. It carried the theme of the picture. Then came the series of symbolic dances—"The Dance of Wall Street;" "The Dance of Fifth Avenue;" "The Dance of the Bowery;" a medley of all—"The Dance of Broadway." Mr. Harris's very clever young daughters, Eleanor and Ann Jane, took part in the dances with striking success.

The prologue as flashed on the screen said:

"And now that you are all here—what would you see? Would you be instructed, amused, thrilled, shocked? No? Perhaps, a bit of each? Yes! Then let your heart beat in tune with the dance of humanity to-day. Let your soul drift with the current of humanity that swills through the canyons of Broadway. For you are to be led into the heart and into the soul of a great city—New York! The play you'll live to-day is the play of Broadway—of the gay way; the play of the narrow way; the play of the crooked way; the play of the great city.

Don't blame the city. It's not her fault (says Clyde Fitch). 'It's our own fault. What the city does is to bring out what's strongest in us. If at heart, we're good, the good in us will win. If the bad is strongest—Don't blame the city. It gives man his opportunity. It is to him what he makes of it! A man goes to the gates of the city and knocks, and she comes to her gate and takes him in—in the middle of her market place. There she strips him naked of all his disguises—all of his hypocrisies—and she points his ambition on her fenses and lights up her skyscrapers with it—'What he wants to be and what he thinks he is! And then she says to him: 'Make good if you can.' On With the Dance!"

And the dancers come on, doing the prologue numbers.

Then the screen "spoken" prologue continues: "So there you have it! Shakespeare hath said that the world is all a stage, but I'd like to say: The world is all a dancing floor—and we all mere dancers. ‘The Dance of Wall Street,' how many of you have learned its step? ‘The Dance of Fifth Avenue,' where fashion fritters time away—you know that step, too! ‘The Dance of the Bowery—does not this refrain sing to you, in every soul of souls, under the skin, you know, we're all the same. So life's a dance—and we mere dancers. Let's see ourselves upon the silver screen, bits of you and bits of me and bits of each of us, mingled into a drama of the city, a drama of today. We all dance through life—sometimes in sunshine, sometimes in shadow, some laugh, some weep, some win, some lose—but what of that—"On With the Dance!"

The picture then begins with a blare of brass from the orchestra, Mr. Harris didn't stop at his impressive prologue. He advertised "On With the Dance" to full jazz time. One thousand one-sheets put Mae Murray's likeness all over Columbus. Seven hundred windows cards backed up the lithograph barrage.

The front of the theatre was made spectacular with a huge cutout figure of a dancer from the twenty-four sheet. Then Mr. Harris arranged with the Columbus citizens to put on a special morning matinee for women only, at which Madja, the dancer, delivered a health and beauty talk, gave first-page publicity; some extra newspaper "art" and food for gossip among the women. The Citizen printed a coupon admitting its women readers. Hundreds were on hand. Mr. Harris made full use of the stage "spots," flashed newspapers, and lurry decorations.

"On With the Dance" went merrily on—and is going back to Columbus to continue the good impression made by the first showing.

Tieing Up With Local Events Wins

Omaha celebrated automobile week recently and H. B. Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, decided he would coax some extra money into the box office by reason of the event.

First he booked "Double Speed" and "Speed," the Al St. John comedy for the auto show week. Next in order to carry out the spirit of the show, he arranged for two new cars to be shown on the Strand stage, along with a complete camping outfit, tent, cookstove, etc. Following this was the borrowing of a number of tires from local dealers. One was placed over the ticket window to the box office and the tickets had to be sold through it. Others were distributed about the theatre. A full page newspaper display was used to advertise "Double Speed," for which the Rialto paid nothing, the bill being rendered to a local automobile company. All in all, having an idea at the right time and putting it into deeds worked wonders for Watts. The show at the Rialto drew a whale of a business and the expenses were less than usual, all of which meant greater net profits.
How the Colonial of Lincoln, Neb., Decorates Its Lobby

Co-operation Pays, Says Richard P. Sims

Due to the efforts of Richard P. Sims, assistant manager, Liberty theatre, Spokane, a very attractive lobby was displayed before and during the run of Bryant Washburn in “It Pays to Advertise.”

The week before the running of this picture, the coming feature was announced by a display board about ten by ten feet in the interior lobby of the theatre. For the display Mr. Sims secured the co-operation of the local dealers, who willingly contributed cutouts and signs of all sizes, colors, and descriptions advertising their wares. These were tacked on this board in every angle possible, giving the appearance of a crazy quilt. In the center was an announcement card painted in attractive colors—Bryant Washburn, in “IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.”

During the run of the picture the entire exterior lobby was covered with advertising in the same manner. The large display board which was used in the interior lobby before the showing of the picture was hung above the entrance in the exterior lobby.

To many exhibitors of the high class theatres this stunt may be termed “Freak Advertising.” However, the purpose of advertising is to attract attention in the first place, and in the second place, interest the people. No one could help noticing this lobby and one glance made them curious to look again, and the effect was very gratifying.

It has several advantages over the ordinary lobby display. There was no expense to it whatever. Every local dealer who heard of the idea was glad to contribute. All Mr. Sims had to do was to mention it to them, and they crowded into the Liberty office, bringing all they had for the display.

“I feel that this co-operation with the local dealers will have a lasting effect,” said Mr. Sims, “as it won them over to us and gave them a personal interest in not only this picture, but also our theatre.

Makes Capital of Local Spring Flood

Hardly had the word gone forth that the residential districts of Manayunk, Pa., were under five feet of water as the result of the Schuylkill River overflowing its banks at that point during the recent rain and snow storm, than banners bearing the inscription, “Water, Water everywhere” began making their appearance all over the inundated districts.

The meaning of this bit of irony immediately became the topic of discussion for the natives, and newspaper offices and police stations were besieged with queries as to their meaning. The authorities were as much at sea as the natives and directed all questioners to the Electrical Bureau at City Hall, Philadelphia. Here it was revealed that it was the opening gun in the campaign for exploiting Will Rogers in his latest production “Water, Water, Everywhere” which will play the Victoria theatre on the Stanley circuit, on April 12th.
"Old Kentucky" Spelled Victory for the Victoria

The lobby and front of the Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, aroused great interest when "In Old Kentucky" played this house, because of its transformation into a race track entrance. All the doors were camouflaged with posters of people and the effect was exactly as a race track existed inside the lobby.
Riviera Presentation, Phrase of Real Import Balaban and Katz Activities Keep Chicago Public Interested

RIVIERA PRESENTATION is an electrical term to the Chicago devotees of the silent drama. It was coined by Balaban and Katz, proprietors of the Riviera and Central Park theatres, two of the choicest houses in the Windy City, and serves to describe the Riviera’s artistic fashion of serving motion pictures.

The industry knows comparatively little of Balaban and Katz’s activities. Yet without fuss or feathers, sans brass band or other brass display, this theatrical firm has attained an honored position with the foremost showmen in less than two years. Besides the above-mentioned theatres, they will operate two of the world’s largest theatres in process of construction at present, one in the loop, a 5,000-seat house, to be called the Coliseum and the other on the South Side, a 4,000-seat house, called the Tivoli. And these theatres will be as magnificent as they will be capacious if architectural plans mean anything.

And the reason for their success is the superb style of their entertainment. It has been remarked by industrial tourists who make it a habit to visit America’s leading theatres that the Riviera’s interior not only excels in splendor any edifice similarly engaged, but that its entertainment is better balanced and more pleasing to the eye and ear than performances of similar nature on exhibition elsewhere.

That is the secret of their meteoric success. Their shows are carefully planned with a view of close harmony. Their specialties and novelties groove into the general scheme of things as if they had been especially created for the occasion. As an illustration, here are their “stunts” for “In Old Kentucky,” on display at the Riviera the week of March 1.

Preceding the picture was an exquisite twilight scene in the southland. Colored urchins could be seen happily grouped, singing melodious Southern tunes accompanied by the guitar and dancing familiar jigs of their race. Gradually the sun sank behind the distant mountains and darkness came upon the pleasure-loving negroes. Only the moon and the red glow of a camp fire penetrated the darkness, but their songs and general gaiety were heard, as the scene faded gracefully into the opening scene of the picture.

That was merely a perfunctory specialty, fitting to be sure, but more or less hectic by comparison with other displays on exhibition at the Riviera previously. The big event has created a veritable sensation in Chicago showmanship, occurred in the course of the picture’s unfolding.

Stage Setting Adds to Vocal Number

THE second vocal number on the Rivoli theatre program this week is being “staged” and in a way which adds greatly to its entertainment value.

The selection is “Visione Veneziana,” a Venetian specialty, sung by Edoardo Albano, the Rivoli baritone.

For the selection Dr. Reisenfeld has provided a drop showing a street scene in Venice with the canals and typical buildings showing.

In the foreground what purports to be a wharf is seen. At one side of the stage the singer stands in a “pit” back of the “wharf,” the effect being as if he was in a gondola, this effect being carried out by the light used in the design of the wharf. With paddle in hand and costumed in the clothing of the Venetian boatman, Mr. Albano sings the song interpreting the emotions of the “Visione Veneziana.”

The canvas in design is not excepted, what may be called “orthodox” of the Venetian water scene, but the colorings used blended with fine lightings make the effect one of beauty and grace. Add this to the enjoyment the patron of the Rivoli gets from the number.

To break into the middle of a picture with a theatrical specialty is a dangerous thing. For it interrupts the continuity of the drama and results in a more or less irksome exhibition at its best. But when the novelty is made part of the picture, injecting genuine life into the story in place of the silent portraits represented in the film, and the stunt is accomplished unexpectedly, fading into the film with the same suddenness as it emerged into view, a surprising effect is obtained.

Such was the achievement of the Riviera’s producing staff during the presentation of “In Old Kentucky.” This famous melodrama was drawing close to the exciting race track scene. The jockey had arrived for the notable event and was safely concealed in the loft of the stable, stupefied drunk. Anita Stewart had donned the jockey’s outfit, and had hastened with the colonel to the track. In the jockeys’ quarters a dozen or more riders were summoned. An official appeared, and the riders darted forth to be weighted in and to qualify for the race. Then a subtitle appeared announcing the annual event.

Meanwhile the pink curtain of the Riviera stage had been drawn over the screen, and the subtitle registered upon it. When the stage returned to view, a veritable paddock was on exhibition. The entries of the race were observed on a board on one side. Elsewhere was a scale and jockeys were being tripped upon it and off again. A young jockey came dashing upon the scene (representing Miss Stewart), hastened on by the Colonel, and was weighed. In the distance live horses were being led by the bridle, and were mounted by costumed jockeys. Meanwhile the willow-like were doing fancy foot work in the centre of the stage, colored stable boys were shooting craps in an offside, and the Rivoli Orchestra was playing fast and effective melodies. It all took less than 90 seconds, when the curtain was drawn over the scene, and “They’re Off!” was announced in a subtile in the picture then returned and continued to the very end.

The thing was accomplished so rapidly that the Riviera audience were left gasping fully a half minute at each performance before they realized what happened, and when they recovered from their surprise, spontaneous applause burst forth.

Spooks Hold No Terrors For These Youths.

Spooks hold no terrors for the youths of Beresford, S. D.

In response to a recent advertisement of the First National Film Exhibitors’ Circuit in the exploitation of David W. Griffith’s “The Greatest Question,” asking for volunteers to sleep alone all night in a graveyard at $25 a night, Clark F. Eidsmoe and Harold J. Larson, both of Beresford, came near breaking all speed records in writing to tender their services. Eidsmoe, in writing to Manager J. F. Cubberly of the Minneapolis First National office, vowed he was perfectly willing to sleep in any graveyard he ever saw. Larson predicted a willingness to park his bed among the tombstones for any length of time from one night up to a year.

“I see that you are offering $25 a night for a white man to sleep all alone in a graveyard,” wrote Eidsmoe. “I am perfectly willing to sleep in any graveyard I ever saw. If you mean business, write me at once. Kindly state how long the job will last. Also give other particulars.”

“I would like to have more information about your offer,” Larson said. “I am enclosing a stamped envelope and hope you will reply by return mail. How many nights do you want me to sleep there—one or for a year?”

Great was their alacrity in answering the advertisement, other adventurous spirits beat them and obtained the job.
Salt Lake Showman, Mormon When It Comes to Ideas

The masked dancer of the Paramount-Empress theatre exploitation story described on the opposite page performing in a downtown store window.

Mysterious Entertainers Stunt Gets Much Attention

Carpenter Successful at

Paramount-Empress With Masked Dancer Stunt

FROM out where Brigham Young migrated to establish a village now known as Salt Lake City comes an interesting story. George Carpenter, secetary and manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, his able assistant, which joke-smith Manager Carpenter has labeled the Official Shock Absorber, and an exploration expert fresh from Broadway,
New York, introduced a masked and mysterious dancer to Salt Lake City's public as an exploitation aid in putting over "On With the Dance." When this picture played the Paramount-Empress.

Reduced to a description of the facts, and eliminating the procuring of the dancer, the secret conclaves of Mr. Carpenter, the O. S. A. and the F. P. man, one day a taxi drove up to the auto show being held in Salt Lake City at the time and out hopped a stranger and a masked female. The man walked up to the leader of the orchestra, which was discoursing music for the benefit of those attending the show, and handed him a music score with the request that it be played.

Whether said leader had been "fixed" or not is unknown but anyway the request was granted and the masked lady, to the crash of alleged music, did artistic didos, clad in a peacock blue (and behold ) gown, shorn shoes, hose, etc.

After the exhibition, to be figured both ways, the pair made a hasty, unexplained but dramatic exit to the waiting taxi, leaving the gaping prospective auto buyers both astonished and mystified, and asking each other what it was all about and receiving no authoritative reply, curi-sious to find out if such a thing was possible.

The "act" had gone over big, so the next night a similar scene in a crowded hotel cabaret was staged. This was just as successful as the first appearance of the mysterious entertainers. The following night a visit was made to the Hotel
Utah with more dancing by the dancer, masked at one end and exposed at the other.

The next appearance of the masked dancer still incognito was in the window of a leading Main Street music store (see top cut on the opposite page).

By this time all of Salt Lake City was properly curious and of it was really scandalized.

Stories and teaser ads now began to appear in the newspapers inquiring who the masked dancer was. Next the dancer appeared at a Rotary Club dinner. It was decided after this appearance that it was time to let the public in on what the dancer was dancing for, so the announcement was made that she would soon appear on the stage of the Paramount-Empress theatre.

However, no mention of a motion picture was contained in this information.

Prior to dates for the theatre engagement of the lady, the University Club of North, the annual banquet.

The management of this affair "phoned
Mr. Carpenter that the services of the mysterious dancer were desired for this affair, for which they were prepared to pay providing a price could be agreed upon. Just how much was charged off the exploitation account for "On With the Dance." It is known, but something was for the dancer "played" the University Club function with everybody well pleased with the "barnstorming engagement."

Along the last of the week prior to the film's opening on Sunday, Carpenter and his gang broke the news that his barefoot lady was advertising the film at the Paramount-Empress and would appear in a prologue prepared for the engagement.

It was also announced that anyone guessing her name would be awarded passes good for matinees.

A lot of people started guessing. Mae Murray was a favorite choice, given a tip by a rumor that perhaps might have been inspired by a misleading whisper from about the Paramount-Empress box of (nor an inference, just a surprise).

Anyway the Paramount-Empress passes were mailed every guesser with no explanations made and Salt Lake City is still arguing who the lady really was.

Aside from the salaries of the F. P. E. and the O. S. A., who had to be paid anyway whether they did anything or no, and what Mr. Carpenter thought his time was worth, the whole stunt cost about $75, which same was about the cheapest piece of real publicity and exploitation ever carried in or about the city of the late and lamented Brigham when the results in dollars and cents and interest aroused are considered.

The masked dancer finally took off her mask after doing her part in the prologue as advertised and opened up a dancing academy, the bun on the terpsichorean front for Lent for obvious reasons not being so strong in Salt Lake City as in some other cities, New York for instance.

Probably no more will this lady be able to dance for the Paramount-Empress staff incognito or to the tune of its money, but the moral is: Does this stunt beat carrying a banner around the streets or installing a jazz band on the marquee considering the present union scale for horn blowers? We say it does and that the Carpenter of the Paramount-Empress and his partners in crime are to be congratulated not only on the financial reward acquiring from the engagement of "On With the Dance"—well exploited by one possessing the grey matter to originate

It isn't often that a motion picture wins a front page review in a big newspaper.
And a review that has all the pep of Mabel Normand, herself! It was an accicident that secured page-one prominence for the review. But it was the careering Mabel's work in "Jinx," that inspired the laudatory tone of the squib.

Neil S. Anderson, who is dramatic editor for the Topeka State Journal, treated himself to an all-comedy night at the Or-preum theatre. The leading feature was the Goldwyn production, "Jinx," and it was introduced by an old Chaplin picture, "The Champion." He sat down, all unaware of the shock in store for him, and arranged the aura of editorial indifference about him. He had thought that aura to be invulnerable until then.

Charlie Chaplin began his antics while Mr. Anderson looked on. Suddenly the editor recognized the referee of the com-ey. His placidity was shattered to pieces
—the referee was himself. He had almost forgotten that six or seven years ago he had acted with the Essanay Company and incidentally with Chaplin in
"The Champion." In one entire reel the Dramatic Editor figured prominently.

The smart reporter of the Topeka State Journal every newspaper has a smart reporter—also recognized Mr. Anderson in the picture. The result was a skit on the front page and the transposition of the review from its wonted obscurity to the enviable front row pew.

Under the striking head "N. S. A. Is Seen in "Movies" at Orpheum," the reporter spilled off a clever story quoting Mr.
Anderson's audible reaction to the shock verbation.

"Queer thing—seeing one's self in the movies," the dramatic editor had said.

"It's not so disturbing while your screen self is acting before your eyes, but when you walk off down the street, off the reel into nowhere, you can hardly understand it."
Exploitation and Presentation Often Inseparable

The management of the Palace theatre of Schenectady, N. Y., chartered a trolley car in its exploitation campaign for "Should a Woman Tell?" The car plastered with signs was taken over the principal car lines of the city during the run of the picture at the Palace.

"Brass Band" Vs. "Violin" Exploitation Methods

How Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld Advertises His Houses Without "Shouting"

What is exploitation? Where does legitimate publicity end and when does it begin to prove a boomerang if such a thing is possible? The result of what we were wont to term "circus methods," a short year or so ago, have proven successful from apparently every angle, with no ill effects when the public, attracted to the theatre by the "fire works," found only an ordinary feature on the bill. Who is to determine what is good advertising and what is bad advertising? The answer is the man who controls the destinies of a picture house; the particular public he attracts for his theatre, or which comes to the theatre naturally, and last but not least, whether or not the prestige of the theatre from size, beauty, convenience and location, or for any other reason is of enough importance so it is better business to "sell" the theatre, than to "sell" the attraction.

This is not a criticism of the methods which we have described, but rather a defense for those who, possessing the right kind of a theatre, have not discarded their policy of conservatism and have maintained and added to their clientele without shouting from the housetops, without the use of brass bands, fake newspaper stories, etc.

Of this number of theatres can be classed the Rialto and the Rialto of Broadway, managed by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld. Exploitation in these houses has not as yet been affected by the tendency of the times to "circus" a production.

Both houses go on the even tenor of their ways, doing more business to more net profit than the owners hoped to receive for many a year. Is it because New York, transient-filled continually, just naturally reaps a harvest of dollars from those who come to spend? We think not, and in this opinion we have the concurrence of Dr. Reisenfeld, with explanations that there is in effect at these two theatres a policy of exploitation which never ceases to operate and which has its basis in the "sell the theatre" idea.

Dr. Reisenfeld does not claim that he originated the idea, nor that the idea is a triumph for him, but he does claim that he in the Rialto and Rivoli has proven the soundness of "exploitation without shouting."

Where others have used a brass band, Reisenfeld has used a violin. Every tradition of the Broadway show-business has fallen before his idea. Fiction has disappeared from his advertising; even adjectives have vanished. There has been advertising, plenty of it, and exploitation of almost every conceivable kind, but in every case there has been one object in view—to tell the truth, to tell it effectively and artistically and to make the patron feel that he is going up, not down, when he visits a Reisenfeld show. And always there has been the special aim to attract the women and children.

The career of this man, who now has three Broadway picture palaces, the Criterion now having come under his management, is a lesson in exploitation that every other exhibitor ought to study, for it not only has brought business to his two houses—and business is their only excuse for existence—but it has brought a steady, permanent clientele on whom the houses can depend in all kinds of weather and with all kinds of pictures. If the program is not satisfactory one week they seem to believe that it is one of the things that can't be helped and that next week will bring a better one. They come back. Of course, with exceptionally good pictures the business is greater than the houses can handle. In other words, he has built up a Broadway business on neighborhood policies. His patrons are his friends.

Hugo Reisenfeld has barred all exaggerations. His advertisements are simple and free from adjectives. As a rule his advertising carries the name of the star, and the title of the feature picture; the title and make of the comedy, the name of the musical selection and the name of the conductor. In exceptional cases, where the picture has unusual merit, some of the story is told. In only one case since he became manager of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres has Reisenfeld told the public that the picture he was offering was of unusual merit, and that was when he presented "The Miracle Man" at the Rialto. Then, over his own signature, he announced that he believed it was the best picture he had ever seen. The record-breaking throngs that crowded the house for two weeks was a testimonial to the public faith in his word.

Reserved Seats Sell First—Says Moore

George Moore who owns and manages the Lion and Royal theatre of Bellevue, O., is a great believer in the reserved seat plan of selling the seats in his theatres.

Every time he books a big picture his reserved seats cost 44¢ as opposed to the regular admission price of two bits. And anyone who knows the present day generation knows also that the present day generation enjoys a 44¢ show a whole lot more than a 2¢ show. Anyhow, it's classier to get reserved seats ahead of time, and pick out the very seat you want to have. Makes you feel as if you were laying down a ten spot for the opera. The only difference between them being that the chap that lays down his 88¢ is sure of being entertained.

And this little plan of selling reserved seats assured Manager Moore of a full house for the first performance, for the reserved seats go like hot cakes. "There's another real advantage to the plan," Mr. Moore explains. "By selling tickets in advance this way, we get our people all seated at the beginning of the picture. Then when the show is over, the whole house is cleared out for the next show. We don't have people staying over from one show to another, and annoying those who came later, when they leave. It keeps the theatre more orderly, and my patrons have become so accustomed to seeing a show through from beginning to end, rather than from the end forward as frequently happens elsewhere, that they are very much grieved to be trampled upon by those who leave in the middle of the picture because they saw the ending before the beginning."

Also, it makes the task of exhibiting motion pictures a pleasure. Moore is always assured of a capacity house before he opens his show. He has all the first part of the evening to collect his audience for the second show. But he is always careful to give a good show, and not abuse the confidence of the residents and movie patrons of Bellevue.
When the Park theatre played its first episode of the serial "The Lost City," the lobby was transformed into a veritable "jungle." In addition to the mounted animals, there were the big naturalized stuffed animals that nod their heads and wag their tails. This display brought people from far and wide. Those who had kids brought 'em down to see the make-believe zoo. And those who were stay-at-homes by necessity and wanderers by inclination came again and again to get a break of the spirit of the wilderness. But the crowds didn't stay on the outside. The same attraction that brought them to the doors of the Park theatre took them within the portals, and once initiated they became steady followers of the serial.

How the "Giant's Tracks" Sold Three Admissions

"The River's End" Exploitation at St. Louis Arouses Much Curiosity

A MAN, his wife, and their small son, pleasure bent, stepped from a United Railways sardine box at Grand and Olive—the Forty-second and Broadway of St. Louis. They crossed the street and walked north with the slow moving crowd. "Where shall we go?" the husband asked. "You name it and I'll buy the tickets." The wife was undetermined and the conversation was interrupted by the child.

"Daddy!" he exclaimed. "Da-dee! Mother! Look—see—there's been a giant walking! Look—daddy—mother—he's been going right up this way. See?"

The boy, greatly excited, pointed to the imprint of a giant hob-nailed boot—stenciled on the pavement in white.

Mother and father, also interested, gazed down on the tracks and noted that they continued north along Grand avenue.

"Mother! Daddy! Let's follow 'em! Let's, daddy—mother—won't you? See—they go right on up the street."

Father and mother smiled consent and the trio, with the boy running ahead, trailed "the giant."

Across Morgan, Washington and Lucas the stenciled trail led to the New Grand Central theatre and right on into the lobby and up to the ticket windows. High above the theatre the great electric sign, in red, green and yellow, bore the legend "The River's End." Three tickets for the picture had been sold by exploitation which began with the "giant's tracks" that excited a small boy's curiosity.

The hob-nailed boot tracks—"stenciled to stay"—was the most striking feature devised by Manager William Sievers, of the New Grand Central, for the exploitation of Marshall Neilan's initial attraction for First National exhibitors. The tracks, nineteen inches from toe to heel, certainly attracted attention. "Henry," leader of the janitorial force of the New Grand Central, with a force of helpers, started out at 1.30 a.m. on Sunday—the day the picture made its debut—to do the tracking.

For blocks in every direction the trail led to the New Grand Central.

Even the Sunday morning crowds—bound for church—had to follow the tracks "just for fun," to see where they led to. And the lobby of the theatre, with its picturesque northern setting, found at the end of the trail certainly was a magnet.

Sievers must have had a "tie-up" on the weather, for during the entire two weeks of the engagement of "The River's End" at the New Grand Central there was not enough snow to hide the tracks. And "Henry" with his helpers went out with stencils and paint and gave the tracks a second coating on the Saturday night prior to the beginning of the second week.

Book stores, butcher shops, department stores, barber shops, saloons and sporting goods houses were drafted to aid in proper exploitation of the film.

It was the first instance in St. Louis of the near-beer establishments doing their "full" duty. Cards in the windows of the thirteenth emporium carried this message:

"Keith couldn't even get 'near-beer' at 'The River's End.'"

Another card with a bottle of "one-half of one per cent" on each side of it, carried the announcement:

"If one of these contained one-tenth of the kick that is in 'The River's End,' one bottle would be more than enough."

On the day before the exploitation campaign opened a seal died at the Zoological Garden. Now it took a lot of nerve to put this over, but the publicity man "pulled a wire" and got several nice portions of seal blubber. This was divided among several of the leading butcher shops—those with choice locations—and it was exhibited in the windows with this message:

"Did you ever see seal blubber? Look at it. It is all Conniston had to eat while tracking the outlaw Keith in the Arctic to 'The River's End.'"

For the barber shops this sign was prepared:

"If you had been with Conniston while he was tracking Keith to 'The River's End,' you would not have had a hair cut or a shave for nearly two years."

The book stores, without being coaxed, got busy with the proper display of James Oliver Curwood's famous novel. The sporting goods houses, glad of an opportunity for something unusual, offered displays of "the kind of firearms carried by Keith and Conniston to 'The River's End,'" and exhibited snow shoes, dog sleds and fur clothing.

Four Real Exploitation Ideas

When an exhibitor gets four real ideas and puts them across with a real bang in connection with two productions, the results of which hinging capacity business, it's worth while talking about and giving the exhibitor his just credit. Well it is to Elwyn M. Simons, of the New Family theatre of Adrian, Michigan, that the credit is due, for he pulled a particularly unique one for the "kids" of his town on "When the Clouds Roll By," and three stunts on "Pollyanna."

On the Fairbanks picture he issued the announcement that he would admit any boy in the town to the first performance, upon the child presenting to the box office ten horse-shoes. And it was a screaming success. There were two hundred and fifty children that came to the place, and some children who were only able to gather eight or nine, strolled along, and the good hearted manager let those pass the door also.

The week before "Clouds," came to the theatre he had a wagon driven about the town, with the sides painted with black cats. He used mysterious advertising, and interested every person in the community that was superstitious.

When "Pollyanna" came along he ran "the gladdest incident of your life" contest, offering money prizes for the best stories along that line.

He also entertained at a private performance the girls from the local Industrial Home, only those however who were on the "good behavior" list and who had no demerits against them. There were over three hundred of these state charges that were entertained by "Pollyanna's" philosophy. The newspapers gave Mr. Simons no end of publicity on his stunts and he did the biggest business of his career.

Search For Original Fans As Exploitation.

If hundreds of exhibitors don't use this stunt, in one way or another, we're mistaken. Paramount Artcraft hasn't copyrighted it and offers the suggestion for what it's worth to any exhibitors trying to put over a big, elaborate picture. The stunt was originated for the Cincinnati engagement of "Everywoman" at the Strand theatre by the exploitation department of the Cincinnati Famous Players-Lasky office. The simplicity of the idea is its big point. It will get newspaper space where publicity is hard to get—assumed in Cincinnati.

The idea is this: Start a search for the "original moving picture fans" in your town. At this time, due to the twentieth anniversary of the event, the presentation of the first photoplay is receiving much publicity. A reproduction of this first photoplay, Miss Jerry," is included in the Paramount Magazine released Feb. 15. Try to find the film fans in your town who saw "Miss Jerry" 25 years ago. And when you get their names—you'll get one or two surely—give them a special party, showing the "Miss Jerry" from the Paramount Magazine, and in contrast show them your latest, biggest production of the silent art.

In Cincinnati to work up publicity for "Everywoman" a month in advance of the engagement at the Strand the "search for the original fans" was sprung. The papers saw the possibilities of good "human interest" copy and ran the announcement that Manager Fred Strief of the Famous Players-Lasky Cincinnati office would give a party in the exchange "private theatre" for the original fans, showing them again, for old time's sake, "Miss Jerry" and then compete with with "Everywoman." As fast as the mails could carry them, several letters were received from "original fans." They furnished splendid "copy" for the papers. One man, Jacob Jordan, of Covington, Ky., wrote that he saw "Miss Jerry" 25 years ago at Cincinnati and that since then he hasn't missed more than two nights a week at a moving picture show.

The Post sent a photographer to get the man's picture and interview him. Mrs. Frank Bennett wrote that she saw "Miss Jerry" and had her son with her. He is now 34 years old and works for a railroad. So they'll use their passes to come to Cincinnati to see "Everywoman." That's long-distance pulling.

Attorney J. A. Mingus, well known in Cincinnati, another "original fan," tells (the Times-Star carried this interview) of seeing "Miss Jerry" and how it puzzled the populace. Everybody left the old Heck Dime Museum in Cincinnati feeling they had been bunted—they thought the picture must be a fake and that real live actors were doing the acting and were reflected on the screen in some trick way. Other interviews proved space getters in the papers, each referring to the special party to see "Everywoman," the most lavish film to be constructed with most crude and original picture.

Making your publicity "news" so the newspapers will not only carry it, but want it enough to send out for photos, is the real wedge to open the columns in towns where the papers are "tight." In Cincinnati the stunt was lengthened out by getting a letter from Alexander Black, who "produced" Miss Jerry a quarter century ago. He congratulated the "original and faithful fans" of Cincinnati. More newspaper space.

Michigan Church Enters Picture Business.

The People's Church at East Lansing, Michigan, is going into the motion picture business.

Rev. O. W. Behrens, student pastor, makes the announcement.

The intent of the church is to serve the growing community both religiously and in a secular way. That is to say, that on Sunday evenings the pictures are to be used to illustrate Bible stories and to illustrate popular sermons.

On week day nights, high class pictures of a general nature will be shown with no religious propaganda involved except that vulgarity will be excluded and the purpose to inculcate good taste kept in view.

The church is undertaking the picture business not with a view to profits but rather with a view to community service. The price schedule has not been announced but it will be based, so it is said, on a policy of covering costs rather than with a view to profit.

The church is not all rigged for the new enterprise as yet but preparations to that end are under way. It is believed that all will be in readiness early in March.

The People's church is typically a community church, being the only church at East Lansing, a suburb of Lansing, Michigan, the state capital. The Michigan Agricultural College is located at East Lansing. The school is one of the largest and oldest of the federal land grant colleges and has around 3,000 students. East Lansing is taking on new commercial importance and during the past year has added a half-score of new business places to its "main street."

Believes in Advertising Coming Attractions.

Advertising the character of a theatre by using coming attractions in the advertisements of the current production is an idea which is being used by Jack Boyle, of the Strand theatre, Fort Madison, Iowa. Nearly half of all the advertising used by the theatre is devoted to attractions which will appear at the theatre at some future time. Mr. Boyle declares that the value of this sort of advertising has already been attacked by increased receipts.

"Such advertising is of special value to exhibitors in towns around the size of Fort Madison (50,000 population) or smaller," declares Mr. Boyle. "No matter how small the place is, the screen patrons are right up-to-date in the matter of releases, and the reviews which they read of the pictures that are making the hits in the larger cities on first runs or pre-release dates make a big impression on them. The particular picture which you happen to be running may have slipped out of their memory, or again maybe they never heard of it, but the thing that gets them is to see that in the future you will run the picture which is at the present time making a big hit in the larger cities. They draw the conclusion that if you have booked productions of that sort as soon as you are able to obtain them, the one you are running at the present time must be good.

"It makes a reputation for a house quicker than any other way I know of. The continuous advertising of the big productions as future attractions naturally brands your house as being the place where the big productions are shown and a steady day by day patronage results. Until something else turns up that I regard as better, and from the results I have gotten from this form of advertising, I have to be very good, announcements of future attractions will continue to be carried in all advertising for the New Strand theatre."

Advertising Idea With a "Kick" in It.

In these arid days of "less than one-half of one per cent," a brewery wagon is in itself a sight to excite curiosity. For that reason, John D. Howard, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative in San Francisco, effected a tie-up with a local brewing company which attracted several times the amount of attention which the ordinary wagon usually gets. Bryant Washburn's latest "The Six Best Cellars," was the picture which was being shown at the Portola theatre. The picture being a prohibition comedy, the idea of a tie-up quite appealed to the advertising manager of the Kaimer Brewing Company, and with his permission a banner advertising the picture, as well as the Kaimer product, whatever it is, was attached to the rear of every one of the dozen trucks of the brewery and was borne around the streets of Frisco for the full week of the Portola's engagement.

New Fox Star Proves Hit at Dayton

Gill Barrows, manager of the New Auditorium theatre, at Dayton, Ohio, declares in a report that he has received that Miss Shirley Mason's first starring production for William Fox has awakened other producers for the possibilities of this type of screen entertainment.

The New Auditorium, which Mr. Barrows manages for the Auditorium Amusement Company, has a capacity of eleven hundred. After the first day's showing of "Her Elephant Man," the manager expressed his regret that the picture had been booked for only four days instead of a full week. In the busy city of Dayton, he states, went far above his greatest expectations and has established the Fox star firmly in his locality.

White House to Have Pre-Release Show

When "Cynthia of the Minute," the new Gibraltar specialty feature, is ready for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., a print will be sent at once to the White House at Washington, addressed to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, and it is probable that the President and Mrs. Wilson will witness the new production in a private projection before anyone else.

Lloyd Ingrams Will Direct "Old Dad"

Lloyd Ingrams, who has two of the year's best pictures to his credit—"Mary's Ankle" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" is now directing Mildred Harris Chapin in "Old Dad," a Louis B. Mayer production which will be released through First National. The story is written by Famous Hallowell Abbott and starred Mary Pickford. "Old Dad" was even more enthusiastic. You certainly have rapped it up at a hundred and fifty miles an hour and picked flowers every inch of the way," he wrote.

The thrills you have injected positively make this picture $20 per cent.

Much Press Advertising on "Daredevil Jack"

Advertising campaigns, conducted by exhibitors in connection with Pathe's new serial, "Daredevil Jack," have been confined for the most part to straight "hoots" and cheaper announcements, in many cases full-page ads having been used with large-sized displays. Teaser displays have also been used; for example, the insertion of a small head photo, just before the title, "Who Is He?"

Eileen Sedgwick Coming in Two-Reelers

Eileen Sedgwick, remembered as the heroine in "The Radium Mystery," has been signed by the Pacific Producing Company to appear in two-reel westerns. Her first is "Sergeant Hammond of the Border," which was written by Francis Power and will be directed by William Craft. Others in the cast include Joel Morris, George Williams, Robert Kintran and Joe Dickson.

George Sargent to Direct Vitagraph Star

George Sargent has been engaged to direct Alice Joyce, the Vitagraph star. Active work on this production began this week. Vitagraph has not yet announced the title of the subject.

Mr. Sargent was formerly stage director with Colan and Harris.
Governor Smith Congratulates Exhibitors

Sydney S. Cohen, president of New York State Motion Picture Association, wrote a letter which recently held such a stir in theatrical circles as the one from the N. Y., is in receipt of a letter from Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York, congratulating him on his activities in the present situation.

"As long as we step in and are able to say that we have not only been able to sell a better average product, that means our future is assured, and so is your future," was the gist of the governor's message.

"As to the future, prestige is everything," he continued. "We know that there is always a greater opportunity in New York, and that the public is not satisfied with the present product. We will be in a position to realize and then the general public will be able to judge the worth of our product."

Mr. Smith ended his message by saying that he is glad to see that the exhibitors have stood up and supported themselves in the fight for better products.

The moving picture exhibitors of New York have been coming forward in a body in the past week, by enthusiastic backing to every call made upon them."

In a recent interview, Governor Smith stated that the New York State Motion Picture Association had done a splendid job in the last few years, and that the state was well pleased with the results.

"We have always believed in the motion picture industry," he said. "It is a great industry, and it has brought great wealth to the state."

"We are pleased to see that the exhibitors have been doing a fine job," he continued. "We are pleased to see that they are doing it in the right way, and we are pleased to see that they are doing it for the right reasons."

"I am glad to see that they are doing it," he said. "I am glad to see that they are doing it for the right reasons."

Governor Smith ended his message by saying that he was pleased to see that the exhibitors had been doing a fine job, and that he was pleased to see that they had been doing it for the right reasons.

Film Exports Largest in Past Years

Motion Picture News

Film exports to the United States reached a new high in 1924, according to the latest report of the National Bank of New York.

Live News of the Week’s Activities

From the Producers

A colorful setting for Marion Davies’ beauty in a scene from her Cosmopolitan production “April Folly,” a Paramount-Artcraft release.
MARSHALL NEILAN yesterday made public his plans, on which he has been quietly working for the past few months, for the production of a number of foreign subjects in Europe. Mr. Neilan will take an entire producing unit with him including various famous players among which will be Marjorie Daw, who has achieved the success of her career in "The River's End.

Mr. Neilan will produce a number of stories in the different historic locales offered in England, France, Belgium and Spain and will be the first independent producer to take a company abroad since the war. In his absence from his Hollywood studios, various American productions on which he is now working will be completed there under his supervision, the details for this work to be arranged before he leaves.

To attend to advance preparations for Mr. Neilan's activities abroad, Harry Ham, his personal foreign representative, sailed the Adriatic Saturday, March 20th. Mr. Ham arrived in New York from the West Coast recently in speaking of Mr. Neilan's foreign plans he said: "The American motion picture public will welcome foreign backgrounds in motion pictures. For years we have had practically nothing in the way of foreign-produced subjects. With pictures offering the totally different locations obtainable only abroad, we open a new class of film entertainment since the war started.

"We intend to do foreign stories staged in the exact locale of the plot. An entire producing unit will accompany Mr. Neilan, including a number of important players. I am leaving on the Adriatic and among my duties abroad will be the preparation of advance details affecting Mr. Neilan's activities there. The present plan is to have the entire company make the trip with in a few months, or sooner if the many arrangements we have in mind, can be perfected before then."

Mr. Ham stated that Mr. Neilan would in the near future announce further details concerning his foreign trip, including the names of the stories he is to produce, which he said will be of international prominence. "We feel that we will have some very interesting information for exhibitors shortly," said Mr. Ham, "and realize fully the great opportunity of the fertile territory offered us."

Mr. Ham is American-born, but has been educated in England and on the Continent. He comes from a very influential family in European circles. His brother at present is American Consul General in Spain. As foreign representative to Mr. Neilan, Mr. Ham is particularly suited for his work abroad, having spent most of his life there. Mr. Ham has been connected with the motion picture industry for some eight years, and during his sojourn in Europe as an officer in the R. F. A. he had many opportunities to study motion picture conditions abroad since the war.

In the meantime, Marshall Neilan has just finished his second independent production for First National release, following "The River's End," which is said to be breaking records everywhere. Few details concerning this second picture are available at this time, although it is stated that Matt Moore and Marjorie Daw play the leading roles. A third film is now under way and advance preparations for "Peril," in which Wesley Barry will be starred, has also been started. May 28th is the tentative sailing date of the Marshall Neilan group for England, where the first film will be staged.

Comic Strip Bosses Monk
Universal Issues Cartoons to Explore Joe Martin, Monkey-Actor

JOE MARTIN, Universal's almost human orang-outang and the central figure of many Universal comedies, is being exploited throughout the country by a novel method—the publication of a comic strip entitled "The Life, Loves and Adventures of Mr. Joe Martin." These strips are issued weekly and are gratis in six-column mat form to those newspapers requesting them. Already many papers have asked for the service. The series has just begun.

There is no advertising or Universal publicity connected with these "comics" except the name "Joe Martin," and caricatured representation of the famous monkey.

The subject matter of these cartoons is a varied assortment of humorous situations depicting Joe's adventures from the time he is hatched from the jungle home with promises of stardom and high pay. The artist is Forrest A. McPherson, a newspaper cartoonist, who worked on several middle west papers before the war.

Universal is planning to have Joe make a personal appearance in those towns where the "Joe Martin comic" is published. Many exhibitors have seized the opportunity for this exploitation and have arranged with local papers for the publication of the series.

American Special Gets Heavy Bookings

"That name of a famous grand opera singer is not without weight with the exhibitors when it comes to booking a special, has concrete evidence in the volume of signed contracts which the producers of 'The Honey Bee' are receiving, especially when that name is backed by historic talent and a charming personality." Such is the opinion expressed by the American Film Company, Inc., in commenting on the bookings that have been received for "The Honey Bee" which presents Mile. Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe and challenger for Jack Dempsey's crown, and his pretty young bride and manager, M. Descamps, arrived in New York Tuesday morning on the French liner La Savoie. The Frenchman came here under contract to pose for a Robertson-Cole special, which will be directed by John G. Adolphi and produced at a studio in New Jersey. Work on this super special will commence Tuesday.

The welcome extended Carpentier was on a par with the distinguished ambassadors of European nations during the war. From the moment that the Customshouse red carpet was unrolled beside the vessel, the French pugilist was a very busy person.

Would he speak a word of greeting to the American press? The vanquisher of Beckett, Britain's pride, would—and did. He said in his attractive broken English and through his interpreter that his one message to America was one of thanks for the assistance that she had so generously given to his beloved "patrie" when she needed it most.

There was no doubt in Georges' mind as to which nation had gone into the world war at the crucial moment. He said: "France realized the tremendous debt she owes the United States, and she shall never forget it. Accompanied by more than 70,000 of your valiant sons for the defense of her soil and to save the world from the blood spilt by her, we are returning to our own soil." "There is only one way of showing my appreciation of the United States," Carpentier said, with his inimitable smile, as the Statue of Liberty appeared off the La Savoie's quarter, "and that is by exclaiming, 'Vive l'Amerique! Vive les Etats Unis!'" And Georges' homage was repaid by a cheer for France from his delighted interviewers and spectators.

Carpentier was quite reticent when asked to discuss his motion picture and fight plans. Pressed repeatedly by the reporters for a statement on his championship fight with Dempsey, good-natured, smiling Georges showed evident traces of fatigue. Then came rather explosively a volley of French.

"He says he is inflated because you do not ask him about his wife, instead of talking business," said the interpreter. The reporter continued good-naturedly asked on the cue, but the information that they derived concerning Madame Carpentier and the romance which preceded their marriage was as meager as the fight intelligence.

"I am amazed," said the French pugilist when he was received by the lusty yells of a crowd of more than 1,000 noisy admirers on the pier as the La Savoie drew into her berth. And he was more than amazed when, after passing through the front ranks of a reception committee, he was ushered into West Street, where another crowd of more than a thousand fight fans had collected to pay him homage. Faut cheered him all along the route to his hotel. The warmth of the reception was very pleasing to the Frenchman, who saw in it a sign of the ever-growing friendship between France and the United States.

Welcome

Carpentier was met down the bay by Adolphi, and John P. Kelley, publicity director for Robertson-Cole. Adolphi, who will be remembered, for his work in the "Cavell Case," continued to register silence when asked to give an inkling as to the plot of the story. Carpentier is to be starred in, "It will all come out in good time," he smiled as he banded Georges and Mrs. Carpentier into their auto on the trip from the pier to the Biltmore.

Assembling "Yukon" Film
Making of Robert W. Service's Poem Done with Much Difficulty

CHARLES MILLER started work this week in New York City on assembling "The Law of The Yukon," his first special feature for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Camera work was completed a short time ago when the company returned from Port Huron, Mich.

The production is founded on Robert W. Service's famous poem, "The Law of The Yukon," which sounds the keynote of the poet's most popular volume, "The Spell of The Yukon." From the poem is taken "...one of the most powerful stories of life in the Canadian Northwest, it is said.

The keenest expectations have been aroused in the picture among officials of Realart Pictures Corporation, which will distribute it, and preparations were made to exploit it on a scale proportionate with its expected importance as one of the outstanding and notable features of the year.

Mr. Miller discussed his experiences in making the picture with great enthusiasm. The blizzards during the winter gave a picturesque background that, according to Mr. Miller, he could not have bettered even by taking his company into the Northwest.

"The storms, however, were not an unmixed blessing," Mr. Miller said. "They made it extremely difficult at times for us to make progress with our work. This could only be done at the cost of great physical exhaustion, and I believe the company is to be congratulated on the spirit with which they overcome conditions that paralyzed other activities elsewhere.

"For one thing, it was very difficult to hunt location, I managed to accomplish something, however, when a local inventor came to the rescue with an automobile sleigh, which was not only ingenious but practical. Of course there are a number of expensive automobile sleighs on the market, but this was a simple device for putting a machine on runners."

Locklear Forms Company
New Organization to Star Aviator-
Actor in Feature Pictures

LOCKLEAR Productions, Inc., is the name of a new company formed to make feature pictures, starring Locklear, the daredevil of the skies, who has proven in his recent triumph, "The Great Air Robbery," a Universal Jewel Production, to be a big box-office attraction.

Joe Brandt is president of the new corporation, Isadore Bernstein vice-president and supervising director, C. Eddie Eechols secretary and S. L. Barnard treasurer. It will be noted that Lillian, Locklear does not appear in the list of officers and it is understood that he is leaving the business management of the company entirely in the hands of his experienced associates.

According to officials of Locklear Productions, Inc., it is planned to give the star full latitude to do death to his heart's content in the forthcoming productions, but however sensational his plays may be, refinement and artistry will be the watchword.

Isadore Bernstein has purchased "The Air Pilot," Randall Patrick's story, to be used as Locklear's first production. This novel was published in 1913 and now is in its fourth edition.

Locklear is not only an aviator, he is also a professional swimmer and fancy diver and motorcycle rider of note. He also has won numerous medals and cups in boat races and at present owns and drives the sister to Barney Oldfield's "Golden Submarine." The executive headquarters of Locklear Productions, Inc., will be Couriers' Building, Chicago, and an eastern office will be maintained on Broadway, New York. Distribution plans are being considered at present and will be announced at an early date.

Three stirring scenes from "The Virgin of Stamboul," the big 7 reel Universal feature starring Priscilla Dean as Salas, the beggar girl of the streets
Mayflower Features on Way

Production; Circus Acrobat Starred

particularly stresses the timeliness of the forthcoming Chuardt production. Though said to be totally dissimilar from "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," Chuardt's previous picture, which Mayflower presented through Realart, the director's new subject will contain an equal measure of dramatic force and suspense. The picture, it is declared, will be lavishly mounted. Full details, including title, author and cast, will be made public upon the completion of the picture, which it is expected will take place within a week.

Bird Millman, aerial performer, has been added to the list of international celebrities appearing in motion pictures. The noted circus star makes her screen debut in "Helen of Purple," R. A. Walsh's first independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Ever since she attained prominence as a star of the circus and vaudeville stage, Miss Millman has been sought by picture producers, says the Mayflower Corporation.

Contracts calling for her appearance here and abroad, however, have prevented her from engaging in film work, it is stated.

Miss Millman lately appeared in the Ziegfeld Follies. Her appearance in the Walsh production was made possible by the closing of the Ziegfeld show, two weeks before the inception of the circus season.

Miss Millman has already commenced work at the Paragon Studios, under Walsh's direction. She will appear as a tight-wire walker in an elaborate cabaret scene, performing many acrobatic feats, it is stated.

Upon completion of her work in "The Deep Purple" the aerial star will join Barnum and Bailey circus, which opens its season at Madison Square Garden.
New Films to South America

All that is necessary to make an American producer, exporter or moving picture man pick up his ears, is to say, "South America," for the southern half of the continent today is regarded by many as the moving picture man's land of opportunity. Therefore, when the Argentine, newspaper man, trade expert, former theatrical manager and dramatic editor, reached Chicago last week, after a ten-months' tour of the South American republics, making a trade survey for the J. W. Fuller Company, a trade paper merchandising house in the world, we said to him, "And how does South America look to you from a moving picture angle?" and got a reply which is a real close-up of the situation and gave us something to think about.

"The West Coast of South America, as well as the republics of the Caribbean, constitute golden soil for the manufacturers of American films," said Mr. Robinson. "So far, the market has been scratched—that is all.

"My recent trip took me through Costa Rica, Venezuela, Colombia, Panama, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile. In Venezuela I visited all the coast cities, as well as the gay city of Caracas, the capital. In Colombia, I made the Sinúopoty River trip to Bogota, 900 miles from the coast, and on the return trip went to Medellin, the rich capital of the department of Antioqua.

"Eighty per cent of the films shown are of American origin. But our people take the films in a take of sending down old, shopworn films. Most of the films I saw were from three to five years old. Just as soon as the South American finds out that he is being imposed upon by old films, and remembers, he will find out soon that there will be a sentiment against us in a new direction.

"Producers must realize that we must give the South American a square deal. These people are well educated, cordial, cultured and strictly up-to-date. They have plenty of money and spend it freely if you meet them half way. It is unfair to them, and to the reputation of the film industry, to send them shabby old reels that have gone the round of every ten-cent theatre in the United States before being exported.

"Their tastes in drama are very high, and it is witnessed by the fact that the sterling actor, Frank Keenan, is perhaps the most popular male star in the territory I visited. A Frank Keenan picture will crowd any house all day and night. In Peru, when I was there, a serial with Grace Conrad and Elmo was doing an excellent business."

Among our women stars, girls of the type of Anita Stewart and both Talmadge girls are well liked. Our vampire films do not find sympathy. Certain kinds of American comedies have not taken well, but my opinion is that the joyous fun of a "Fatty" Arbuckle film would find great favor.

"Love stories of the intense sort are wanted. That is why the Italian, of the European films, finds favor. The Italian film invariably is of the old chest-heaving and big-eye-gaze sort. On the other hand, a drama with plenty of action, a few killings, and an interwoven love scene, is fitted to the tastes of South America.

"But our Western cowboy film falls flat everywhere excepting in Argentina, because the people do not understand the American lingo. In Argentina, however, the film would be a success, because the people there know the cowboy, although under the name of "gauche" from their own great cattle plans.

"Good acting always is appreciated. I do not believe we could possibly find a film that would be too high grade for these people in the line of acting. You must remember that almost every member of the elite in South America has been educated in France, England or the United States, and many of them talk far better English than we hear in our own New York or Chicago.

Exchange Men Well Pleased

Robertson-Cole Managers Enthusiastic at Convention Screenings

Not the least of the enthusiasm with which the Robertson-Cole managers went back to their exchanges after the first convention held last week in New York was inspired by their views of "The Butterfly Man," "The Fortune Teller," two special productions which are to be given to the trade as early releases. Introductions to these specials, which they are to distribute during the spring, took place in the hall room at the Hotel Astor at the close of two of the luncheons which were held there daily during the convention.

The branch managers went home with the feeling that in these two pictures they will have two productions not only easier to sell than anything which they have offered in some time, but which will make many future friends for Robertson-Cole. They declared to be the best pictures of any made by them while East and films which will stand comparison with the best which is being given the screen today.

"We are glad," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole, "close of the convention," "to learn that all our branch managers sincerely, share the trust that we have put in these two special. We believe that "The Butterfly Man" is the best picture that Lew Cody has ever produced. It is a well loved "Chicata" which established him as a star of the first degree. Our "The Fortune Teller" is concerned, it is a picture which will stand among the classics.

Current Releases For Paramount-Artcraft

"April Folly," adapted from the novel by Cynthia Stockley and presenting Marion Davies as its star, is the Cosmopolitan production which shares with Wallace Reid in "Excuse My Dust" the honors of the Paramount-Artcraft release schedule for March 21.

Conway Tearle, well known for his role opposite Nemo and Constantine Talmadge and Clive Kimball Young, is Miss Davies' leading man. Directing the role of the publisher-hero, Herbert B. Lewis, appropriately sinister as the "heavy" and Madeline Marshall, Hattie De Lava, Armea Sweeney, Warren Cook, Spencer Charters and Charles Peyton are also in the cast. "Excuse My Dust," which is a story of automobile accidents, Wallace Reid is seen as "Todles" when the speed limit; Ann Little is Dorothy, now married to Kimball Young; "Theodore Roberts is "Old Bird," Ward. Dorothy's father, head of the Dace Company; Guy Oliver is the mechanic; and Tully Marshall is seen as the head of the rival firm.

Says New Film Adds to Author's Fame

Because of the impetus given the success of Mary Pickford by "Tess of the Storm Country," and to the surprise of many of the Storm Country producers, there is much curiosity among exhibitors as to just what "Polly of the Storm Country," the latest of the Storm Country stories by Grace Miller White, will do for Mildred Harris Chaplin's Drama management of Lester B. Mayer.

Miss White herself personally believes "Polly of the Storm Country," by the by, written, and those who have already seen the finished screen product are quite sure that it furnishes the opportunity for the finest work Mildred Harris Chaplin has yet accomplished during her motion picture career.

McMackin Engaged to Direct Bible Series

Archer McMackin has been engaged by the Historical Film Corporation to serve as director in the filming of the Bible. Three stories are now being prepared by this company and production work is progressing. The first will be titled "The 920 Prophets" this second, "When Was Young;" and the third, "A Letter to Philemon." Historically Warnecke is author of the stories and continuity and scenario writer for these subjects. The Historical Film plans to use the studio formerly occupied by the Robin Film Company.

Capitol to Show Third Realet Production

"Sinners," Alice Brady's recent production for Realet Pictures Corporation, has been booked by the Capitol theatre in New York City as the attraction for the week of April 28.

"Sinners" is the third Realet picture to be booked at the Capitol. It follows "A Man and A Woman" and "The Luck of the Irish," also an Allan Dwain production, and "The Luck of the Irish," also an Allan Dwain production, continued by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, were the two previous attractions to the theater's former premiers at the big New York house.

Ascher Leaves to Join "Evil Eye" Company

Sidney Ascher, head of Ascher's Enterprises, Inc., who is producing "Of the Country's," the new "Evil Eye," in which the light-weight champion of the world, Joe Leonard, has the star role, left New York March 7 to join his company on the coast.

Mr. Ascher will make his trip to the coast over the new American Express steamer, once the popular steamship, and it is expected that his partner, Joseph A. Jacobs, the firm's star, will follow him in a few days' time before the final scenes are "shot.

Photographs of Principal Players Included in Aids "Honey Bee"

A TWENTY-FOUR page "Honey Bee" campaign book for the use of exhibitors is ready for distribution to exhibitors at the Pacific Exchanges. One of the outstanding features of this press book is several pages devoted to photographs of the star and principal players. This is to meet the need constantly voiced by exhibitors that they want pictures of the principal members of the cast as they appear in real life off the stage. So here are full page half-tones in fine screen of Mine, Margaretta Sylva, and also excellent photographs of Thomas Holding, Nigel Bruce, Albert Ray and Kid McCoy.

Another feature is a unique suggestion for a newspaper ad teaser, a sample of which stands out in color—dark blue and gold—in the campaign book. What is required to accomplish a "smashing" ad is a few inches of blank space in a newspaper and some blue and gold "Honey Bee" stickers which may be ordered from the nearest Pacific Exchange.

Some free admission tickets to the show would pay two small boys to paste these stickers in the white space reserved for the purpose, before the newspapers are distributed. An upper corner of the page would, of course, be preferable, and it is believed that this brilliant little ad will dominate the whole page. While this idea is undoubtedly not feasible for a large daily of a metropolis, it will prove a winner in a smaller city.

In every department this campaign book aims to be practical. It offers a synopsis which is really a thumbnail sketch, "catch-lines" which will catch, and "Funny Spots" which are funny.

Metro Gets New Playwright

Eugene Walter Latest Literary Figure on the Metro Staff

EUGENE WALTER, author of "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way," "Fine Featherers" and other notable stage successes, has joined Metro's staff of authors. The dramatist is already at work on a manuscript for the screen, according to the announcement from the Metro offices, telling of his acquisition by that producing and distributing corporation.

Mr. Walter is the third distinguished playwright to become associated with Metro within the past few weeks. The other two are Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," and "The Thirteenth Chair," and Kinsella Smith, who wrote "The Fortune Hunter" and "Brewster's Millions." These three comprise a formidable dramatic triumvirate.

In connection with its acquisition of Mr. Walter, Metro has issued the following statement:

"Metro's policy in placing the leading American dramatists under contract to write for the screen is in line with the often-repeated conviction of the company's guiding heads that the greatest need of the industry to-day and its greatest difficulty is to obtain stories by master craftsmen that will realize to the full the artistic possibilities of the silent drama."

"Mr. Eugene Walter has frequently been referred to as America's leading dramatist. He won through to success after tasting the bitterest dregs of adversity. He slept on park benches in New York with the manuscript of "Paid in Full" in his pockets, before he finally obtained recognition."

Blache to Direct New Metro Production

Herbert Blache has been selected to direct "The New Henrietta," the first Winchell Smith production for Metro, at the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Blache is described as "directing the Hope," the first of the five great Drity Lane melodramas to be released by Metro.

New Production Forces Active in Canada

A moving picture producing enterprise, possessing an imperceptible color, has been established at Montreal, Quebec, according to an announcement made by A. Reynolds Allison, an English playwright and producer, who states that he represents a syndicate of Canadian interests. The new company has been called the Patricia Photo-Players, Limited, and the capital of the company has been placed at $1,000,000; it is declared. The object of the company is to produce photoplay features and to exploit British and Canadian releases.

Three men have been named in connection with the enterprise; these being Maurice R. Coste, William C. Smith of St. John, N.B., and Mr. Allison. The latter declares that the project is already well under way and that production will be started in less than two months. The first feature will be "The Re-Birth of a Nation," it is announced, and this picture will depict post-war developments in Canada, it is claimed.

In connection with activities in the Canadian moving picture producing field, announcement has been made that the studio at Trenton, Ontario, is now being used for the making of one-reel comedies under the direction of Jean Hornbostel, secretary of the York Picture Corporation of New York. The first of these comedies is called "Oh Joy" and the principals include Edna Hines, John Florence and Albert E. H. Grupe.

"Just a Wife" Pleases Rochester Manager

The Regent Theatre, of Rochester, N. Y., one of the leading motion picture theatres in the Eastern part of the United States, was the first to wire congratulations to Lewis J. Selznick upon the excellence of "Just a Wife," the initial release of National Picture Theatres, Inc.

The Regent wire was sent immediately after the conclusion of the presentation in Rochester of the production, and coincidental with the release of the picture which is being distributed to exhibitors throughout the country. The opinion was expressed by the management of the Regent that the feature should prove a record box office attraction.

Tourneur Finishes New Film for F.P.-Lasky

Maurice Tourneur has finished the final scenes in his forthcoming production, "The Pavillon on the Links," and the production is now receiving its finishing touches being presented by the Famous Players-Lasky Co. The photoplay is a visualization of one of Robert Louis Stevenson's short stories.

The story has been enacted by a cast of good players, including Jack Gilbert as Cassiles, Janice Wilson as Clara Huddleston, Spottiswoode Aiken as her father, Tarry S. Northrup as Northwood and Wessy Barry.

Jackson at Screening of His First Play

With confirmation of the recent rumor that Arthur Jackson, playwright and dramatist, had signed a contract with William Fox to contribute to the studio's magazine department, comes the report that Mr. Jackson, well-known in New York dramatic circles, has witnessed a special showing of his first pictorial endeavor, and has pronounced the production superb.

Arthur Jackson is known to the theatregoers of the country as the author of "Scandals of 1919" a topical revue crowded with fun and frolic.
Super-Special Now Available

THROUGH a change of plans decided upon late last week, in deference to request of independent exhibitors, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release the Paramount-Artcraft super-special, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," in which John Barrymore is starred, on March 28, and on that date the production will open an engagement at the Rivoli theatre, New York City.

"It was our original intention," said S. R. Scat, sales manager, "to release 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' early in June, as a fitting subject to offset the slump in theatre patronage which usually makes itself keenly felt at that time of year. But so many exhibitors had heard such great things about the picture and made known their desire to have it released now that I got into long-distance communication with Mr. Liechtman, with the result that we are releasing it immediately.

"I have no hesitation in saying that the picture is not only the most perfect production made on the screen by John Barrymore, but it embodies the greatest acting ever contributed to the stage or screen by an American artist. Moreover, it is a remarkable example of what close co-operation can accomplish. For I understand that throughout its production the star was in constant consultation with Director John Robertson and Clara Beranger, who prepared the scenario from Stevenson's work."

"A unique and intensely interesting plot has preserved for more than forty years the popularity of Robert Louis Stevenson's 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' When the novel was first published in cheap shilling edition almost 250,000 copies were disposed of in a brief period, and today the strength of Stevenson's literary reputation and popularity of 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' are such that the book sales run into thousands annually.

"Probably no other author has ever conceived a more striking theme than the transition of personalities. Urged on by the temptation to satisfy his evil desires in security, Dr. Jekyll, a kind, respected member of the community, experiments with chemical formulas until he can change his own identity into that of an entirely different being. Not only does the man change mentally and spiritually from his former self, but his physical characteristics are diseased and blackened in the change to Mr. Hyde.

"The vivid action of the story, which was published for the first time in the stern Victorian era, caused it to be classified as a 'shocker,' and this was responsible for the cheap edition which marked its initial appearance. Subsequently its intrinsic merit as a work of literature was recognized.

"It was a no less eminent authority than Lord Osmorine, step-son of Stevenson and collaborator with him in some of his later works, who having seen Mr. Barrymore's portrayal of Jekyll and Hyde in the Famous Players-Lasky projection room, declared, 'Mansfield was the greatest Jekyll and Hyde of his generation without a doubt, but John Barrymore has done Mr. Hyde one better. It is doubtful if there will be another such portrayal in this generation or the next.'"

"The world owes a great debt to Mansfield, however, for it was he who suggested to Thomas Russell Sullivan the writing of a dramatic version of the Stevenson story, and it was first acted by him May 9, 1887, at the Boston Museum, Boston, Mass. The following September it was presented at the Madison Square theatre, New York.

"The leading feminine role of Millicent Jordan was by Maudie Mansfield, the latest beauty to make her way into motion pictures via the Ziegfeld Follies. In addition to her great beauty, Miss Mansfield has acting ability far above the ordinary. She has played in numerous Broadway successes, notably "The Savoy Girl," while in pictures she has appeared in all the Max Linder comedies and with Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover.""

"Brando Hurst, who plays Sir George Carew, is an English actor who is particularly gifted in striking character roles. As the district attorney in "With the Law," and with Rose Coghlan in "The Sporting Duchess," he laid the foundation for a successful stage career.

"Charles Lane, an actor of long experience both on the stage and in pictures, has the part of Dr. Richard Lanyon, while J. Malcolm Dunn, who plays the lawyer, John Utterton, first found himself playing leading parts in London and Paris dramas. Subsequently David Belasco recognized his ability and offered him the Irish boy in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." Recently he has been seen in numerous Broadway runs."

"Cecil Clovelly as Edward Enfield is accustomed to appearing in John Barrymore's successes, as he also has in past years, and had previously played with that star in "Justice," and "Peter Ibbetson.""

Heath Leaves Universal To Go With Metro

Percy Heath, general manager of the scenario department of the Universal Company, has resigned to accept a position with the Metro Company. He will be succeeded by Lucien Huhld.
Press Lauds Lloyd Comedy
Reviewers Hail "Haunted Spooks" as One of Best Comedies of Season

MOTION picture critics of the leading Metropolitan dailies, in passing judgment on Harold Lloyd's new $100,000 comedy, "Haunted Spooks," distributed by Pathé, which played at the Rivoli and Strand theatres, proclaimed it not only Lloyd's best effort but one of the finest comedies of the season. The opinion expressed by the New York Evening Sun representative reads as follows:

"The most entertaining feature of the Strand bill this week is the Harold Lloyd picture, called 'Haunted Spooks.' The audience yesterday afternoon roared over its comicalities. It's the funniest motion picture comedy of the season, Lloyd's attempts to commit suicide, and his adventures later with the very human spirits, far exceeded the ordinary fun limit of screen farces."

Almost as positive that Lloyd's latest attraction is his most representative screen work, was the reporter of the New York Tribune who covered the Strand show.

"The true feature of the bill at the Strand is the Harold Lloyd comedy, 'Haunted Spooks.' There were moments when this picture drew laughter from every member of the big Sunday audience, and it made all the people laugh some of the time. There is more than a semblance of plot to the thing; the titles are amusing; and the business which produces the laughs is astonishingly fresh and diverting."

From the pen of the New York Sun and Herald servile came the following praiseworthy comment:

"A word of blessing must be said for 'Haunted Spooks.' Harold Lloyd's latest frolic for it has something of a spirited plot, some of the most diverting suicides ever attempted on the screen, and altogether is hilarious enough to cause even a medium to cease, for the time being, to take ghosts seriously."

Minister Books a Western
William Russell in "The Valley of Tomorrow" on Church Bill

A SPECIAL booking of "The Valley of Tomorrow" made, according to the American Film, at the request of the Rev. J. A. Kil- lian for his church auditorium at Melrose, Mass., takes American Film as be speaking a broader and more advanced point of view on the church's role in regard to "movies" in general, and in regard to the portrayal of actual life dramas (which necessarily display elemental passions of hu- manity), in particular.

Commenting on the theme of the William Russell vehicle and the motive that prompted the clergyman to make a booking of this production, the American Film Company, Inc., states:

"This 'Flying A' super-drama draws a picture of the mountain people who migrated from the mountains of Kentucky to the broad plains and rugged mountains of the glorious West. The force of the old eye for an eye tradition, 'No Man Speaks Ill Innu- ence is done; that's our ancient law,' was broken by the mighty struggle of the hero of the story, and the story of the whole crowd, the consciences and the reactions upon his own family and friends. Of course, once in history, blood was shed. Was ever a battle won by imperfect mortals without heart rending scenes? But through the up hill struggle the higher concept of a more advanced ideal won out, and one could not leave the picturization of the sub- ject with feeling the nobler nature within him stirred to life."

"When the Rev. Kilian arranged for the booking of 'The Valley of Tomorrow' he was evidently perfectly willing that his flock should see American life pictured as it is laid bare in the pages of history."

“Penrod” Under Way Soon
Neilan Will Produce Tarkington Stories with Heustis Continuity

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the New York offices of Marshall Neilan Productions, that the director-producer would soon start work on his adaptation of Booth Tarkington's famous "Pen- rod" stories, rights for which were purchased last fall, at which time considerable rivalry was evident among picture producers, for the motion picture privileges to the stories.

Initial preparations for the productions of this photoplay are now under way in the studios of Hollywood. Reed Heus- tis, one of the best known newspaper humorists in the country, has just been en- gaged by Mr. Neilan to write the continuity for "Penrod." Mr. Heus- tis is known especially for his personally conducted columns which for a long time have been running in a great many newspapers throughout the country. Besides writing the continuity for "Penrod," he will prepare several original boy stories to follow.

The "Penrod" stories have for the past several years appeared in various magazines including Metropolitan, American, and Everybody's. In 1914 the book "Penrod" published by Doubleday, Page & Co., and proved one of the biggest successes of the year. In fact, the de- mand for these stories among the reading public was so great that in 1916, Doubleday, Page & Co. pub- lished a sequel by Tarkington, a novel form, entitled "Penrod and Sam."
Re-Issue of Talmadge Picture Planned

Joe Brands, general representative of the National Film Corporation of America, announces that this company is contemplating the re-issue of their first Norma Talmadge production entitled, "Captivating Mary Castles," which was produced by National several years ago and met with success wherever it was shown. The call for Talmadge pictures has become so great that National has decided to answer the insistent demands from exhibitors to re-issue this picture. It will be marketed on the states rights plan.

Universal Makes Story of English Authoress

Universal is producing a photoplay by a prominent London society woman. She is the Baroness de Meyer, and her story, written under the name "Clothes and Treachery," is being filmed as "The Devil's Pass Key" by Eric von Stroheim, the director of "Blind Husbands," the Baroness, who now makes her home in New York, has written many magazine stories. She also is the author of a novel, "Nadine, Narska," published several years ago. In her screen story, now "The Devil's Pass Key," she has woven much of the life and intrigues of Paris, in which she lived for many years.

"Shore Acres" Now Completed

SHORE ACRES," the Metro picturization of James A. Herne's play which constitutes an addition to the world's national dramatic heritage, is presented by the Metro with Rex Ingram Stars Alice Lake. Alice Lake is starred and Edward Connolly, who directed, was the heavy, wealthy rounds of New York theatrical producers, and was time after time returned to his author, who was making so desperate a fight against odds Mr. Herne had written and produced "Hearts of Oak," "The Minute Men," and "Margaret Flanders," but in "Shore Acres" he felt that he had achieved something new and something which, in a world where material interests hold sway, would outlast the great theatre walls that housed its production. Time alone will answer the faith of James A. Herne.

The script was finally presented to Mr. Field of the Boston Museum, who at length accepted the play for production largely on the strength of a letter written him by his friend, Dean Howells, a close friend of the author.

In speaking of its first appearance before the public, Hamlin Garland, the novelist, said:

"That glorious night at the Boston Museum, when "Shore Acres" began its golden tale of a hundred nights, and telegrams from New York poured in upon Mr. Herne offering "time" that formerly he had begged for."

This was the beginning of a record in play production that has remained unequalled in the American theatre. It marked the beginning of "Shore Acres" success on the stage—a success that has lasted for thirty years, and established a new standard through the experience and ship. In addition it marked the beginning of easier times for all that was part of its author. His production was made to nearly thirty years the greatest American drama. Rex Ingram directed the screen production and, among other things, achieved some exceptional photographic shots of a storm at sea and the wreck of a coastwise sailing ship.

Associated Exhibitors Active

With the arrival in New York from California of E. C. Quimby, its general manager, the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., sponsors the news that negotiations virtually have been completed for the early release through Pathé Exchanges of several big attractions. It is also stated that the American interests for several important sources of future productions soon will be made public.

Close on the heels of this information, as to which Mr. Quimby and other officers are quite reticent at present, comes the further information that it will be but a very short time before the hundreds of exhibitors who have expressed interest in the organization will hear, made known to them the full scope and workings of the sub-franchise part of the Associated Exhibitors plans. It is understood that Mr. Quimby cut short his visit to the Coast because of a vitally important proposition that developed in New York during his absence, and which now is in the process of being welded into a potentially powerful part of the co-operative machine under whose workings every factor in the industry will benefit, it is asserted.

At present the Associated Exhibitors are being represented in California by Harry Cruddall, treasurer of the organization and owner of a string of theatres in Washington, D. C., who is known to be carrying on many of the negotiations started by Mr. Quimby, as well as opening new channels of activity in the state. Information from Los Angeles is to the effect that several big stars, directors and authors soon will begin work in the furtherance of the plans of the Associated Exhibitors, but that definite announcement as to names and connections cannot be made at present because of existing contracts.

Meanwhile the organization is working with enthusiasm, marshalling its various component parts into a cohesive unit powerful enough to make itself one of the biggest factors in the industry, and the moment its opening is made. This is possible, it is said, largely through the power of Pathé Exchange, Inc., and the courses laid out that ideals and judgment of men like Paul Brunet, Messmore Kendall, Edward Bowes and many of the other prominent persons who are already connected with the organization.

When seen at his offices Mr. Quimby was very reticent as to what he had accomplished in California.
Eileen Percy Signs with Fox
Contract Covers Play with Mix in Six Months; to "The Untamed"

EILEEN PERCY has been placed under a six months contract by William Fox to appear as leading lady with various Fox stars. The first production in which Miss Percy will figure under her new contract is the screen adaptation of the Max Brand novel "The Untamed." Tom Mix will be the star of this Western drama, and Miss Percy will be in the chief female role.

In her latest picture "Leaves To Me" also a Fox production, the versatile actress did such fine work opposite Unknown that when Fox decided to place her under contract for other male stars at his Western studios, she has already appeared with almost a score of the most popular male stars of the screen in roles which varied from the strongest drama to light comedy and farce. In each line she is said to have acquitted herself with equal success, and with each impersonation has established herself more firmly among the leading players of this country.

Miss Percy is Irish born, having been given her first golden smile in Belfast. While still a baby her parents brought her to this country. Little Eileen received her education in New York. Like many of her professional sisters, she is a graduate of the convent—this particular convent being in Brooklyn.

Miss Percy received her early stage experience in the musical field. For two years she was in the front rank of the famous Ziegfeld Beauties, starting with Ziegfeld while in her sixteenth year. It was while appearing with the late Gaby Deslys in the successful production "Song, Laugh and Love" that Mr. Ziegfeld discovered her and chose her for his bevy chorus. Later she was enhancing the beauty of the Coconut Grove atop the Century Roof when Douglas Fairbanks spied her and induced her to enter the picture field.

Begin on Vitagraph Special
Alice Joyce to Star in "Dollars and the Woman"; Gorgeous Scenes

Alice Joyce and a large company under the direction of George Terwilliger are commencing this week the Vitagraph special production, "Dollars and the Woman," adapted from the widely read story by Albert Payson Terhune. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario. It is expected that "Dollars and the Woman" will be released some time in May.

Miss Joyce plays the rôle of Madge Hillyer, a young society matron, married to Dan Hillyer, a poorly paid, and scarcely more a respect for his future is staked on an invention. The pair have been used to luxury and ease, but as the picture opens, they are beginning to find themselves in stratified circumstances. Soon, thereafter, they plunge heavily on Dan's venture in getting his invention into the hands of a western magnate. In order to put up a successful front that Mr. Hillyer, Dan and Madge have to resort to many audacious expedients, including entertaining at the Star, Creusot, modeled along the lines of the most gorgeous of New York mansions. One of the scenes, among the most ambitious of its kind ever staged for a film is the dining room scene in which over 200 persons are shown. This scene was staged in the largest set ever built at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Robert Gordon, who recently co-starred in several pictures with Sylvia Breamer, is the central figure in this scene. Prominent in the supporting cast of "Dollars and the Woman" are Crawford Kent, in the role of Arthur Crews, Madge's rejected sweetheart, and Jesse Stevens, well-known in stage and film circles as a character actress.

The Toll Gate Said to Be Hart's Best

Enthusiasm over his latest Paramount-Arclight picture, "The Toll Gate," on the part of the producer, William S. Hart, is taken to indicate that it is certainly one of the best he has ever done—If not the best. It embodies the story that Mr. Hart has planned and hoped to do for the past three years, and when the public has now been satisfied, "it should be sufficient evidence, says Famous Players-Lasky, that The Toll Gate" will come up to every expectation even of the most sanguine nature.

Those who saw the picture in an advanced screen at the Hart Studio in Los Angeles, maintain that it is William S. Hart at his very best—the William S. Hart everyone likes best. Also there is much praise for the cast and for the settings, which are far above the average.

By Lewis Feature

Breaking every record for Pathe feature business, "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis' first special for Pathe, has won a place for itself among the great pictures of the year. Sales figures established by "American City" and "The Thirteen Chairs" have been preeminent among Pathe marks, have been surpassed by "Other Men's Shoes".

Predicting that every theatre in Iowa will show the production, H. P. Conway, manager of the Des Moines Branch Office, has reported the remarkable success of the picture in his territory. Mr. Conway has planned for the coming months, at the Pathe Executive Offices preparing the schedule for his territory in the coming months.

Educational to State Its Policy

Preparing Booklet to Advise of Policy in Future

"I am afraid that a great many own exchanges and since we began to give especial attention to one and two red comedies we have had much of this material offered to us, people are aware that we have always taken in the past to assure quality in our product. I do not hesitate to announce that in the five years of our existence we have gone over a thousand feet of film for every foot that has been produced. It is a common thing for us to take 15,000 or 20,000 feet and then accept only enough material for a single reel out of it. Since we announced the enlargement of our work through our great deal of which we have reported in entirety. Some we have accepted, others we have made suggestions on and it may be possible that later production will come up to our standards."

"We are going ahead slowly for a very good reason. There is a temptation when a company is small to increase its potentialities to do things more or less hurriedly. The organization of our heads of departments is that there must be no speed that will interfere with marketing. We must not be be able to lower quality. We are delighted with the assurances that we have had from exchange and I feel confident that we are able to announce our complete plan and feel sure that our management will find that our structure is quite perfect when our doors are opened."

Endy Bennett at Work on New Ince Feature

Endy Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, is this week beginning work upon the production of Marjorie Benton Cooke's popular novel, "The Melting Pot," which has been sensitized by Agnes Christine Johnston. Laboratory interior sets which have for some weeks been in construction at the Ince Studios will lend color to the picture.

The new drama will be directed by Fred Niblo, photographed by George Barnes, and released under the Inte-Paramount-Arcafter banner.
Company Formed for Robertson-Cole

McGowan Productions, Incorporated, is the most recent unit to begin production on the west coast for Robertson-Cole. J. P. McGowan, who has been identified with the industry as actor and director, for at least ten years, is to be starred in a series of western pictures by this company, the first of which will be "Cold Steel," adapted from the George Shedd story, "In the Shadow of the Hills.

The supporting cast for "Cold Steel" includes Kathleen Clifford as leading woman, Elinor Fair, Stanley Wheatsheaf, Hop DePew and Mill Brown, Sherwood MacDonald as director and John Thompson as cameraman. The company is working at the Robert Brown studio, where all productions will be made.

International Film Issues Denial

International Film Service, Inc., has issued the following statement: "One or two newspapers have carried stories recently to the effect that we have acquired the Paragon Studios at Fort Lee. We wish to make a denial, as the facts are not true. International Film Service, Inc., has but one studio, which is located at 127th street and Second avenue, New York. Cosmopolitan Productions are made. This studio has just been completely outfitted and for the present fills our needs."

"Rio Grande" Released Soon

WITH a record of many motion picture plays adapted from stage successes, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will shortly release another stage play made into film. "Rio Grande," from the pen of Augustus Thomas, is the latest production of this character, and from hundreds of inquiries already received from exhibitors, it is evident that it will be in great demand from the moment of its release, states Pathe.

The Pathe record of successful motion pictures which were originally stage plays is an excellent one. The success of "The Thirteenth Chair" is rivalling the remarkable stage run of the play, and it is generally known that more than a million dollars was paid in at box office windows during the New York run of Bayard Veiller's success and to the various road companies, according to the Pathe statement.

Among the other big stage successes released as motion pictures by Pathe are "Common Clay," "Oh Boy," "The Narrow Path," "The Japanese Nightingale" and "A Woman of Pleasure." All of these productions have established records which warrant for the reception of "Rio Grande."

The widespread interest in the picture is believed to be due to the success of the many road companies which were sent out on the stage production. Not alone as a New York success, but on the road the play was one of the most successful productions of recent years, and it is reported to have grossed over a million dollars at the box offices.

As a stage production, the presentation was, of course, limited to the convenience of the theatre and to the confines of the set scenes, but, in the moving picture production, the full scope of the story may be seen. The great plains of the Southwest, the cactus levels of the Rio Grande, and the mountains of Mexico form the background of the scenes.

"Sex" Aroused Much Comment

EXCLAMATIONS of surprise and amazement, that confession of having been startled and some few protests over having been shocked by J. Parker Read, Jr.'s latest Louise Glaum production, "Sex," are the emotional demonstrations that have followed the showing of C. Gardner Sullivan's big story to the critics of the New York papers, according to W. Hodkinson, who are distributing this feature.

Miss Glaum's portrayal of Mr. Sullivan's bold and challenging role in "Sex" has brought about, quite unexpectedly, an uproar in the ranks of the critics. Perhaps the whole thing is due to the choice of the title "Sex," but in all events, states the company, the critical units have gone into quivers of excitement over the sudden discovery that there is such a thing as sex and considerable comment is the result.

Louise Glaum PictureStartles Critics at Showing

No critic, it is said, dares to forecast other than a tremendous financial success for Miss Glaum's big new production, and the lavish praise of the beauties and the richness of the production are sustained by an immediate nationwide demand for the picture to play pre-release engagements in the large cities on April 11.

To Jacob Fabian, the Paterson, N. J., showman and First National franchise holder, falls the honor of having the world premiere of "Sex." The picture opens a week's engagement at Fabian's Garden theatre in Paterson beginning March 29, and Charles Dooley, general manager of the Fabian enterprises, took this chance by rushing his opening after being told there was a possibility that the lithographs and certain accessories could not be definitely guaranteed of delivery in advance of that date. Having seen the picture with J. G. Kohl, the Newark manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Dooley determined that if necessary he would make his own accessories for "Sex" and the date was permitted to stand in keeping with his wishes.

Trade showings of "Sex" are being held this week in the thirty-two cities where the W. W. Hodkinson maintains branch managers and sales representation and preliminary inquiries from first run exhibitors reveal that exhibitor demand for the picture will be greater than the demand shown for any previous special production released under the Hodkinson auspices.

Robertson-Cole describes "Cabinet of Dr. Teller," the latest release from his company, as "one of the most interesting films ever made." He believes it will establish his company as a leader in the industry.

The film tells the story of a mad scientist who creates a creature that can talk. The creature, played by Capellani, becomes the center of a battle between good and evil. Robertson-Cole says the film is "a masterpiece of acting and direction." He predicts it will be a box-office sensation.

Neighborhood Exhibitors Plan to Make Their Theatres "First-Runs"

"I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the industry," said Robertson-Cole. "She brings a special quality to her performances."
Universal Contest Announced

HARRY M. Berman, General Manager of Exchanges for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announced this week the working plan of another national sales contest that is to be started next month among the exchanges. Universal Exchanges have been scattered throughout the United States. Mr. Berman has named it the Four Times Foiled contest, and the object of the amount of privilege money involved.

A new idea that will be vastly pleasing to the branch managers of the group idea, as worked out by Mr. Berman. Under this plan, the exchanges have been divided into five groups and all the competition is within these groups. Thus each exchange, instead of competing against twenty-five other exchanges, will compete only against exchanges of equal possibilities. Explaining this, Mr. Berman said:

"In our sales contests heretofore, we have had a difficult problem, due to the cause there was no possibility of starting everyone equally. Conditions in the field made it impossible for every exchange to be aloof on the same level. We have met this problem by arranging our Exchanges into groups of equal possibilities."

"In the first group, we have the exchanges in Los Angeles, Portland, St. Louis, Chicago, Philadelphia, and the like. These exchanges are about evenly matched, their possibilities are about the same and they are capable of a neck race all the way through."

"It is the same with the other groups. Group No. 2 includes Denver, Seattle, and Chicago. Group No. 3 has Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, San Francisco and Des Moines. Group No. 4 has St. Louis, Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Philadelphia. Group No. 5 has Cincinnati, Detroit, Buffalo, Toronto, Cleveland, and New York."

"Under this system, we have only first prizes. There will be first prize for each winner of each group. In the case of the first two groups, the first prize is for $750 each. The prize for the third group is $1,000. The prize for the fourth and fifth group is $1,750 each."

"That makes the prize totals $8,000. The other $1,000 is to be competed for on a national basis; every exchange against the other. The winner gets the $1,000 which is to be divided among employees not on the sales force."

"We have just notified our branch managers of this new $7,000 prize contest and have not had time as yet to learn how they took it. I understand that they are excited, that they will like it better than any of the contests that have preceded."

"The plan of determining the winner will be along the lines of previous contests. The Business of April, May and June will be measured against that of January, February and March. The largest ratio of increase determines the successful distributor."

Mr. Berman said that the contest among the exchanges was being launched at the busiest time of the season. He expects to tie it up with a regular "Spring Drive," he said, but that "The Virgin of Stamboul" will precede the other exchanges.

"The exchange managers have been waiting for something like this," he concluded. Our last prize contest was tremendously successful; but we expect bigger results this year."

While the regularly affiliated exchanges are engaging in this contest, Universal's independent exchanges also will enter the prize lists. The Big U Exchange, which handles the New York territory, has also started the ball rolling in this regard by setting for itself a lofty standard and agreeing to reach that mark.

Metro Resumes Work in East

STARTING with immediate production of three big special feature pictures created by the Metro star staff, Metro will reopen its New York studios, at No. 3 West Sixty-sixth-street, the first week in April. Announcement to this effect was made officially from the Metro offices.

The trio of stories selected for the initial three productions are "Clothes," the society drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock, which Metro recently purchased the screen rights; "The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, one of the five Drummond melodramas on the Metro production list, and "The Tyranny of Weakness," a novel by Charles Neilson. "Clothes" is already bought for the screen. These will be special productions, Metro announces.

"Clothes," which included a complete renovation and remodeling of the studios as well as actual work on the scenarios since the special new properties have been under way for several weeks. M. P. Staiger, formerly supervisor of offices, is now in charge of the remodeling of the Sixty-sixth-street studios, which have not been used by Metro for more than a year. Emotions from Metro's warehouse were time order restricting the use of coal sent the Metro producing organization west.

"Clothes," the Hopwood-Pollock drama, is rapidly being whipped into continuity form by Arthur Zelner, Mr. Zelner and his wife, Lois Zelner, are both members of the Metro scenario staff, Mr. Zelner was brought on from New York to the Pacific Coast to write the scenario of "Clothes," and he will have his script ready for the director of the production as soon as work is definitely under way at the Sixty-sixth-street studios.

"Clothes" it will be recalled, was Avery Hopwood's introduction to the American public as a playwright. His play, written in collaboration with Channing Pollock, laid its metropolitan premiere September 11, 1906, at the old Manhattan Theatre, Sixth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, which has since been razed to make place for a department store. The cast presenting "Clothes" included Grace George, Douglas Fairbanks and that sterling leading man, Frank Worthington.

"The story of "Clothes" is described as "the portrayal of feminine vanity, extravagance, and cruelty, and the disasters to which such weaknesses may lead."

The drama scored an impressive triumph. "The Tyranny of Weakness," which is to be an S-L Production, distributed by Metro, will be made at the Metro studios and have the benefit of Thawcy's personal supervision. This powerful novel is said to be replete with instantly dramatic and deft character drawing that will provide an all-star cast with splendidly contrived roles.

"The Last of Mrs. Walter" is writing the continuity for "The Tyranny of Weakness." This is his first endeavor since joining the Metro staff of eminent authors, which also includes Bayard Veiller and Winchell Smith. Mr. Walter, who, with "Paid in Full" and "The Easiest Way," has also established his position as one of America's leading dramatists, is equally at home with the most minor pictures and deeply enjoys his task of translating Charles Neville Buck's witty story to the screen. It will be the first of the five specials that Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin recently announced would be made by S-L Pictures.

"The Marriages of Mayfair" will be given a production of the greatest magnitude at Metro. This English melodrama is said to have all the punch and sappiness of action that made Drury Lane famous in London. It will be in the case of "The Best of Luck" and "The Hope." the first two of its quintet of productions, pictured by Metro, will be interpreted by a strong array of talent.
Big Run for Duncan Serial

Heavy Bookings for "The Silent Avenger" Reported by Vitagraph

VITAGRAPH issues the remarkable report this week that its latest super-serial, "The Silent Avenger," of which William Dun- can is now making a three-week tour in Alaska, has received a solid-week run or 105-day continu- ous showing at a big theatre in the Majestic theatre in Hartford, Conn., the show house that has undertaken this unusual enga- gement.

Vitagraph further declares that "The Silent Avenger" had reached, in the third week of its booking campaign, double the amount of bookings signed in a similar period for any previous chaptered production.

"The Silent Avenger" announces a statement from the Vitagraph offices, "enters this early success on the crest of a campaign which has been forthcoming for weeks. The serial is the first of the million-dollar group to come from the William Duncan unit of Vitagraph. It is the production on which Vitagraph has staked not only thousands of dollars, but a tremendous new theory, it is stated. Vitagraph de- clares the picture brings forward for the first time a serial style of action and spectacle which depends only upon heart interest.

"The widespread response from exhibitors in behalf of this serial comes at a time when the market is supplied with an unusual number of chaptered subjects. The William Dun- can production is declared to have universal appeal from the nature of its story and by reason of the established popularity of its stars."

Goldwyn Companies Busy

Cast for "Madame X" Is Chosen; Will Rogers Completes Feature

A unusually strong cast has been selected, it is said, by Goldwyn to support Pauline Frederick in the elaborate picturization of the cele- brated drama "Madame X," starred last week by Goldwyn Pictures Cor- poration at the Culver City Studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Little Pat Moore plays the part of Raymond Floriot as a child and Cassie Benger as the young barrister. William Curtinlach is cast as Louis Floriot and others selected for prominent roles are Albert Roece, Sydney Amsdorff, Willard Louis and Lionel Belmore.

Will Rogers has just completed "The Call Me Jim." After a short respite he will start work on his next picture under the direction of Clarence Badger. It is understood that much of the action in the story will be used in Rogers' coming production is laid in the west, affording an opportunity for the rope-throwing cowboy to introduce a number of his horse friends on the screen.

Harry Beaumont is taking the final scenes for Ben Ames Williams' "The Great Accident," starring Tom Moore, and soon will be ready to commence work on his next picture, "Officer 666," adapted from the popular stage farce that ran for more than a year on Broadway under the management of Colman and Harris. Jack Pickford and his com- pany, under the direction of Al Green, have gone to San Diego to take some big race track scenes that will be a spectacular feature of the production.

Mary Pickford Busy Again

Starts on "Op o' Me Thumb," Old Stage Success, for United Artists

CLOSING on the heels of the suc- cess that has been scored in every section of the country by Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists Corporation, "Pollyanna," comes the announce- ment from Hiram Abrams that he has received telegraphic informa- tion from Miss Pickford at her Hollywood studios that she has begun work on the picturization of the Maud Adams stage success, "Op o' Me Thumb."

"Op o' Me Thumb" created a sensation in London some years ago, and immediately after its suc- cess there Charles Frohman ac- quired the American rights for the production for his leading star, Maud Adams, and it was used by her during her successful engage- ment in the Empire theatre, New York, and afterwards on her tours throughout the country. "Op o' Me Thumb" is from the dual pens of two British playwrights, Fred- erick Fenn and Richard Pryce.

Chester Nears End of "Wallingford" Story

A new character in national ficion and films is growing rapidly out at the Vitagraph studio. The company announces this week that George Randolph Chester, collaborat- ing with Mrs. Chester, has com- pleted the twenty-third chapter of his new novel, "The Son of Wallingford."

It is intended that the production which will be made from this story will be under way within a few weeks, and its release will occur at the same time that the novel is running serially in a magazine. "The Son of Wallingford" will be a sequel to the famous stories of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford."

Mayo Starts Work Soon on "The Red Lane"

Frank Mayo's next feature for Universal will be "The Red Lane" adapted from the popular novel of that name by Hoffman Day. It will be put into production in a few days.

The story ran serially in the Popular Magazine several years ago.

Blackton Presents “The Blood Barrier”

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton enters the last half of his first year as a producer of Pathé pictures by issuing “The Blood Barrier,” considered the most virile of the five photo-dramas he has released through Pathé.

Issue of “The Blood Barrier,” the last story of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, is being prepared for April 1st, almost six months to a day after “The Moonshine Trail,” Blackton’s first Pathé attraction, went out to exhibitors. Meanwhile he has produced “Dawn,” “My Husband’s Other Wife” and “Respectable by Proxy,” all of which have been big box office winners.

“The Blood Barrier,” said to be different from previous Blackton offerings, is of a melodramatic type and features Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in the leading roles.

Doris Kenyon Popular in “Harvest Moon”

Doris Kenyon’s popularity attained by the success of her first W. W. Hodkinson release, “The Bambouche” and by her overnight rise to stage stardom in A. H. Woods’ “The Girl in the Limousine,” is reflected in the volume of contract bookings received on her second Deitrich-Beck production, “The Harvest Moon,” adapted from Augustus Thomas’ famous stage success.

The cast assembled by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., includes George A. Lesty, Earl Schenck, Wilfred Lyttelton, Grace Barton, Marie Shotwell and Peter Lang.

Publishers to Exploit "Treasure Island"

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that a tie-up has been effected with Charles Scribner and M. A. Donohue of Chicago in the exploitation campaign for the forthcoming production of "Treasure Island," Robert Louis Stevenson's novel. Both these publishing houses issue the standard forms of the famous novel, the picturization of which Paramount-Arcaft will release early next month.

A standard Paramount-Arcaft poster and photographs, both colored and in black and white or sepia rotogravure sheets, will be used to enhance the attractiveness of local bookshop windows in exploiting "Treasure Island."

Buck Jones Returns to Work After Accident

On January 28th Buck Jones, the widely-heralded cowboy made a star by William Fox, suffered a severe injury to one of his feet while at work in "Forbidden Trails" at the Hollywood studios, and has just returned to finish this new six-reeler. The accident occurred while the star, famed for his horsemanship and daring, was attempting a hazardous feat mounted on his big bighorn, Silver, in one of the scenes of "Forbidden Trails." Buck Jones returns to work before the camera with the assurance of the medical staff that he is as good as new.

C. J. VerHalen Establishes Bureau in Times Building; Well Qualified

C. J. VERHALEN, who recently resigned as advertising and publicity director of Robertson-Cole, after fifteen months with the organization, has opened up offices as advertising engineer in the Times building, Room 1114, Mr. VerHalen has already taken over several state right accounts for which he had laid out the entire advertising and publicity campaign. He will continue to supply the press book to the twenty-four sheets.

Mr. VerHalen has established himself as an advertising counselor, or consulting advertising engineer, giving expert advice and service to any organization contemplating a campaign. This service will be particularly valuable to those organizations who are without a fully equipped advertising staff, but Mr. VerHalen will also be available in a consulting capacity to other companies.

The need of just such an organization as this has long been felt in the industry, according to many of the independent producers and state right men who have consulted Mr. VerHalen. It is the belief of these men that accurately directed advertising has cost them many thousands of dollars. It is to remedy this condition the new company with only the highest trained specialists on its staff has been established.

After ten years in the industry directing advertising and sales campaigns, Mr. VerHalen is eminently qualified for the work. During that time he has had experience in every branch of the industry as an executive. He is accredited with the responsibility for many brilliant advertising campaigns.

Russell in A Suitable Role

William Russell is said to be at his best in the American production, "Slam-Bang Jim," adapted from "Snap Judgement," in which he appears as an indescribable, happy-go-lucky, city chap who wins the admiration of all as he copes with a succession of strenuous complications in an Arizona setting. It is a typical Russell role, with the mixture of comedy which, it is expected, will make "Slam-Bang Jim" particularly popular from the box office point of view. Considering the popularity of the Russell pictures filmed by the American, and, in this comedy-drama the intermingling of the East and West, giving the high points of both, it is not surprising that heavy bookings preceded the actual distribution of the prints," says a report from the American Film Company. "Unless it was in 'Six Feet Four,' Russell never had a better opportunity to let himself loose as the hero of humorous escapades and exciting adventures on a large scale.

"The Flying A drama is a story of mistaken identity and scrambled love. The high spots are a bridal scene which fades away in tears, and with melodramas on the absent but hopeful bridegroom; a free-for-all alley fist fight with police assistance; a real Western hold-up three against one hundred; a far Western dance hall in motion; a New York millionaire in a mad chase on mule-back, and finally the lovers again planning another wedding."

Big House Opens With Goldwyn Pictures

What is claimed to be another triumph for Goldwyn Pictures was scored this week, when two of the current releases were booked as opening attractions for the new Strand theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., a $300,000 house that is classed with the finest modern theatres in the state.

Having made a careful survey of all of the available material on the market, it is said, the manager selected "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for the first half of the opening week, and "The Blooming Angel" for the remaining days. Both of these productions have met with great popular favor at the New York Strand and other leading theatres in the largest cities of the country where they were given pre-release showings.

Franklin Films "Athalee" in Sierras

A wire just received by Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, from Sidney A. Franklin conveys the information that the director has penetrated deep into the Sierra Nevada snow country and is now filming scenes for "Athalee," by Robert W. Chambers, to be Franklin's first Mayflower production.

Mr. Franklin is accompanied by Sylvia Breamer, Conrad Nagle, Rosemary Tichby, Robert Cain and San De Grasse, the principal players in the "Athalee" cast, and a complete staff of technical experts.

"Better Pay" Contest Awards Third Prize

Miss L. V. Conover, of Los Angeles, is the winner of this week's prize of $50 in the "Better Pay for Teachers" movement of the Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day." Previous contests were won by Philadelphia and Brooklyn residents.

Miss Conover's topic was as follows: "The childhood of today is the government of tomorrow. The best possible training today is the only guarantee of the best possible Government tomorrow. Such training cannot be given by teachers harassed by poverty. Let the nation assure its future and for a great work pay a just price."
Tourneur to Travel in Europe and Africa

Maurice Tourneur is planning to leave America this fall for an extended trip through England, France, Spain and Northern Africa. His contract with Famous Players-Lasky will expire in time for him to make several productions for the Associated Producers by the end of the summer months, when he expects to take the first vacation he has had in several years.

Mr. Tourneur emphatically states that it is not his intention to make pictures on the other side, and that this country is not only the ideal place for making pictures, but the only practical place.

Cosmopolitan Production to Have Lavish Sets

The entire "Land of Joy" company of twenty-two Spanish players took part in several scenes taken at the Cosmopolitan Studio, 12th street and Second avenue, New York, last Sunday, by Director Robert G. Vignola for his forthcoming Cosmopolitan production, "The World and His Wife," featuring Alma Rubens. A Spanish period set comprising a whole mansion with garden, marble pool and other rich man's extravagances was constructed at the studio, and occupied the entire floor space which normally is sufficient to permit four companies to work simultaneously.

Baron de Daue Off for France After Visit

Baron de Daue, who has been in America for the past two months in the interest of the Societe des Films Mercanton of Paris, sailed on Saturday for France after completing arrangements for a closer affiliation with American producers, foremost of the French motion picture producers.

During his stay here, Baron de Daue completed arrangements for Guy Crosswell Smith, Ltd., of New York, to represent the Mercanton interests in the country. He also disposed to an American Syndicate the world picture rights in Knocolach's play, "Kismet," which Ous Skinner did on the American stage a few years back.

Bessie Love Has Own Company

FOLLOWING the announcement of negotiations between Miss Bessie Love and Chicago capitalists, interested in a big project represented by A. J. Callaghan, comes further confirmation that the former Vitagraph star is to be presented in a series of high-grade vehicles adapted from big novels and produced under expert direction with regard to time or money limitations.

The formation of the Bessie Love Producing Company with the youthful star at its head is the result of the determination of a group of Chicago film men to place this star in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever the undisputed talents which she possesses. Considerable money has already been spent in the new purchase of several novels for screen adaptation and in the rental of the Bessie Love studio at 6642 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, where the star is already at work.

Andrew J. Callaghan, the Chicago film executive, who is at the head of the Chicago syndicate which is sponsoring Miss Love in her forthcoming independent productions, has retained the services of two of the most notable directors in the industry, Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park. So confident is Mr. Callaghan of the latent dramatic powers of this young actress that he has created an entirely new department in production, work by securing what is described as the unbeatble directorial combination of a well-known man and woman to bring out the best that is in the charming screen star.

Miss Love, who has often been declared to be the nearest to Mary Pickford in talent and magnetism among the diminutive stars, readily concluded an engagement with the Vitagraph company. Since then three of the largest producing companies in the country have been bidding for her services, it is stated. The affiliation of Miss Love, as an independent star, with the Callaghan organization follows her own expressed desire, and also the desire of her sponsors to devote much time, thought and money to the adequate handing of a personality discovered by Griffith and popular with millions of fans the country over.

After winning her way to stardom under the Griffith banner, Miss Love joined the Triangle forces, and later she continued to star in Pathé and Vitagraph releases. Now, according to the statement just issued, a corporation has been established around her personality, called the Bessie Love Productions, Inc.

Mr. Callaghan, who is at the head of this organization, declared last week after having seen his new star begin production, that practically no limit was to be placed on the sum to be expended for superior story material for Miss Love, and that available copy-righted books and stories suited to her personality would be purchased.

"After having seen the first results of Miss Love's work under the Triangle banner, Mr. de Grasse and Miss Park, her directors, I am entirely satisfied to have cast my lot with this remarkable and promising young actress," said Mr. Callaghan in a statement from the Los Angeles studios. "We believe, that Miss Love possesses not only a dramatic quality, but every other dramatic quality fully brought out on the screen. For a long time we have had our eye on this charming little lady, who combines with youth and beauty a rare feeling for dramatic expression, and we feel highly elated that she has become our partner."

It is plain, of course, that Miss Love comes to the Callaghan organization with a substantial financial interest in her future work. With such an incentive, and with the further advantage of big vehicles, first-class direction and all thecologic "big money" that the motion picture industry is due to see a new Bessie Love, a recreative artist with the call of the screen, at the service of the great picture fans of the nation placed in entirely new surroundings for exhibition. The country at large will notice the final results, as to its own interest in better stories, better production, and better direction which is bringing Miss Love to the front as never before as a screen star who invites close watching.

Amplifies Production Plans

Pathé to Announce Acquisitions of Big Films and Popular Beauty

The plans of Pathé Exchange, Inc., for features and big specials have been amplified so that within a short time an announcement of some very pretentious productions and the listing of a popular beauty of the screen, Pathé's feature business has grown to such an extent that ambitious plans are uniting to meet future development for such time to come. Blanche Sweet, it is promised, will be seen in productions even greater than those that have been announced for the Pathé program. The coming production of "Sherly," Edgar Lewis' second feature as the only really the every bit as strong a feature as "Other Men's Shoes." J. Stuart Blackton characterizes his coming release, "The Blood Barrier," as "a master melodramatic achievement. Included also in the announcement are "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production adapted from Augustus Thomas' great stage play; "Frank Keenan in "The Ten Commandments," and Max Linder in "The Little Cafe," an adaptation from Kay & Eranget's theatrical success of the same name.

Radiosoul Issues Statement
Will Distribute the Products of Swedish Biograph Co. in America

It has now been definitely established that the newly formed Radiosoul Films, Inc., has secured a contract for the exclusive exploitation of the entire product of the Swedish Biograph for the United States and Canada. This means that Victor Seastrom is to become an institution in our film world.

Mr. L. E. Miller, President of the Radiosoul, answering how it is possible that an artist of Victor Seastrom's caliber should be practically unknown in America, which is announced as Seastrom's native country, said that the question of Seastrom's delicate and perplexing matter to be disposed of by the unanimous verdict of the critics themselves in the press. As to how it happened that Seastrom, a native American, is practically unknown in his country, this, Mr. Miller says, is altogether a delicate and perplexing matter to be disposed of in general terms. It is enough to recall, says the Radiosoul Films, the fate of many of our greatest singers, painters, and even men of letters.

Although the Radiosoul has been formed for both purposes—the exploitation of pictures made by Victor Seastrom, and also to make its own pictures, the organization will at present dedicate itself exclusively to the output of the Swedish Biograph product.

A new film concern," said Mr. Miller, "almost like a new political party considers itself duty bound to present to the exhibitors a platform with a string of stars and names in lieu of planks, and a bunch of promises as a program. We propose to do nothing of the sort. We simply say, we have observed some vacuities in the sun and we want to get a place there if we can, and the only promise we can make to the public is that we will try to succeed.

Author Views Picture

"Democracy" Typifies Americanism

The produced photograms, "Democracy—The Vision Restored," is the fulfillment of an idea born in the mind of Lee OBarr during his college days, and it found its first public expression in July, 1925, when he lectured on "Democracy and the Future" at the Miami Valley Chautauqua. For fifteen years, he has expanded this vision direct to and with the people of America.

Democracy has been the underlying thought and keynote of every lecture I have delivered in the course of my fifteen years as a Chautauqua exclusive. For fifteen years, I, Mr. OBarr, have made it my life's work to bring to the minds of the American people, a realization of the true meaning of Democracy. By personal contact with millions of people in forty-six states and territories of our Union, during my public career, I firmly believe that I have gleaned the very essence and fundamental principles which are embodied in that all-powerful theme—Democracy, which typifies Americanism.

In ten-reel dramas "Democracy—The Vision Restored" I have embodied this completed theme.

Dana Is Pleased With Market

P. R. Dana, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned from an extensive western trip, during which he made a first hand study of the independent market, and the independent methods of booking feature productions.

He was enthusiastic about the wonderfule progress the independent system has made in recent months, and declared that exhibitors everywhere are becoming more and more interested in its mechanics.

"I have talked to some of the most prominent exhibitors in the territories I visited," he stated, "and not one of them has a word to say against the independent system.

A year or eighteen months ago, there would have been plenty of kicks. That was when independent booking and buying was just getting into stride, and before a large number of exchange men and exhibitors had given it a try.

Mr. Dana said that he had failed to find either an exchange man or an exhibitor who was not interested in the independent system.

"They are beginning to realize that the tremendous saving possible in booking pictures free from the interference of producers," he stated. "As far as I can tell there is no financial saving, but there is also a conservation of energy and trouble. There is a minimum of detail in independent booking, where there is a maximum in other systems."

Mr. Dana declared that the tendency upon the part of individual exhibitors and exchange men to book independently was a natural thing. He had generally discovered that better pictures, better exploitation and better methods characterized the independent system.

"Too few exhibitors have realized this until the present condition of the picture market made the fact dawn upon them."

"The watchword of the times is economy," said Mr. Dana, "and I think it is one great reason that independent booking is thriving. Exhibitors and exchange men have made the illuminating discovery that real pictures can be obtained for much less actual cash than they have been spending in the past, and that their audiences appreciate the pictures with the same appreciation they give other features.

Mr. Dana was particularly interested, during his trip, in the disposition of territory for the series of "Tex, the Elucider of Mysteries," series. He announced upon his return that while most of the territories in the United States had been disposed of, there were only a few territories which remained available for those feature rights buyers.

"The "Tex" series is a response to an unspoken demand upon the part of exhibitors," said Mr. Dana, "in booking the entire series of twelve pictures, the exhibitor gets twelve features, each complete in itself, but with the tacit assumption that his audiences that these same characters will at an early date return to see the interest in the mystery and its solution. The series has made a distinct hit.

We are now giving his attention to "The Lost Daughter" and "Before the White Man Came," the latest features announced by Arrow.

Christie in the Feature Field

"The Christie Film Company will become almost as well known within twelve months in the field of big feature production as it has been for comedies," was the statement of Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie firm, who arrived in Los Angeles today after a trip through the South and East.

Mr. Christie arrived at his studio after a trip which included many cities in the Southern states and two weeks' stay in New York, where he was in conference with the officials of the Robertson-Cole company, which is handling the releases of the new Chic Sale feature, "The Smart Alec," which is now being made at the Christie studio in Los Angeles.

"The production of The Smart Alec, by Irving Cobb, with Chic Sale, and a feature cast, marks the entry of the Christie firm into the independent System Is Well Liked, Says Arrow Manager forces concentrating at present on chic Sale feature production of features of greater length, which is only a start in the expansion which comes as a natural growth. We are established in the field of one reel comedies a year ago, when we launched our two-reel special comedies. At the present time we are engaged in twelve of these and the fact that we are going into productions of greater magnitude does not mean that we shall abandon our efforts along comedy lines. It is merely a broadening out into bigger and better things," said Christie in answer to a report that the Christie film company was deserting the comedy field entirely.

"We are ready and able to acquire the acquisition of the rights to So Long Letty, which contains material for a big special picture backed by its tremendous drawing power since its years of success as a stage play."

"The production will be one of a number of big features which we are planning production of which will begin in June of this year. New arrangements have been made for the releases of these features, but the market is assured."

We believe there is ample room in the photoplay market for features of the character which we are planning, along the lines of comedy drama, made in high production, with no particular emphasis on star parts, although each feature will have an engaging cast of people, whose names are already established in the trade."

The feature which is in progress, with Chic Sale, is an example of what we mean in feature casts. It includes, besides Mr. Sale, in varying roles, such names as Dorothy Moore, Bob McKim, Walt Whitman, Lydina Yemans Tius, J. P. Lockney, Bert Woodruff, Cohn Rogers, and a list of names which would do credit to any feature production ever made.

"We are now looking over the entire field on both coasts for a cast for "So Long Letty," which will be produced under A. Christie's direction.

We are now planning the production of the third of the series of "Bringing Up Father" comedies which will be released by Pathé, in addition to handling the distribution of the Chic Sale feature, and has an able corps of directors engaged in the production of Christie Comedies and a number of other men as Scott Sidney, William Beaudine, Frederic Sullivan, Alex. Lovell, among others, the latter of whom is handling the megaphone on "Bringing Up Father."

Picture Tie-Up with Corona Typewriter

The window display of the Corona Typewriter sales depot on Forty-second street, between Broadway and Sixth avenue, is to exploit "Empty Arms." Martin Feurer is the creator of the display. The window will present the interior of a picture theatre in miniature. On the screen will appear a still of "Empty Arms," featuring Greta Kane and Thurston Hall. At the right of the orchestra space will be arranged a cut-out of the author, Willard King Bradley, seated before a Corona typewriter, the idea being to suggest that the author is engaged in typing the scene depicted on the screen.

"Iliterate Digest" Now in Market

The first issue of the widely heralded Will Rogers' "Iliterate Digest," is now ready for release, according to Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the Marion H. Kohn Productions, which is filming this novel.

It is the general belief that this reel is merely a set of screened epigrams, and wishes to dispel any such ideas. Will Rogers actually appears in the reel in a novel presentation. His sayings concern topics of current interest and each one is dealt with in highly humorous manner. Special permission to film Rogers and the "Iliterate Digest" was secured from Samuel Goldwyn and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Price Secures New Release

Billy Rhodes Stars in Five-Reel Comedy–Drama, “His Pajama Girl”

C. B. Price Co., Inc., have acquired the latest production of the Southern California Producing Company, a five-reel comedy–drama, “His Pajama Girl,” starring Billy Rhodes. Mr. Price, who just returned from a trip to the Coast, saw the picture in its final stage and immediately made a deal with the officials of the Southern California Producing Company for the marketing of the picture on the state right plan.

An extensive campaign has been prepared according to Mr. Price, that will not only cover the state right buyers but will also directly to the exhibitor, thus creating a market for the purchasers of the various territories. The picture, according to reports is rich in possibilities, and many novel angles have been conceived that will come to the motion picture trade as something absolutely novel in motion picture exploitation says the C. B. Price Company.

Mr. Price, in talking of the purchase of “His Pajama Girl” was very enthusiastic about the picture, in classifying it, he remarked, “The state right field, and in fact the entire motion picture industry, has developed from the time to different styles in motion pictures. The first sensational effort was, of course, the creation of the vampire film, then came the sex films, later the bathing girls, and now I believe we have hit on the newest vogue that will continue by producers, the Pajama Girl film.

In addition to having what we consider the greatest box office title that has been seen on a film in some great time, I also believe that we have a subject that lends itself to a broader line of exploitation than any picture ever before put out on the territorial plan.”

Ethel Barrymore, star of “Dissipates,” the dramatic success now running at the Empire theatre, and the first stage and screen luminary to be placed under the Tri-Star management by Totten and Smiley, commences studio work this week, all of her sessions before the camera having been arranged so as to avoid any conflict whatsoever with the minute or evening performances.

The initial Tri-Star super-production will be a screen version of R. L. Stevenson’s story, “The Super-Woman,” with the film adaptation and continuity developed by George DuBois. In the opinion of Directors Totten and Smiley, this vehicle is peculiarly fitted for Miss Barrymore’s ability and technique. Although an unusual story in itself, the name part of “The Super-Woman” carries with it an exceptionally sympathetic theme which lends itself admirably to the talents of the star, who has endeared herself to patrons of the American stage and screen thorough her individualistic interpretations of difficult roles.

Miss Leslie Bingham has been appointed studio manager and casting director for all Tri-Star productions. George B. Chacmelas will be technical director, supervising that branch of the work, while W. S. Cooper will be chief cameraman in charge of all photographic work.

Co-operating with the Roosevelt Protective Order of Elks, Universal has offered a prize of $10,000 for the most beautiful girl available to pose as the "Spirit of America" on the principal float of the Elks parade to be held in Chicago, July 4th. In addition to the $10,000 prize, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, will give the winner of the contest an opportunity to be featured star in some of his company's productions at a salary of $11,000 for the first year if she shows she is adaptable to picture work. Mr. Laemmle's offer to the winner involves an immediate trip to Universal City with all expenses paid and a guaranteed salary during the period of training necessary.

On Sunday, March 13, the Herald & Examiner came out with a page spread heralding the contest and announcing Mr. Laemmle's offer, and this will be followed up by columns of space every day until the contest is decided.

Publicity Director Rice has planned to give the contest added value, and, possibly, one point by having the various young women desiring to enter the contest, take their photographs to their neighborhood local branch of the picture theatre, which will in turn hand them over to the Herald & Examiner, so that the victorious candidate will be known as the Woodlawn Girl, the Riviera Girl, the Covenant Garden Girl and etc.

This is the first big picture Mr. Greiver has bought since, "The Birth of a Race," and he declares he intends to give "Husbands and Wives" the same intensive exploitation he did that picture. If he does this, it means something big, as the way he put over "The Birth of a Race" was well remembered in local moving picture circles.

May 1st is drawing dangerously near for the film exchanges, which, according to the Chicago Fire Ordinance, must be out of the loop on that date, but one plan after another for new film buildings have fallen through and there seems to be no immediate prospect of the exchange finding a home together.

The new firm will inaugurate one service which will be especially appreciated by exhibitors, a twenty-four hour service on throw-aways and heralds so that hasty calls for help along this line will be taken care of promptly, day or night. The name of the company is new, but both partners are well known to film men of Chicago. The offices of the company will be in the Consumers Building and the engraving and printing departments are to be started in the Ross & Company plant on Wells Street.

The Master Advertisers is the name of the new company which has opened offices in the Consumers' Building and will handle publicity and advertising for exhibitors and exchange men. The cold-blooded murderer of William Mills, manager of the Crawford Theatre, which came as a surprise to moving picture men, among whom he had a wide acquaintance, has been solved through the confession of Edward Brisbane, a former inmate of Pontiac Reformatory, who is in the hands of the police. Brisbane admitted the crime and is now thinking that the woman cashier was alone in the ticket booth, counting money, for an hour, when he came in, surprised and surprised to find Manager Mills there, shot down in cold blood and fled.

Paul Gerard Smith of Garciou-Smith is finding time to write many plays and vaudeville acts in addition to his publicity and exploitation work for moving picture men, and is meeting with considerable success. "Author Author" his two act comedy will open at the Little Theatre, Los Angeles, March 25-26. The latest release under the new selling plan is "The Girl Of The Sea," which has been booked at the Chicago loop for two weeks with an option of a further run of two weeks, the admission to be charged being 35 cents. Mr. Busch regards this as one of the big pictures of the year and is planning some special exploitation and advertising for it.

Paul De Onato, formerly with Metro, Tommy Greenwood, who sold for Hubbard, and Warren S. Schaefer, have been added to Republic's sales staff in Chicago, and the matters of other recent pictures will be given out in a few days.

Exhibitors crowded the Vitagraph projection room Monday and Tuesday of this week as guests of the Exhibitors Company to view the first three episodes of the serial, "A Woman in Grey," which was produced by A. M. Williamson, featuring Airline Pretty, supported by Henry G. Selig, the pictures were new and were heard both on the photography and stirring action in the picture.

Manager Grauntz, of Metro's Chicago Exchange, is enthusiastic over the current releases and is betting on a big success with "Alias Jimmy Valentine," featur ing Bert Lytell, as it does close on the star's big hit, "The Right Of Way." Exhibitors already are displaying marked interest in "Shore Acres," to which no viewing of the picture has been had, as yet, in Chicago. According to Mr. Grauntz it is one of those instances where exhibitors sense a big picture even before they have had a chance to see it. "A Child," which is heralded as a typical Maxinov picture, is another for which the bookings are expected in the Chicago territory.

Berry T. Hodge has joined the sales force working out of the United Picture Theatres' Chicago Exchange and will specialize on comedies.

Paul De Onato has resigned from the sales staff of Metro and Harold Gimbel has joined the staff, and will cover eastern Illinois territory.

Edby, by the way, recently received the sweetest surprise of his career. It was an entire crate of Credo Pralines, which was shipped to him by Gene Pearce of New Orleans, immediately after he returned from a recent trip to Chicago where he attended the convention of independents.

M. A. Dodge, president of the Dodge Theatre Service Corporation with headquarters in Milwaukee, arrived in Chicago recently from the west coast, bringing with him a six reel picture, "Witches Gold," a story of the Texas Oil Fields, which he filmed in the Burck-Hartnet district and which is said to portray life in the oil fields with startling fidelity. The first print has been made and it is Mr. Dodge’s intention to release the picture on the independent market at the earliest date. It is understood to be planning some big pictures in the near future and shortly will return to the coast.

A. F. Ebers has opened the Paris theatre, Milwaukee, after making extensive improvements. This house has been dark for several months since it was purchased by a "Wizard of Finance." William Randolph Hearst (left), Robb G. at the International studio, New York. "World and His Wife," in which

Mr. Rigger states that he is in the market for other Milwaukee houses and is looking for a site to build a downtown theatre. He has opened offices in the Alhambra Theatre Building.

The parcels of many film cutters lead to Rothecker’s Chicago plans. W. A. Smith, enter for King Vidor, and Gull S. Carter, of the M. A. Dodge Film Company, became acquainted when their companies occupied stages one and two of the High School. The former has opened offices in Chicago, and the latter, in March found them at tables one and two in the eating room at the Chicago Rothecker Laboratory.

Harry Weiss, whose resignation as one of the managers of First National Exhibitors Exchange, Chicago, recently was announced in these columns, ended his connection with First National on March 22nd. Mr. Weiss wishes to denote the reports which have been going around that he has become affiliated with Associated Producers, the Cele- brated Players Film Corporation or any other concern. He states, however, that he has already per- fected new arrangements and will, in a few days, announce his new connection.

Miss Allison made three trips to Santa Barbara before her travel arrangements were obtained for "The Thruster."

Equity will occupy the rooms held by Goldwyn. Muter United and other independent exchanges also say they will be in the move.

Out at the Alhambra theatre Charles Darrell, the manager, styles his community’s sing "Psalms Songs." All Frank Bennett puts on the songs numbers every Wednesday night.

OKLAHOMA

Film magnates, it seems, have also been determined to "magnify" in the theatre department of the picture field. Cecil De Mille, successor to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the Southern Oklahoman theatre have purchased some oil interests.

Attendants upon the Utilities Association, several hundred in number, enjoyed a performance at the Liberty theatre recently, occupying a whole section of the theatre, following a big religious meeting which seemed to be having the time of their lives.

A $100,000 theatre is being erected by local capitalists at Pawhuska, Okla. A $50,000 theatre is being erected at Vinata, Okla. An Automat theatre is being erected at Muskogee, Okla., which will be completed in time for the spring season, it is expected.

A. C. Newing has leased a block of ground at Bassie Terre, Mo., and will build an opera house there.

The Fraternal Opera House at Popular Bluffs, Mo., has been completely remodeled and will play vaudeville and pictur...
A new and striking photograph of Mary Pickford, whose "Pollyanna" for United Artists is creating records to be aimed at, in every section of the country.
UNIVERSAL CITY is without a general manager since the departure of Tarkington Baker, who departed for New York last week after tendering his resignation. The condition is expected to continue until the arrival of President Carl Laemmle, who is expected in Los Angeles about March 30th. W. R. Howard has been serving as general manager following his work on Huston's project, "Moonlighting in Dallas." A decision is expected to fill the vacancy, but this could not be confirmed at Universal City.

Mary Charleson has been selected as the lead for "Crescent Acres," a story now being made by Reeves Eason and starring Harry Carey. Fontaine LaRue will play the heroine in this picture, which Miss LaRue has played in a number of recent West Coast feature productions.

Cable advice from Henry McKee received at Universal City states that the Universal production of "The Dragon's Net," Indian country and islands, is now on its way from the Philippines to the Hawaiian islands, and the company will sail for home within a month.

Universal, this week, has director, cameraman and three players at Yuma, Arizona, where scenes will be made of a big engineering project in which a mountain charged with dynamite will be blown up. This will utilize in an early Universal Western called "Legend of the Lichen."

Lucien Hubbard has arrived at Universal City to assume the position of scenario editor, succeeding Perry Rhod, who has gone to Metro Studios. J. C. Brownell, New York Scenario Editor for Universal, who is at the Coast, plans to return to the New York office within the next few days.

George Peppard, who has been identified with the Jesse B. Hampton productions, Louis B. Mayer and Ben Wilson, have been told at the Universal scenario staff and will write the continuation for the final episode of the Eddy Polo serial, "The Vanishing Doughboy." The early chapters for this were written by Hope Longing, who has been placed in charge of the serial and western dramatic company.

"Hooft" Gibson is working in a western story, Maxine screen-tested "Pardners" with Thomas Perry as his lead. Two serial companies are already at work, those of Eddy Polo in "The Vanishing Dagoer" directed by Edward Kull and "The Moon Riders" featuring Art Acord under the direction of Max Socias.
The Bessie Barriscale organization has completed "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," which was made under the direction of William Christy Catonic from an original story and scenario by May Harvey. Forrest Stanley is leading man in this production. After a vacation of two weeks, Miss Barriscale will resume work.

The J. Warren Kerrigan unit under the direction of Jack Warde is well into production of "The House of Whispers," which is a high class mystery story with the plot involving situations very prominent in such stories almost entirely missing. Director Warde has a very unusual cast which includes Josephine Roberts, Margery Wilson and Fritzi Brunette as leading woman. At present it is planned that Kerrigan's next picture will have foreign locale atmosphere.

The Annette Kellerman company is back from San Francisco and is now working on diving scenes made in the big Brunton Studio's tank.

The Dempsey serial company has returned to the securing of mountain and desert scenes in the vicinity of Tehachapi, California and are now working at the Brunton studios on the interiors for the fourteen chapter. In this chapter Dempsey is stranded in a small western town and he is fighting a local slugger. A big ring set was built for these scenes and about 300 people saw the fight which was between Dempsey and the local slugger. He is working on this serial and is expected to complete it by the end of the month. The serial is to be completed by April 1.

NATIONAL

The National Film Corporation has completed the title for the forthcoming serial which will star Jack Hoxie, who was featured in "Lightening Brice," and who is about to travel to the serial to be titled "The Son of Tarzan," and adapted from the Edgar Rice Burroughs stories of the Tarzan series. Nationallimply is putting the serial in progress and "Taranza of the Apes," and the sequel "The Romance of Taranza." The serial will be ready for the first ten episodes to be put in circulation by L. V. Jeffers and the serial will be started by April 1. The location crew of the National have been searching for a location suitable for this film and a great portion of the scenes of the serial will be made on an island in the Pacific.

The first of the new National comedies, Buddy Post series, has been completed and is titled "Love and Loot." Post is supported in these by Helen Howard who was recently seen in American productions. Mark Goldin is the director.

President Harry M. Rubey of the National issued a denial to the rumors that Isadore Bernstein is to leave National where he has served as General Manager. Bernstein is to remain with National according to Rubey's statement. Marion H. Kohn has returned to Los Angeles to give his personal attention to the making of the three serials of Marion H. Kohn productions. Marion Kohn announced that he has completed arrangements for distribution of the Will Roger's "The Wild Horse" which has been secured for this epicomedy review and the first National release will be made April 4. The sale of these films will be handled by Joe Brandt, 1600 Broadway, New York.

GOLDWYN

TWELVE subjects are in production at Goldwyn Univer City Studios, the number being divided equally between star and all star subjects.

Clarence Badger is making the final scenes for "Jest Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers, and is to direct the next Rogers picture, which will be an adaptation from the Eleanor Gates story, "Alice Lloyd." The story is of a semi-western character and will give Rogers and his screen partner an opportunity to work before the camera.

Upon the completion of the Tom Moore subject, "The Great Accident," work will be started under the direction of Harry Beaumont upon the making of the well known stage comedy "Officer 666." Reginald Barker has a few more scenes to make for the "Branding Iron," adapted from the Burt story of the same name, and he is then to make a screen version of the stage success, "Bunya Pulls the Strings," from the play by Graham Moffett. Louis B. Mayer arrived at the Goldwyn Studios to look over many of the scenes made by T. Hayes Hunter for an all-star cast for the King story, "Earth Bound." Many of the interiors for this are to be made, including that of an Episcopal church, which occupies all of stage six at the Goldwyn plant. This is the largest stage of the studio and the entire depth and width is needed for this setting. The columns used are eight feet in diameter and a crucifix which hangs over the altar is seventeen and a half feet long. Author King will remain at the Goldwyn plant until the completion of this film. It has been decided that Hunter shall next direct the Benson of Hall Caine's story and play, "The Christian," which will probably be put in production for a number of weeks, Wallace Worsley is making the final scenes for "The Penalty," from the Morris story, and is next to direct "Yellow Men and Gold."

Complete cast for Pauline Frederick production of "Madame X." has been selected, and besides the leads including Casson Ferguson and William Curtright, previously announced, will include Pat Moore, Mande Louis, Harrie Kirkland, Albert Rosco, Sidney Ainsworth, Willard Louis and Lionel Belmore.

Besides Alice Hollister and Lewis Stone, who are to play leads in "Milestones," under the direction of Paul Seward, the cast will consist of Harley Clark, Gerald Pring, Gertrude Norman, Carol Fleming and Lincoln Howel.

Sidney Alcott has completed all scenes for the Rupert Hughes production, "Scotch My Back," and Victor Schertzinger has the last of the Mabel Normand scenes made for "The Slim Princess."

Vice-President, Alphonm Lehr this week returned from a stay of several days in New York and assumed his duties as general manager of the Goldwyn plant.

F. P. LASKY

A MORE complete producing schedule than has been given out previously was announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of production for the Famous Players-Lasky Studio. According to the statement made by Mr. Lasky the West Coast productions are to be handled during the coming months than at any previous time, and the producing schedule now prepared provides for some of the biggest film subjects undertaken by this organization.

One of the most important features is the announcement that two

The Rise of Frank Borzage
From Stage-Manager to Director
Via "Stock and Rep," He Climbed

FRANK BORZAGE, director of Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque," featuring Alma Rubens, his first picture for Cosmopolitan Productions, is a Salt Lake boy. While his first blink at God's sunlight came to him in the Mormon capital he never exhibited any signs of the matrimonial attitude for which it has been lauded and slandered, and his wives are "one and fluently ampled." By his wife, he will know he is happily married.

Like a few others of the historic clan, Borzage was born with the love of the theatre in his heart. Various obstacles conspired to keep him away from the stage, however, and it wasn't until his thirtieth year on earth that he made his first appearance. Borzage doesn't talk much about his initial efforts behind the footlights, but he stuck to the stage, notwithstanding, and shortly afterwards, he became assistant stage manager. This new job gave him ample opportunities not only to study the theatre but also to give circulation to his ambition to act, and he played "bits."

Eight long, hard, and sometimes lean years of this "stock and rep" life, and then Frank Borzage became a full-fledged stage director and character actor.

Now comes the paradox of it. All these years Borzage had played character parts because in the opinion of his friends and himself he wasn't cut out for anything else.

Personal and Otherwise

June Elvidge accepted an invitation of the Social Welfare League last week, to act as sales person in one of the local department stores, under an arrangement whereby 10 percent of her sales went to various charities selected by the League. Miss Elvidge, it seems, chose a certain millinery department, and as soon as it was discovered that she was playing the role of sales girl, business increased so rapidly that the buyer is reported to have sent out a hurry call for more stock. Miss Elvidge's most recent picture, Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon," will be released shortly.

Artclass Pictures are worried about their contracted player, Walter Miller, and wondering just how they can exert a strong parental arm across the continent to bring him back East. Mr. Miller played one of the strong roles in "The Return of Tarzan" for Numa Pictures, upon completion of which he was loaned to Selznick for "The Invisible Divorce," and he is now playing opposite Betty Compton in that player's first production in her own corporation. Artclass are expecting him to New York within a month, however, to commence work on one of their productions for Robertson-Cole release.

Accompanying the completed print of "The Return of Tarzan," which recently reached New York, was Mrs. Walter Beecwirth, who chaperoned the 18 lions under contract to Messrs. Weiss, and now housed at their Yonkers studio.

Billie Burke and Percy Marmon are at work in Sixteenth Century costumes at the Amsterdam Opera House, where a scene of that period is being interpolated by Director John Robertson into "Away Goes Prudence."

James Vincent, President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, has been engaged by the American Cinema Corp. to produce their next picture.

Gladen James, who has just completed the leading role in "A Good Woman," a Whitches-Parke production, has been engaged to play with Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No," under the direction of R. W. Neil. Mr. James was seen with Alva Talmadge some time ago in "The Social Secretary," "The Safety Curtain" and "The Heart of Votona."

Estelle Taylor left recently for Lake Saranae, where she is to start work on the Fox superproduction "Aliby's Dress," in which she is to play the leading role under the direction of Charles Brabin.

Leon Gendington makes his screen debut in "The World and His Wife," a picture that Robert G. Vignola is making for International, with an all-star cast that includes Alma Rubens, Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordoba and Charles Gerrard. Mr. Vignola is said to be very enthusiastic about this new juvenile, and to consider him one of the screen "finds" of the year.

Anouncement has been made by the U. S. Photoplay Corp., owner of "International," of the opening of the Lincoln Studios at Grantwood for two years, where picture production is scheduled to begin June 1st. Contracts are said to have been signed with Richard Towers, who will be starred, and William A. Stowe, Leslie Hunt, Corrine Uzzell and Irene Tomt. Henry McKeone Webst the director, with John I. McCutcheon as co-director and Herbert Messmore as technical director. "Determination," which was written and directed by Captain Frederick F. Stock, will be released during the coming summer.

Owen Moore is expected East again to work at the Selznick Studios here. He has been at their West Coast studio for several weeks playing in "His Word is Honor."

Burton George is now directing "The Prince of Pines" for Selznick, in which there are six leading parts. The scenario was written by Willard Mach, who expects to appear in a spoken version of the play.

Absent Two Years, Miss Hollister Returns

After an absence from the screen of two years, on account of illness, Alice Hollister has returned to motion pictures in the Goldwyn production of the famous stage play "Milestones," by Edward Knoblock and Arnold Bennett. Miss Hollister will have the leading feminine role in the picture, which will be started at Culver City this week.

Jottings from The Studios

June Elvidge, who has been practically snowbound in the Adirondacks for three months, while at work on "The Law of the Yukon," under Charles Miller's direction, returned to America's fashion center, Fifth Avenue, recently, to find that the beautiful gowns which had lain packed away in her wardrobe trunks while she braved the cold in mackinaws and boots, had entirely disappeared in fashion's latest decrees. So instead of indulging in social gaieties, Miss Elvidge set about collecting another array of frocks and frills, and her only hope is that they will work harmoniously with her next picture.

Charles Maigne, whose recent successes have included "The Firing Line" and "The Invisible Bond" starring Irene Castle, and the Paramount-Arcraft specials "The Fighting Chance" and "The Copperhead," is now engaged to direct Mary Mile's Minter.

Enid Bennett is said to have given material assistance in the capacity of Art Director for her latest Thomas Ince production "Happiness," as she is well acquainted with the architecture of European cities, some of which was reproduced for various scenes in the picture.

Julian Josephson has been assigned the task of preparing a series of special features for Lloyd Hughes, the first of which will be entitled "Wheelbarrow Webster."

Irua Harrison, who was last seen as leading woman for Gareth Hughes in "The Red Viper," and opposite Johnny Dooley in the first of the series of Dooley Comedies, returned this week from Georgia, where she finished exteriors for the starring role of the Buffalo Film Company's third picture, "The Daughter of Devil Dan." Miss Harrison is supported by Kempton Greens in the leading role.

Hugh Ford, with a company of Paramount-Arcraft players, headed by Thomas Meighan, has gone to Cuba to make a series of scenes for a forthcoming production. In the party are Martha Mansfield, Frank Lose, Alfred Hickman, Warren Cook, Marie Shotwell, Maude Turner Gordon, and Albert Gram, all members of the cast, also the scenario writer, cameraman and assistant director. They will remain about ten days in Cuba, and will go to one of the large Army camps in the South for more exteriors before returning to New York.

New Three Thousand Seat House Opens on Upper Broadway

Picker's Rio Designed to Attract High-Class Patronage

UnaCOMPANIED by the pre-announcements and blare of trumpets that customarily herald the opening of a new Broadway motion picture theatre, David V. Picker's "Rio" on that thoroughfare at 159th Street, commenced life magnificently a few days ago.

The idea should not be gained from the foregoing that the house would not have merited a greater degree of publicity, for such is far from the real fact.

As a large community theatre the "Rio" will more than hold its own with any similar sized house in the country. From lobby to screen the owners have spent moneylavishly to produce a place of amusement fully in keeping with the community in which the theatre is hoped to be the center of attraction.

The theatre itself occupies an entire city block, has a seating capacity of approximately 3,000 and cost $500,000 to build and equip.

Entrance is gained from the Broadway side, through a lobby decorated in imitation marble. The dimensions of the lobby being about twenty-five by forty, with a box office placed in one corner.

From the lobby a set of double doors permits an entrance into the foyer from which stairs lead up to the balcony, loges, boxes, and retiring rooms. A heavy carpeting is placed over all walking areas and on the staircases.

The decorations throughout the house were planned and executed by the Wm. Eckhart Studios, and as a result are fully up to the standard expected. A color scheme of Gold and Blue was selected as the basis on which all color work and hangings were worked out. The fluted columns are of gold as is also much of the exposed decorative plasters, while the blue has been expressed by the tapestries, back drop and the upholstery of chairs and divans. A peculiar gold, brown and blue mottled effect has been carried out on all the wall surfaces of any great area. This gives a richness to the otherwise bare walls and panels.

There are about 1,750 seats on the auditorium floor, served by two center and two outside aisles. The balcony seats another 800, and in addition to these there are 250 box and loge seats located as usual at the front of the balcony.

The staircases leading from the foyer to the balcony enters the latter place at both ends of a balcony foyer or mezzanine. This foyer is made comfortable by a number of blue upholstered divans, comfortable chairs and potted plants.

From one side of the mezzanine foyer ramps lead off to the balcony cross over; on the other side to rest rooms and smoking rooms. The latter are finished in peacock blue and gold.

An exceptionally fine stage has been provided for special acts and features. In size it is 30 x 40 and is equipped with all necessary devices. There are eighteen dressing rooms for the use of artists when vaudeville is shown. Directly in front of the stage apron is the sunken orchestra pit where the console of the Hall Organ has been placed.

Lighting Fixtures

An excellent selection of chandeliers to match the remainder of the house was made. One large fixture drops from the grand dome and illuminates by indirect lighting the orchestra floor and the loge seats. Further back four smaller fixtures of a similar design furnish light for the balcony. Around the side walls are 20 wall lights properly shaded to protect the eyes of the audience during the showing of the pictures at the same time giving off enough illumination indirectly to make it safe for patrons to walk to their seats.

Ventilation

An adequate supply of fresh clean air is assured patrons of the Rio. Up on the roof of the theatre huge Typhoon fans draw in great quantities of air from above the street level and force it down through lattice work in front of the proscenium arch. During the summer months if desired these fans may be reversed in order to withdraw the hot fetid air from the top of the auditorium.

Projection

The projection room is located at the back of the balcony, 148 feet from the stage and is reached by a short iron ladder. In reality the projection room consists of three rooms, one for the rewinding and making of repairs, one for the motor generator sets and switchboard and the third for the two Simplex machines and the stereopticon.

The machine room measures 8 x 10 and contains two 96 amperes Westinghouse motor generator sets, two auto starters and a switchboard. The projector room is 8 x 12 and the rewind room 8 x 9.

From the projection room the picture is thrown 146 feet to the Gardner Velvet Color Fiber screen. A complete system of intercommunicating phones connects projection room with stage, ticket office and manager's desk.

When the whole layout is considered, the decorations, scenic effects, and equipment, there is every reason to believe that the Rio under the able direction of Francis A. Mangan, who is well known throughout the Metropolitan district as Manager of more than usual talent, will be a huge success. The theatre is worthy of the patronage of the neighborhood where it is in operation.

Springfield, Mass., House to be Entirely Remodelled During Coming Summer

Bullard and Bullard Are Drawing Plans to Bring Princess Theatre Up-to-Date

The Princess theatre, which W. W. Watts recently secured, will be thoroughly remodeled during the coming summer. Bullard and Bullard, architects, have prepared plans which will greatly alter the size and appearance of the playhouse.

The main floor will be extended 30 feet and dropped 32 inches, which will permit the installation of about 400 new seats on the ground floor. The entire second floor of the building will be taken out and a balcony and mezzanine floor put in, which will allow about 500 new seats to be added. This will make the Princess the largest theatre in the city in number of seats.

The new lobby will occupy part of the present lobby and also the entire room occupied at present by the Metcalf Company. It will be decorated and finished in the latest style and will be a promenade second to none. The box-office will be on the Fifth street side, making it convenient for ticket purchasers.

The interior of the house will be done over and Watts expects to make it the most beautiful in central Illinois. The best ideas in use in the leading theatres in the country will be utilized in the finishing of the playhouse.
A beautiful new canopy will be added to the front of the building, which will not only be an ornament but also a beneficial addition to the theatre. A handsome electric sign will also be conspicuous when the theatre is finished.

Watts will also take possession of the Lyric theatre about the first of July and extensive improvements will be made on it. The Gaiety will also be gone over, enlarged and redecorated, and many new seats installed.

Watts expects to make the Gaiety, Princess and Lyric theatres second to none in the state when all plans are finished.

Michigan's Capital City to Have Modern and Beautiful Theatre

New Blackstone in Lansing Will Soon Be Under Construction

The theatre census taken by the Motion Picture News last December, showing Lansing, Michigan, to be far behind other cities in the state in theatre construction, set a half dozen local motion picture theatre pioneers to thinking. The result of their deliberations has been the announcement within the past few days of a new $200,000 theatre building.

The census showed Grand Rapids to have a theatre for every 3,000 population; Flint, one for every 4,500; Detroit, one for every 5,000; Lansing, one for every 9,000.

A 50-year lease has been taken on property just west of the Elks' home and south of the Bijou theatre. "The Blackstone," with a seating capacity of 1,700, is to be built on the site. The building will be fireproof, of reinforced concrete, steel and brick. The front will be terra cotta with colored relief panels in the recesses. The roof and balcony will be supported by vast trusses which will eliminate obstructons to the view from any part of the house.

Those behind the Blackstone project are Roy Brown, former owner of the Orpheum theatre; E. C. Jarvis, present owner of the Orpheum and Garden theatres; John S. Wilson, a few years ago in charge of the principal amusement park near this city; J. C. McCallough; Frank A. Wall, who had the Vaudeville theatre some years ago; William T. Britton, alderman of the city, and William R. Towne.

These men have been founders of the motion picture business in Lansing and will give their range of experience to the building and operation of the new house.

The company has been incorporated under the Delaware incorporation laws, and the Michigan utilities commission will pass upon the sale of their stock, a limited amount of which will be passed outside the directorate, early in March.

S. D. Butterworth, of Lansing, prepared the plans for the Blackstone.

The building is 66 by 134 feet, facing Allegan street. The seating capacity of 1,700 will be divided between orchestra and balcony floors. Two stores are planned on each side of the theatre entrance. The commercial feature of the building is taking on new importance since work was started on the plan and now includes the addition of six stories to the front of the building to be used exclusively as office suites for physicians and dentists. The extensive plan will give the city another large cafeteria in the basement.

Particular attention has been paid to ventilation. The system will be of the washed air type. Fresh air is taken from the outside 40 above the ground and drawn through a water spray to cleanse it thoroughly. After being washed the air finds its way to the heating chamber and finally into the auditorium by way of underneath the seats. Foul air is carried through roof ducts.

For cooling in summer, a refrigerating plant will be installed and the air cooled and sent to the auditorium through the same air ducts under the seats. The frigid air system in summer eliminates the use of fans, the noise of which is irritable to sensitive persons. The Blackstone will be equipped with the very latest word in modernity.

Six New Houses for Finkelstein-Ruben Circuit

Six new theatres, representing an outlay of about $3,300,000, with a total seating capacity of 13,100, are to be completed in Minneapolis and St. Paul this year by Finkelstein & Ruben.

Two of the structures, one in each of the twin cities, will be known as the New Capitol, and will at least rival the Capitol theatre in New York, in architectural beauty if not in size.

The New Capitol in St. Paul, located at Seventh and St. Peter streets, will take the place of what is known in St. Paul as "the Mannheimer site," an unsightly steel structure that has been an eyesore for a number of years. This one, alone, will cost about $1,500,000, and will seat 3,100 and its owners declare it will be the finest theatre building in the West, barring none. Plans call for the official opening June 1.

Four months later the New Capitol theatre in Minneapolis will be opened at Eighth and Hennepin. While this will have a seating capacity of 3,300, the cost will be less, totaling between $750,000 and $1,000,000. T. B. Walker, owner of one of the biggest and costliest art galleries in the country has offered the use of a number of his best paintings in the foyer.

A block away from the New Capitol two other theatres are going up. One, the Blue Mouse, seating 1,500, to cost $200,000, will be opened May 1. The other, the New Colonist, seating capacity of 1,800, costing $350,000, to be ready December 1, will be broken in a few days.

The fourth new Minneapolis theatre is now under course of construction at 14th and Nicollet. It has not been named, but will seat 1,600 and will cost $250,000. It is expected this one will be ready June 1.

The New Aster, now being built in St. Paul, will be completed May 1. This is to cost $250,000 and will accommodate about 1,800 persons.

Charlie Hirliman Has Made Good Record as Officer and Organizer

By the jumping grasshopper, Charlie! how many cars do you own anyway? one of us asked as Hirliman opened the door of his Rolls-Royce and hailed us enter.

"Oh! only a couple or so more," he replied, as he hopped into his seat and opened her up wide. Before we had a chance to comment on his apparent superfluity of motive accessories, the R.R. was traveling at 40 per, and just getting warmed up to the road. Finally, when our lungs had overcome the first rush of air, we managed to yell out, "Good for you. You've got to have it helped to you for keeping up with the Jones', in these days of the High Cost of Living." Which comment seemed a brave one, when you consider that neither one of us owned even as much as a Henry.

By this time the speedometer was registering around 60, and Charlie Hirliman had settled back as if the hardest part of the job was over and all that had to be done from then on was to enjoy the scenery. But not so, us.

"Just a minute, there, Hirliman. You know, we're not in such a hurry as all this." Twas said bravely as though the excuse was genuine, but he must have known because he smiled rather wanly and lifted pressure off his accelerator. He slowed his English steed down to 25 and proceeded to lose interest in the road ahead, giving all his attention to us and our conversation. As our real reason—Charlie would have put it "raison d'etre"—for being where we were was to pry loose from Hirliman some intimate facts about his life, we started off with the usual question: "How did you start in this business?" Perhaps, though, we should tell our readers who live far, far away from New York, that Charles Hirliman is at the present time Treasurer and General Manager of the Stella Film Laboratories of New Jersey.

"Well," said Charlie, "I used to grind a projection machine back in 1909, down at Pathe's on 14th Street. It was my good experience for a youngster, and I learned a lot of things that have helped me since then. But after awhile I figured I could tackle a more responsible job. When the Eclair Film Co. offered me the position of assistant manager, I accepted and held the job from 1910 to 1913.

"The desire to own my own business took hold of me, and it was not long before I organized the Life Photo Film Co., and the Commercial M. P. Co. Later on, after closing out my interests in these firms, I organized the Eclipse Film Co., where I was General Manager. I continued on there for quite a time and was doing a good business. A little later I became President and General Manager of the Craftsman Film Co., which I organized."

"Seems to me you are some little organizer," I said.

"Perhaps I am," he replied, "I enjoy making money for others as well as for myself. For instance, the Craftsman Film Laboratories was organized by me and was a very successful and growing concern, when it became necessary to sell it on account of my enlisting in the Army."

At this point Hirliman's face brightened and it was evident that mention of the Army brought back happy recollections. We passengers realized it especially. For, immediately, Charlie stepped on the accelerator as if he held a personal grudge against it and intended to push it through the bottom of the car. First we were going at 25—a second later at 65. There were no immediate stops or gradations.

"I enlisted as a private," he said out of the corner of his mouth, "and a little later was given a commission of Lieutenant. After passing another examination I was made a Captain. A portion of my service was spent in Washington, where I was officer in charge of the Government's Laboratory for Motion Pictures. Major Tom Evans was commanding officer."

"I was particularly interested in aero-planes, and after passing still more tests in the aviation branch, was awarded the 'spread wings' of a pilot. And some day, take it from me, I remarked, 'I'm going to own a plane.'"

Now we knew why he chasteled that accelerator in the way he did. His imagination was carrying him away to the time when he was piloting "ships," and by that comparison our speed on terra firma seemed excessively low. He looked back at us and noticed our uneasy expressions.

"Yeh, I do like to travel fast—and to work fast, too," he added.

But an instant later it seemed as if we were going to be supplied with an unlooked for ending to our interviewing tour. A man clothed in the authority of the law stepped forth from the sidewalk and waved an official hand at us. Hirliman slowed down and stopped. We expected a summons to follow. But no! Hirliman and the officer were shaking hands in as cordial a manner as ever seen. Something about it looked funny to us, and as soon as we were out of sight of the "arm of the law" we asked Charlie how he worked it.

"Oh, I used to be Chief of Police for 6 years. At the time I believe I happened to be the youngest Chief in the country. I was 21 then. That's 7 years ago. When I came to think about it, I was kind of young for the job, but nobody seemed to kick over the way I handled things."

By this time we were entering the ferry slip and the ride and cross examination

Summer will soon be with us and unless your theatre is cool and comfortable you are bound to experience a big falling off in receipts. Your rush hour crowd will be about as big as that shown in the sketch at the right. Don’t depend upon pictures and music alone to fill a hot stuffy theatre—it can’t be done.

—Install TYPHOONS

Now is the time to install the

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Prepare to start the summer season early. Advertise your TYPHOON SYSTEM—play it up big—feature it in your lobby, and before you realize it people will be crowding into your house on the hottest days to get away from the heat—to cool off. This is the reason why such people as Saenger—Lynch—Loew—Signal—Crandall—and many other big theatre owners use TYPHOONS.

A Log Cabin Theatre

Perhaps the most unique theatre in the country is that nearing completion at Pine Knot, California, built by Frank H. Johnson, of Los Angeles, and to be known as the Grizzly theatre. The Grizzly is to furnish amusement afternoon and evening for the visitors of Big Bear Valley’s summer resort. Bear Valley is in the San Bernardino Mountains, 150 miles northeast of Los Angeles. The several hotels there are open from May 1st to October 1st, and for the past several years have been crowded with guests. The Grizzly will be operated the same period each year by the builder. The theatre is built of logs, and has a seating capacity of 500. It has its own electric plant and fire protection, an expensive organ has been installed, J. Slipper and Company, of Los Angeles, have fitted the booth with two Simplex projectors.

The exterior of the theatre has the appearance of a log cabin in front, while the side walls are of clap boards. The interior decoration gives the impression of the audience being seated in a forest of oaks. A small stage with all necessary equipment for vaudeville has been made a part of the theatre.

Typhoon Fan Increases Capital Stock

At a special meeting of the directors of the Typhoon Fan Company held in New York City recently, it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company $100,000.

This increase in the capital stock is made necessary by the big improvements being made in the construction and the equipment of the new Typhoon factory, while considerable portion of the money will be used for the establishment and equipment of Typhoon Company offices being opened in several of the larger cities throughout the country.

Back to Work Again

J. Smith, Corning, N. Y.

You will no doubt be surprised to hear from me, but one can never tell what will happen. It has been a long time since I have written you so will try and make up for lost time. I have not been operating for some time owing to trouble with my eyes, but that I would take another chance at one of the machines, strange what drawing power the booth has on one who has served some time in one.

I am back at the same old stand the Bijou, where I worked when I joined your wonderful league.

I have not seen the News in months, so don’t know what progress the little old league has made, but I surely intend to subscribe for the News, so if you will be kind enough to send me a blank I would be very thankful to you.

I wish the League and the News the greatest success this year.

Practical Electricity—V
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

In the practice of electricity we speak of different materials as conductors and insulators.

Conductors are materials which readily allow the flow of electricity, those materials which conduct heat readily being good conductors of electricity. Metals are the best conductors, while carbon and moist substances are fair conductors for the flow of electric current. Insulators are those substances which hinder the flow of electricity, and while there are no materials which are absolutely non-conductors, yet many substances, such as slate, wax, glass, etc., offer a high resistance to the flow of electric current.

Conductors of electricity are metals and alloys, some of which are silver, copper, aluminum, brass, iron, lead and tin. Fair conductors are carbon, coal solutions, sea water, moist earth and living vegetable substances, such as trees, plants, etc. Pure water is a very poor conductor, while dry woods and cotton material have high resistance properties. Materials which act as insulators, or as often called non-conductors, are slate, oils, silk, wax, mica glass and dry air.

The accompanying table gives a list of conductors and insulators, those materials having the best properties for conducting and resisting electricity being given at the top of the list.

A wire covered with an insulating material or suspended or insulating material is said to be insulated, although its ends may be connected to a source of electromotive force. The earth is a good conductor of electricity and is often used as a means of completing an electric circuit. Much difficulty is experienced in such cases by wires making contact with substances which will conduct the electricity to the earth this occurrence being known as grounding.

When the insulating properties of a material have been destroyed we say that the insulation has broken down, for example the insulating covering of a wire may be cut or broken so that the flow of electricity is not held to the desired path. Also on a transmission line where the wires are strung on porcelain insulators, should one of these insulators become cracked or broken and the flow of electricity go to the ground or other wires when the insulation of that wire is broken down.

Since heat is generated when current passes through a conductor it is quite necessary that proper insulation be chosen for particular cases. Where there is excessive heat as in a projection room it is advisable to use a rubber covered wire as the rubber is liable to deteriorate and the insulating properties be destroyed. In such cases an asbestos or "slow burning insulation" as it is known should be used.

Since water is a partial conductor of electricity it is necessary when wires are led through damp places where moisture will collect that the insulation be impregnated, that is treated with some compound so that moisture will not be absorbed. In places which are very damp or where water is liable to come in contact with the wires a lead sheathed wire should be used. This wire has a lead covering outside of the insulation so that the wires are entirely protected.

Wires placed in locations which are subject to injury should be protected by pipe conduit, Greenfield armored conduit, or B X cable. In no case, however, should wires which make up two different circuits be placed in the same conduit, that is D C. and A C. circuits should not be placed together.

For the above reasons when an electric circuit is installed great care must be taken that the proper wire and method of installation is chosen for the particular location.

In a system in which several conductors are necessary, as in an intercommunicating telephone system, these conductors, insulated from one another are placed within the same outside insulation. This cable is known by the number of conductors of which it is made up, as twin conductor, tri-conductor, etc.

THE projection room of the new Allen Theatre in Winnipeg is 21 feet in length, 9 feet in width and 12 feet in height. The throw is 110 feet with an 18 foot picture. Adequate ventilation of the room is secured by an 18-inch fan exhausting through a 24-inch opening directly in the center of the room.

Entrance to the projection room is gained through a vestibule 5 feet long by 5 feet wide where the film cabinet is located. In the vestibule are also found a lavatory with hot and cold water, a work bench with a hand rewind mounted upon it.

The projection equipment consists of three Powers 64F machines, one stereopticon with dissolve, one spot-light, one Fulco motor driven rewind. Port holes for projection and observation are of ample dimensions as shown on one of the drawings accompanying this description. An adjustable shutter with an opening 8" by 8" allows any person to have a clear view of the screen from any position. These adjustable shutters do not interfere with the fire shutters. The latter may all be released from their lock instantly from any place in the room by simply pressing any of the five red push buttons mounted on the wall near every port hole and beside the door leading from vestibule to projection room.

Change-overs are carried out in a simple and practical manner. This applies to any of the three projectors and the stereopticon. All that is necessary is to open the douser of the light to project a new picture or slide and the other is automatically closed. By working this slow or fast any effect may be obtained. Although there is nothing new in this change-over it is the best to date and has been in use for some time. Its primary principle is a master cord to which may be connected any number of dowers.

The "juice" is provided by two Transvertisers (used one at a time) and two Powers Inductors wired in single units for the stereo and in multiple for the projectors when the other current supply is disectioned.

D.T. but I do not recommend them. All switches including machine switches are of 100 amp. capacity. All wiring from Transverters to lamps is done in No. 2 B. S. wire. In order to use the arc with this wiring scheme the switch must be open. Closing the switch will put out the arc. If all switches are closed the generator is in short circuit but nothing happens. It simply stops generating. (Ed. note: The reason for this is given in the article on the Transverter, January 3, 10 and 17.)

The control of lighting for the whole house is made from the projection room through a row of 15 dimmers. It is possible to pass slowly from very dim light to full brilliancy.

An elaborate double switchboard has been made in this way. An ordinary switchboard on which were mounted all individual and master switches has been set up in the motor generator room and with doors on the partition between the M. G. room and projection room another slate panel has been set flush with the wall on the projection room side of the wall. Through this last mentioned panel and through the wall, a number of levers pass. Only the handles of the levers are therefore in the projection room, the actual make and break of the switches being carried out in the machine room by means of the levers extending through the wall. There is therefore no live parts in the projection room. The switchboard there is entirely dead. As far as the writer knows this is the best idea for a projection room switchboard that has yet been brought forward.

Projection at the Allen is in charge of J. F. Reney assisted by A. Demison and G. Strogas, all members of Local 299.

Wm. Salto, Geneseo, Ill.: I thought while I have a little time I would write you another letter. I wrote you a month ago and was looking in the News for the answer, but I was very much disappointed for not seeing it. I am encasing my application blank for the N. A. M. L. I always turn my films out better than I get in as we run about all Paramount pictures. We have very little trouble; they are all in A-1 condition, but a few nights ago we had some pictures that I had to fix out and patch, which took me a very long time. The fellow operator that ran this picture before me was no N. A. M. L. member. I am applying for membership. I am a union operator. I have been operating six years, nearly all my time on Powers 6A machines, which I think is far better in projection than any other machine. I get what other machine projector fails to get —that is something.

In my last letter to you I'll state a few new points which I have just found on "Lubricants and the Movement." I, in fact, have not much time this time but next time will write on matters regarding "Powers" machines in full detail. I have been reading up in the News for a long, long time and enjoy the Projection Department. Why do you cut this important part out? Please send me labels together with membership blanks, N. A. M. L., as I am waiting to "do my bit," thanking you.

Freak Shutter

Myron E. York sends in a sketch with this letter:

You ask what I claim for my freak shutter; well, I claim that it eliminates the flicker on the screen. I haven't tried it on any machine except the Mutoscope. I suppose it would work on any machine.

The carbon set may be unusual, but I can get good light on it. As A. C. are one can with D. C., also I never did use D. C.

I have changed my mind about placing all the blame on the city operators for using punch marks; I believe that the small town operator is as much to blame.

I showed "The Blue Bandanna" Dec. 26 & 27, it hadn't been run thru a machine but twice, there was about five feet on both ends of each reel which was covered with exchange marks and yet punch mark and mark. Why can't the Exchanges find some other way to mark their film?

What causes the grinding noise at the take up spooler? About the first five minutes on each reel it makes the grinding noise then stops; it don't hurt the film any, but it gives me the jums jums to hear it. Am running a mutoscope.

Myron E. York.

Reply:

Perhaps some of the experimen tally inclined will give your freak shutter a try-out. We wonder if you couldn't gain further by cutting down your whole shutter blade to the inside dimensions of the vignetting. In other words, are you absolutely sure that your blades were correctly designed before you put the saw teeth on them.

We will send a copy of your letter to the Enterprise Optical Co., for their comment on your take-up trouble, and you may hear from them direct.

Rutledge & Company Expands

EXPANSION is the order of the day for all industries connected with the moving picture business in Chicago and the latest concern to seek greatly changed quarters is Rutledge & Company, whose business has far outgrown its present facilities. President Rutledge announces that he has secured a factory building at 41st and Ellis Avenue, which he hopes to have in operation shortly after May 1st.

He will be able to increase the output of the well known Project-A-Lite products, as well as manufacture several new lines, including slide stereopticons, continuous film stereopticons, which will be capable of handling an entire reel of film in place of slides, and be equipped with both hand and power drives, a small projector for standard film of which he recently secured the patents and a reversible projector for both slides and films. He will also manufacture a motion picture camera which has certain new features of great interest to the trade which will be described later in the columns of the Motion Picture News.

Rutledge & Company have also taken a ten-year contract to distribute the entire product of the Zenith Safety Projector Company in the non-theatrical field.

Another new departure is the installation of a film information service department through which clergyman and others can be told where to get pictures necessary to give the psychological background for any sermon, or suitable for church or school entertainments.

American Projection Society Sees Demonstration of New Projector

A PRACTICAL demonstration of the mechanical principles embodied in the Master Projector, recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, was given last Thursday evening before the members of the American Projection Society assembled at Inter-Ocean Film Building, New York.

The members were the guests of Mr. Eugene H. Kaufman, manager of the Accessory Department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who is personally supervising the sales and physical distribution of Master Projectors in foreign territories.

The demonstration was especially arranged for the benefit of the members of the American Projection Society, who were desirous of obtaining a first-hand knowledge of the new projector, which is the handiwork of an organization that already enjoys a notable reputation in the mechanical and technical branches of the motion picture industry.

A program in which prominent mechanical engineers participated was arranged for the occasion, and for the edification of the appetites of those present good cigars and cigarettes were in evidence during the evening.

Mr. Kaufman started the ball rolling with a warm address of welcome to the members of the American Projection Society. He dwelt at some length upon the conditions leading to organization to the industry in general and after presenting a glowing tribute to the society introduced Mr. Farrell, vice-president of the Master Machine Tool Company, manufacturer of the Master Projector.

Mr. Farrell spoke of the men and the organization behind the Master Projector, and told of the enthusiasm that had characterized the company's efforts in introducing the new machine.

He mentioned among other things the fact that leading cinema engineers had directed the design and construction of the new projector and hoped that their efforts would in time prove a boon for the industry as a whole.

Mr. Phelps, assistant to Mr. Kaufman, then made a pertinent remark, in which he pointed out the big possibilities of the Master Projector. He was succeeded by Mr. Baum, of the B. & B. Company, New York, distributors of the new projector, who spoke of the plans which his organization had in preparation for the introduction of the Master Projector in New York State.

Mr. Brautgang, of the Master Machine Tool Company, followed Mr. Baum with a practical demonstration of the machine. He described in detail the component parts of the Master Projector, emphasizing the different units of equipment. Mr. Brautgang pointed out the technical superiority of the design, construction and the ease of operation which characterized the new machine. He also laid stress on the economical advantages of the Master Projector, wherein he proved that the drives on the new machine were distinctively positive, thereby affecting its operation with an absolute minimum of wear and insuring a durable life to the entire mechanism.

After the demonstration a vote of thanks was given to Inter-Ocean Film Corporation by the president of the American Projection Society, who furthermore declared that the society was in sympathy with any new product which meant for the improvement of motion picture projection.

Safety Film Container

This new type film container resembling an adding machine stand was designed by Major Wellwood White, Manager of the Graphoscope Development Company, for use with the Graphoscope Junior machine.

The reels of film are placed in the container with a spring hinged door and this container is located as close as possible to the projector so that it is very easy to transfer the reels of film from the projector to the container, or vice versa. This does away with the open container on the floor of the room or nearby bench or table, and makes it possible for the operator to change the reels without moving from his position.

The handling of film in the open is therefore reduced to a minimum and of course the factor of safety naturally rises.

Graphoscope film container

A holder is also provided for the transformer or rheostat which is so located and designed that a reel of film cannot rest on same, nor is there sufficient room on the top of this stand when the projector is in use, for a reel rest.

Fire and insurance officials have highly recommended same and regard it as having reduced the so-called danger of handling film to a minimum.

Mounded on rollers, or polished steel balls, and even with the projector on same, it can be readily moved from place to place and presents a very pleasing appearance.

MACHINE PARTS

Some exhibitors evidently think that parts for Edison machines are no longer obtainable. To correct this impression we beg to advise that some time ago we purchased the entire Edison motion picture machine business and have in stock a line of parts for all models. As the demand for some articles is limited, we will not manufacture any more of them, so beg to suggest that owners of Edison machines anticipate their requirements and order sufficient repair parts to keep their machines in good condition for a long time to come, as when our present stock is exhausted it will be impossible to obtain such parts.

We also carry repair parts for all models of Power machines and a line of theatre supplies. The above articles may be obtained from any dealer in the United States.

Three-Combination Lens Given Thorough Test Under Actual Projecting Conditions

Report by Prof. Weinrich of Columbia Indicates Success of New Design

INTERMITTENTLY during the last few years there has been talk of a new objective which differed from the common ones by the fact that it consisted of three lens elements. For this reason it was known to many as “the three-combination lens.” Just what the reason was for the non-appearance of this lens on the market was never quite clear. Various expressions of opinion were advanced but no authoritative report was made public.

But since then this same lens has been revived, improved in some ways, named the “Keenalite” and made ready for the market. In fact a number are now available and a few are in actual use.

Before giving the results of the tests it will be well to review the reasons for the third combination in a projection lens. Suppose we take a common lens of 5” f. e. This lens will have a back-focus or working distance of approximately 4½”. Under these conditions the usual line-up of the projector is shown by the sketch.

All the light in the directions a-b and c-d is wasted light due to the fact that the distance from f to o is so great that the spreading beam of light is not intercepted by the first surface of the objective. This condition is caused in the first place by the custom and need of so focussing the source image just behind the aperture plate that the image of the source instead of being formed on the plate is formed before the plate is reached. This means that the beam is diverging after striking the stencil or film. With a lens of comparatively long working distance this loss of light may reach a surprising percentage. Besides reducing the illumination of the screen as a whole it is also not to affect the definition particularly around the edges of the screen.

The solution to the problem presented by the facts just outlined could have taken one of two forms. Either a lens of larger working diameter could be used or a lens of a shorter working distance or back focus. In an attempt to solve the trouble by working from the first named possibility the manufacturers have turned out a very satisfactory lens of 2½ and 2¾” diameters, and many of these are now in daily use.

Other optical engineers and lens designers accepted the second possibility as the one to pursue. The Keenalite lens is the result of this search.

The report will remember that in the beginning of this article it was mentioned that the back focus of a 5” lens was about 4½”. This means that a distance of 4½” separated the first glass surface of the lens from the aperture plate.

With a Keenalite lens of 5” equivalent focus, the working distance is 2½ inches, thereby cutting down the distance by 50 per cent. Furthermore, this working distance is the same for lenses of any focal length. The working distance or back focus is always the same.

With the idea in mind of having an expert make an exhaustive test of the lens the makers, the Independent Movie Supply Co., sent a stock sample to Prof. Weinrich of Columbia University. The report just received credits the lens with more than even its admirers had counted on.

In making the test a Keenalite lens was tried out in the same projector mechanism that another two element objective of standard make. The same light source was used and all other variable factors were kept constant. Both lenses were of 6½” f. e. Photometer readings were taken in the center of the screen, halfway to the corner on a diagonal and at the corner. In the center the Keenalite showed a gain of 12½%, at the corner a gain of 63½% and halfway between an increase of 40%.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

I—Introduction

T HE famous psychologist, Professor Musterberg, wrote a few years ago a book on motion pictures, and he there asserted that the production of motion pictures by the best companies had graduated as an Art to rank co-equal with painting, sculpture and music. By attention to mode and variation, many new psychological appeals can be made, including the portraying of the thoughtful in the minds of the characters of the play in a way that cannot be duplicated at the theatre stage. Besides being one of the fine arts, the motion picture art has become the greatest educational institution in the world. Very special lighting is needed for scientific films, for ultra rapid motion picture work, and for the several new color processes in motion picture production. Not only is the moving picture industry the greatest educational institution, but it is also one of the foremost industries. Since Edison’s and Jenkins’ invention of motion picture devices of only a score or so years ago, the industry has leaped to fourth place in the United States. There is spent annually three to four hundred million dollars by the people of the United States for the privilege of attending the motion picture theatres. The daily attendance is said to average between ten and twenty millions of people. Of the fifty thousand motion picture theatres in the world there are about twenty thousand in the United States, and as a producing center, the United States is the greatest in the world. The sunshine of California has built up a major producing center in and near Los Angeles. (In this center, over $12,000,000 are annually spent for motion picture production, and this gives employment to about 25,000 people.) Again the importance of light in relation to extent of production may be judged from the following statement made by Mr. G. McL. Baynes (of the English Hepworth Mfg. Co., see Moving Picture World, page 2334, December 25, 1915). “As to photographic difficulties encountered in outdoor work in England it is ridiculous to say that they cannot make pictures there. It is true production is more expensive, perhaps twice as much because we have to wait for the sunshine.” Thus in foggy England, the difficulties are much greater on account of poor light than in the West or East of the United States. The invention of the high amperage white flame arc lamps and carbons and of other artificial light sources such as the daylight gas filled tungsten lamps and the mercury arc lamps, have eliminated these expensive waits for sunshine. The home-center of the motion picture industry in the East is again building up rapidly. These new studios are especially to be found in or near New York City and to a lesser degree near other large centers of population, as for example, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, etc. Scenic interest such as at Ithaca and Florida, is another industrial factor in the location of motion picture plants. The increase in artificial light facilities has been an important economic factor in this Eastern movement which is being accelerated by the continual increase in the extraordinary salaries which are paid the motion picture artists. The cost of production of an average negative of one reel is said to be about $1,000 and of this it is certainly economy to spend one or two per cent on securing the best lighting.

I—Artistic Relation of Light

Motion pictures only became commercially successful for entertainments when it became possible to select a subject, stage it with all the startling realism of the spoken drama, and give its photography those qualities perhaps best connoted by the term “Portraiture.” For portraiture effects—Rembrandt, line lighting, etc., control of the position, direction and diffusion of light is necessary. Some lightening forming an oblique angle on the face to the camera gives increased reflection, and aids in preventing flatness. For artistic results, the white flame arc is distinctly superior for securing modelling, atmosphere, definition, half-tone and fine photographic quality in the negatives. Mr. Max Mayers, in his valuable paper on “Artificial Light in the Motion Picture Studio,” given at the Rochester meeting of our Society says, “Back lighting, is a splendid way of obtaining pleasing and natural results. This is effected by placing the lights well back and directing them toward, but not at the camera, masking the direct rays at the lamp, and preferably using a shielding tube with perfectly dull black interior over the lens barrel, to prevent halation. Thus the figure and objects in the set will be silhouetted, and by the proper front arrangement of reflecting surfaces and well diffused lights at a fair distance, the features and details may be perfectly modeled in shadow, with pleasing highlight relief effected by the rear lights. Later sections will treat further of artistic possibilities with the new lighting means.

3-D—Importance of Great Intensity of Light.

A large amount of light is required in motion picture work, because of the short exposures (1/30—1/100 sec.) and need for definition. The pictures are only 1" x 3" in size on the celluloid film. These are magnified over 10,000 times in area on the screen and therefore need to be taken with great sharpness. There are sixteen pictures per foot and these sixteen are moved through the camera or projecting machine in about one second. (A thousand feet or 16,000 pictures are called a reel and take about fifteen to twenty minutes to run through the machine.) Each picture is brought into exact position with a closed shutter. This shutter is then opened for about 1/30 of a second and the exposure is made. (In case of projection, the eye in this period receives the full impression of the picture and by persistence of vision retains the image perfectly for the next 1/30 of a second during which the shutter is closed and the scene black and the next picture is placed.) In the interest of definition and depth of focus, it is highly desirable to work at small lens opening. For instance with the white flame are lights F, 5.6 is often used in motion picture studios whereas F, 4.5 and even F, 3.5 have been recommended with other sources of artificial light. Some of the flame lamps, with their reflectors and diffusing screens, can be used to give a light intensity of 10,000 and more candles per square foot, so that even daylight is surpassed if so desired. We will now consider daylight.

On Shade and Sunshine in Photography

"MOST people know how to make a good photograph when they are out of doors, and the sun is shining brightly," states Roger W. Fowler of Fowler Films. "With a little reasoning, you should be able to fathom that good pictures in the shade simple require a little longer exposure. But, if you have ever tried to make a good picture of near shade and sunlight combined, I think you will tell me that your results are always so contrasting that you cannot find detail in the shadows nor the sunlight portions. The truth is that the sunlight portions are very much over-exposed and the shadow portions are very much under-exposed.

"Before you tell me that it is impossible to make any other kind of a picture than a contrasted one, if photographing from under the shadow of a tree out into the bright sunlight, I am going to contradict you. In truth, the larger the opening of the diaphragm behind the lens is, the less contrast you will have in the photograph. Therefore, you should open wide your lens, and speed up the shutter action to reduce the light proportionately. You will probably be surprised to find that it is just as easy to photograph near shadows against sunlight as it is to simply photograph sunlight objects themselves."

"Plan your exposure to amply photograph the detail of the shadows. If you can not open the lens diaphragm because your camera is an index sensitive one, it is possible to accomplish the same effect by placing a piece of clouded glass close to the lens and doubling your length of exposure."

Three Combination Lens

22 1/2%. Integrating these readings over the entire screen it is readily seen that the lens transmits 31 1/2% more light flux than the competitor.

It would not be fair to end the article without a few words about the loss of light to be expected from the two additional air-glass surfaces. Assuming that this loss is 15% total the three-combination lens to be an improvement must collect more than 15% of the wasted diverging ray. In the case of the lens under test this was measured and it was found that the lens with short working distance was gathering in 52 1/2% more light than the one with the long back focus.

At the present time the Reclaine lens is permanently installed at the Capitol theatre in New York, the Rivoli, Rialto, also in New York, and in several others about the country. Wherever it has been placed it has given good satisfaction. It looks very much as if the three-combination lens has come into its own.

Timing Music for Pictures

PRACTICALLY every film company issues carefully timed musical suggestions or music scores, for each film. The preparation of these musical suggestions or scores, is, to a certain extent monopolized by several gentlemen who specialize in this particular field. They are all able musicians with years of experience, and to my knowledge are always trying to deliver "the goods in the most efficient manner. But, in spite of this, and much hard work, until the various film companies, because of wrongly timed music scores and cues. This, of course, is an unpleasant state of affairs for all parties concerned, view the problem from the opposite standpoint. The Film Music Company of Los Angeles, California, has recently issued a time table to serve as a guide to house managers, operators, and musicians in setting up their programs. The Filmusic Co.

Paper on "Continuous Projectors"

Mr. L. C. Porter, Chairman of the Committee on Papers of the S. M. P. E., announces that Mr. C. Francis Jenkins will deliver a paper on the subject of "Continuous Motion Picture Projectors" at the coming Montreal meeting. The syndicate ends, "Following a review of the handicap of continuous projectors and a brief review of the history of continuous mechanisms the author will describe and demonstrate by a model a design in which there is continuous motion only, not only of the film but of every part of the mechanism."

It is understood that officials of the Bureau of Standards and Navy experts have been assisting in the development of the machine, the designer because of the new optical principle involved and the new shape of glass incorporated and the latter because there is need of such an instrument in their work.

At the same Montreal meeting, Mr. B. F. Norrish of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Exhibit and Publicity Bureau, Ottawa, Canada, will have a paper on "Educational Possibilities in Motion Pictures."

The paper points out how the moving picture is the simplest and easiest way of imparting knowledge and information in both an interesting and entertaining form. It is shown that the motion picture speaks in a universal language and that by the presentation of films and associating them with proper settings can form an instrument useful in the teaching and training of the public.

It is pointed out that seven-eighths of all knowledge is acquired and understood only after there has been a mental picture of it formed, and the motion picture provides a very quick means of doing this. In describing the industries of a country, for example, the motion picture gives the student a much clearer perception than could possibly be obtained through any text.

"Edgar and Teacher's Pet"
(First of Goldwyn's Edgar Series, by Booth Tarkington)

Many of the cast are the same, they play children with a skill which a lot of veterans in screen acting may emulate without doing harm to their art.

"Thru Eyes of Men"
(Five Part Drama—Radin)

FRANK MAYO makes his appearance again in a drama, "Thru Eyes of Men," distributed by Radin Pictures. This picture does not put across anything big either in direction, story or sets, and it can be labeled as an average picture with a hackneyed plot, good action and poor acting.

"Trailed by Three"
(Fifteen Episode Serial—Arthur F. Beck—Parrish)

SRAIGHT from the house that has made the serial a medium of screen entertainment comes "Trailed by Three," the newest of the photoplays "to be continued next week." Arthur F. Beck is responsible for this one which Bathe is releasing. Charles T. Daze, who knows a thing or two about melodramatic action, has kept in mind that it must be moving constantly, and though he hasn't hit upon any new idea, at least he deserves credit for not incorporating such factors as Iron Claws, Hooded Terrors and what not. He is so old-fashioned here that the picture can be termed a novelty since the usual procedure is to write the action around some horrible freak who pursues the good people relentlessly.

It is a relief to look upon the central idea as nothing but a chase for the jewels with the wits of a trio of international crooks pitted against those of a resourceful girl and the upright figure who brings in the romance when he is not helping her in the melodramatic touches. One flaw in this serial has and it is found in the plot, which is given away to the spectator in the second episode, so that the element of mystery is somewhat eliminated. Still, on the other hand, there is such an elaborate amount of action and it is brought out in such a fast and furious manner that the above-mentioned weakness will undoubtedly go by unnoticed. One is too busy watching the heroine get out of danger to be bothered over any plot construction.

What if the jewels are taken by the girl from some place in the South Sea Islands and trailed by the benchmen of a tyrannical ruler—what if all this seems far-fetched, and the other points, too? Such reasoning is away from the issue. The fact is a serial differs considerably from other forms of screen entertainment. One doesn't expect truth, and so doesn't look for it. What one does look for is unadulterated action spelled with the capitals U and A, and thrills and suspense spelled with the capitals T and S. Truth and reality can go hang. I'm looking forward at a serial now," the spectator might be heard to say. So "Trailed by Three" can be called a rattling good show if the first three episodes are any criterion. - LAURENCE REID.

"Ship Ahoy"
(Warner-Al St. John Comedy—Released by Paramount)

THERE is little "rhyme or reason" in this slapstick concoction starring the elongated Al St. John, it being a burlesque of a melodramatic story of the nice little girl dancing in a "hell hole," with much smudging of furniture, chasing madly, and最终 being.

Susan is labeled "slimmy" clad in a burlesque "Salome" gown, in a way which will incite considerable amusement for some and probably makes some others disgusted, all of which is what the average slapstick comedy looks like when reduced to a review.

Some of the business used is reasonably new, much of it is of the "reliable" brand and some of it is just action. In this latter connection it may be said that the picture does not drag. The incident provided may not be termed funny but at least there is incident in every scene with standing around and "tugging" the camera noticeably absent.

The production is good for some laughs and considerable mild amusement. Length, 2 reels—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Raider Moewe Sinkings"
(Exploits of German Raider Released as Part of International News, Nos. 13, 14 and 15)

VIEWS of sinkings perpetrated by the German raider Moewe, remarkable for their realism and the fact that they can really thrill, despite the war-weariness of a world, have been secured from the archives of the German Government by the International Film Service to be shown in releases 13, 14 and 15 of the International News Weekly.

Sinkings by bomb, gunfire and torpedo are depicted by camera from the deck of the raider. The pictures for the most part were taken at close range, and apart from the thrill imparted as vessel after vessel is seen sinking under the waves, none by their clearness. The boarding of vessels stopped in mid-sea by parties from the Moewe, the removal of prisoners, and the destruction of the prizes, are caught by the camera at close range. The film shows the sinking of the British steamers Yarrowdale, Duchess of Carwall, S. S. Theodore and others.

The triumphant return of the Moewe to WilhelmsHAVEN—one of three such successful blockade running—is also shown, together with the Admiral in command of the port congratulating Captain and crew of the raider.

These views are bound to attract in every section of the country.—GEORGE D. GOULD.
Famous New England Drama, Well Adapted

IT is possible that James A. Herne, were he alive, might not recognize "Shore Acres" in picture form, and also might resent that which has happened to his New England drama in its transition from stage to screen, but the result achieved as a photoplay promises excellent entertainment for audiences, offers exploitation possibilities which are not to be disregarded and can be hailed as one of the most intelligent adaptations of the season.

As a picture it is not the story which makes "Shore Acres" pleasing, but rather the opposite. Good acting by a correct cast of types, human and appropriate incident suitable to the picture but a fine piece of direction, and the creation of a shipwreck make up for the shortcomings of a plot which has to do with the "mortgage," the rich villain desiring the innocent heroine, the arousing of the hero of being a thief, and such like familiar screen material, some from the stage play and some adapted by the adapter.

Gently Alice Lake is starred, but in the picture as it stands, and justly so, as in the stage play, the role of "Uncle Nat," played by Edward Connelly, is dominant. The simple, kindly, lovable, self-sacrificing old bachelor lighthouse keeper has come to the screen with small loss in value, except in the taking from him his rum, for a humor, fine acting, fine play, which was, of course, unavoidable. It is this fact which lifts "Shore Acres" out of the commonplace class and gives it true greatness.

Direction, continuity and staging is of the best. A picture suitable for any theatre and for any class of audience.—Length, 6 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Shore Acres," the famous old stage play by James A. Herne wrote and in which played by "Uncle Nat," has been adapted to the screen by Metro with Alice Lake as "Helen" and Edward Connelly in the role originated by Samuel Warren. The picture was released by Metro on Saturday, April 17th, after a long period of days' engagement, beginning April 7th.

There is no one who has been disappointed in the transition of a play to a picture that are assured that none of "Shore Acres'" sweetness, humanity and charm is lost in the picture. Quite the contrary. The picture has entirely kept the flavor of the stage play, and there is a wonderful sequence, showing the schooner schooner on the rocks, the men breaking as the turns on her side as actually found on the rocks, the waves was star and, for the most part, the picture is not as picturesque nor melodramatic, but a human, weighted story of New England life on the coast, which is for generations the "shakers" kept burning the lamps in the lighthouse.

PROGRAM READER

James A. Herne and "Shore Acres," his famous old play of the "Blakins," Martin and Nathan Cherry, are hearty shore and "Uncle Nat," has been adapted to the screen by Metro with Alice Lake as "Helen" and Edward Connelly in the role originated by Samuel Warren. The picture was released by Metro on Saturday, April 17th, after a long period of days' engagement, beginning April 7th.

The play was ideal photoplay material, having a great deal of real incident in it originally, with the opportunity of adding much that could not be produced on the stage. In this connection is the wreck of the schooner, one of the features of the stage play, while the relationship of the various characters to each other is even more vivid than before. No saving could present such resuscitation as the picture version does. Perhaps no better shipwreck has ever been filmed than this one for "Shore Acres." It is the heaviest, most melodramatic and a thrilling, exciting scene showing the schooner schooner on the rocks, the men breaking as the turns on her side as actually found on the rocks, the waves was star and, for the most part, the picture is not as picturesque nor melodramatic, but a human, weighted story of New England life on the coast, which is for generations the "shakers" kept burning the lamps in the lighthouse.

SUGGESTIONS

First off you have a title that will attract attention in this feature. Advertise it prominently. You will immediately secure showing of the picture at the very first. Print up the fact that it is a story of a race road with motor cars. Tell that the star is a girl and make much of the connection of the romance and friendship. And by the same author. Make mention that the story once appeared in the pages of the Metro, "Excuse My Dust." This will pique the interest of the audience, who buy the high-powered car driving over the road in a high-powered car. Brought out in flaming colors and it is the "Selling Point." You can call attention to the car that is a high-powered automobile car, and the racing car, the road race, the race track, in all your copy. Use catch lines liberally. Play it up as an exciting comedy of business, love and auto-racing.

"NURSE MARJORIE"
(Realart)

Old English Atmosphere Pleases

REALART has chosen an English story in this one for Mary Miles Minter. Whether it will amuse an American audience with its eighteenth century "dukes and duchesses," atmosphere remains to be seen. But we will say this for it and for the benefit of those who do not understand these well written English classical stories, it is one of the best of its kind ever produced, being written by Israel Zangwill, a skilled portraitor of English life.

There's an old saying that with pictures of this kind, however, and it is the same in stage productions, they're liable to be a hit and drarry, caused no doubt on account of the characters, whose life and surroundings are given more to quietness and dignity than to activity. Still, we have seen American audiences, especially of the elite class, sit through and enjoy pictures of this type profoundly. This feature offsets the monotony by the introduction of two characters, whose love affair adds plenty of action and interest to the production.

The picture might be a little drarry in the hospital scenes but makes up for this in the many comedy situations introduced between the lovers and again in the last two scenes between the hero and Marjorie's opposite, who does not hesitate to snort a pipe and offer another to the dejected lover.

All told it is a classical story, well written, with a pretty star, who plays her part well and a supporting cast which could not have been selected with better judgment. It should interest, especially among the elite.

LENGTH—5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter will appear at the —— theatre in her latest Realart picture, "Nurse Marjorie," next week.

The story was written by Israel Zangwill and pictures English life in a way that could only be told by this great author. Miss Minter is given a part that calls for the finer and bigger qualities of portrayal and it is remarkable how a girl of her years can carry it through and not miss the mark once during the whole picture.

As Nurse Marjorie she enters a hospital to care for the sick. She is the daughter of a Duke and Duchess of Donegal, tiring of the quiet life of the nobility decides to become self-supporting. She too wears two different personalities, one of a broken girl and the other John Dunbar, a member of the House of Commons, who has been temporarily married. He also later on has to deal with her as a sick nurse and he is packed some very funny situations. But it is not until Marjorie procures to be the daughter of a Duke that her true colors appear. She plays her part so well and her "proxy" mother proceeds to act in the most realistic manner possible in order to try and deceive Mrs. Dunbar. She returns to the staff, however, and her earnestness so impresses Marjorie that she tells who she really is. This news obviously worries our hero, but obstacles are removed and the young couple are united.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Miles Minter's latest feature, "Nurse Marjorie," should interest those who have the opportunity of witnessing this, uncommon picture. And it is unusual for common, for the story was written by Israel Zangwill, who is known as one of the greatest writers of English life in a way that is for love interest and suspense, juiced together by exceedingly funny comedy situations, could not be better.

And let us say that Miss Minter has not been given up to date a better vehicle in which to display her charm and acting ability and that her performance is one of the best of the season. She is a clever actress and has a grace and quiet dignity that is rare.

As "Nurse Marjorie," Miss Minter is unselfish to a point, and her performance is one of the best of the season. As "Mistress Dunbar," she displays a little fighting spirit, and as "Missie MacConnell," she shows a little fighting spirit in the face of a bully who in the hospital becomes her rival. Miss Minter's true young spirit is shown in this character, for she is a lively and healthy girl.

This picture presents a colloquial English idiom, and Miss Minter's performance is one of the best of the season. As "Duchess of Donegal," she displays a little fighting spirit, and as "Missie MacConnell," she shows a little fighting spirit in the face of a bully who in the hospital becomes her rival. Miss Minter's true young spirit is shown in this character, for she is a lively and healthy girl.

She is a clever actress and has a grace and quiet dignity that is rare. She is a clever actress and has a grace and quiet dignity that is rare.

That this picture has many possibilities is surely that it should be played up to the good advantage. It was written by Israel Zangwill, who is known as one of the best English playrighters of the day. Of course, the story is of the English variety and of the English life and the English acting is very appealing to those who enjoy English plays. Dorothy Gish Scores in a Homespun Role

THERE'S quite a wide gap between Dorothy Gish's newest picture, "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," and "I'll Get Him Yet," a previous release when it comes to analyzing the separate talents displayed in the two comedies. The first is built from genuinely humorous material—so humorous in fact that it became outrageously farcical. And the sequences flowed along spontaneously, furnishing the star with plentiful opportunities to feature her peculiar brand of comedy. "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" fallsers, on the other hand, in the humorous angle and homely farce category. Which naturally puts quite a burden upon Dorothy Gish, because she is a comedienne and not an emotional ingénue.

Still she manages to bring forth a number of uproarious laugh in the heavier moments and her work is entirely enough to carry the offering by as an acceptable offering. The old story of the country girl who loses for a career upon the stage furnishes the ideas and in working out it the star and her director, Elmer Clifton, have not neglected to supply the necessary touches. The heroine realizes that the little hamlet to which she has been swayed for her, but the city can only provide good opportunities. Here it comes in. The proprie should use her as a vampire to unloose the purse strings of a wealthy admirer.

A flaw in the story is the fact that he comes from the same town and would surely know to her by reputation at least. The stage is framed, but she proves her mettle and the story is as shown when he shows her back to the village on their honeymoon. Her life in the country store, her homespun antics in the hamlet and in the cabaret—these are the incidents which lift the story and destroy some of its over-stretched plot. Charles Gerard scores again as the world-grown Gentleman. Mr. Clifton's atmosphere is excellent.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Dorothy Gish, the star without an equal or limiter, comes to the theatre for a week's engagement beginning Monday, April 14th, in her latest Paramount-Arctraft, "Mary Ellen Comes to Town." The film is the story of a country girl who, hoping for the bright lights, journeyed to New York and found that the world is not all roses. She returns to the little village, where she finds it hard to make up her mind whether to stay or go. The picture was produced under the direction of Elmer Clifton, the same man responsible for her previous successes. He has handled the material in expert style and has piloted the picture to a most satisfying conclusion.—Interweek Held.

SUGGESTIONS

Dorothy Gish offers you another Dorothy Gish picture here and since this star has carried a big following it would be advisable to play up her name to the limit. Among the titles you should be able to find many of the star in typical poses. The film is in all respects an easy one and the heroine can be used throughout the picture. Feature the title—it smacks of an old-fashioned girl. Tell that the picture is the story of a homemaker, a country girl, a wife and a mother. The story is the story of a woman's life through and through. You can exploit the star as the feminine Charles Ray. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion and it will suggest the "pep" that the star has.

CATCH LINES

She was tired of serving soda to the country yokels. She wanted to be a live pebble in a big town instead of staying in a sleepy town and watching the trains go by. See "Mary Ellen Comes to Town."

"THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD"
(Robertson-Cole)

Domestic Story Is Obvious But Entertaining

The character of the neglected, home-loving wife has become increasingly accepted, hence Miss Barriscale's role in "The Woman Who Understood" is, at least, one that is familiar to modern American life. The audience is faced with the problem of finding out whether or not this lucky lady is the one who "understands." Miss Barriscale, in her characterization, is successful in drawing the audience into the situation, and the result is a most interesting piece of entertainment.

The plot is not very original, in that it is based upon a story by Bessie Barriscale. However, the character development and acting are well done, and the story will keep the audience interested throughout.

The cast is well chosen, and the acting is very efficient. The production is good, and the overall result is a thoroughly entertaining piece of entertainment.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale, the talented actress, whose previous pictures have always impressed the producer, has been cast in her best role to date in a home-loving, a woman who understands herself. In the story, "The Woman Whose Husband Understood," she portrays the part of a wife who understands her husband.

The production is well directed, and the acting is excellent. The story is well written, and the result is a thoroughly entertaining piece of entertainment.

"THE IDOL DANCER"
(First National)

Feature Entertainers. But Will Not Impress

It is a different Griffith that comes forward as the sponsor for "The Idol Dancer." Being tired, perhaps, of producing the type of picture which has made him famous, he has turned to a fantastic design for entertainment, and has subjected the public to a modern entertainment of the utmost moment. The impression that he attempts to convey is that we are in civilized communities and that we have a knowledge of entertainment to practical audiences. The Griffith artistry tries to overcome weaknesses in fact palpable lack, of theme and characterization.

Take a look at the background, and the Griffith, tilt and little remains.
To those expecting to find a super-Griph-page, or to those who will content with some of this producer, there seems bound to come a disappointment.

The test of all dramas is its power to interest and while the offering attracts from a pictorial angle it fails to do so with its ingredients.

In "The Idol Dancer" there is a mixture of piecemeal writing which is laid upon the title; a passionate idol dancer, and the revolutionary, slipped in the only white inhabitants of a tiny island of blacks, then visualize a love triangle between the young people and you have it.

Mr. Griffith's attempt to show that love can blossom in any clime is all right, but his treatment of the subject is somewhat futile. There isn't a note of sincerity anywhere visible except in the setting of Richard Barthelmess as the headstrong, and Creighton Hall as the simple youth. Blacks from a neighboring island furnish the beetle flush in the plot and they hoot and parillage when the native sons are available. You can't suppose it on the stage, can you? Will they arrive in time?
They do. And so the headstrong returns his tender sincerely when he realizes that the dancer loves him. This character is played by Claire Seymour in the customary hula-hula manner.

The cast includes:

Miss Seymour—The mysterious dancing girl of Hawaiian beauty.
Donald McQuirtle—The beach comber; reckless detest of fate.
Richard Barthelmess—The romantic, passionate idol dancer.
Creighton Hale—The native youth.
Mrs. Boyles—The wife of a missionary.

The story of a wife who understands her husband is a most interesting one, and it will keep the audience interested throughout the performance. The cast is well chosen, and the acting is very efficient. The production is good, and the overall result is a thoroughly entertaining piece of entertainment.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

D. W. Griffith, the master director, has gone to a new locale for his latest picture, "The Idol Dancer." A story of an island in the South Seas, and there produced a story which will be talked over for weeks. The plot is that of a love story involving a native dancer and a white man. The story is entertaining, and the acting is well done. The cast is well chosen, and the production is good. The result is a thoroughly entertaining piece of entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that this is a personally directed Griffith picture, and the one that while filming Mr. Griffith and his company nearly lost their lives when shipwrecked some months ago. News stories concerning occupied bus space are also advisable. The picture is a modern entertainment, and the idea expressed in the picture and ask questions as to what inspires such a love and if it is the love of a man for a woman, or a woman for a man. Do you have the South Sea hut easy of construction, with the herring of negroes to pose as native girls? A good advertising campaign. Be sure your picture, especially in the matter of promotions. A dancer dressed as the "Idol dancer" and performing the more relaxed of the Hawaiian dances should interest.

CATCH LINES

They don't wear dresses in the South Seas Islands because they "smell misionary." Instead they do "shredded wheat clothes."

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Lifting Shadows," a new production featuring Emmy Wehlen, will play this theatre on next of next.

In this picture Miss Wehlen is offered splendid opportunity to display her dramatic talents, for this feature is highly seasoned with dramatic moments throughout.

Vasia, the daughter of a Russian who is a member of "The Circle of Death," she has a very stormy time of it in her native land. Coming to America she marries a big-fisted man whose actions become so repugnant to her that she decides to divorce him. But she does not accomplish her object, however, for in a wild scene between the two she stockholm and on a transatlantic journey. During all this time she is purged by three men who are known as "The Ring of Death." Everyone, it seems, is on the alert to prevent her from persuading her husband to divorce her. She refuses to go on alone, however, thinking that they might force her to return.

A young American now comes into her life and proposes marriage but she tells him that she is free to decide for herself. She goes to see the man, holds an interview, and finally decides that she will accept his proposal. Before he departed, Vasia had entered her husband's log and that it was he who had killed him in a scuffle which took place when the man threatened to kill her.

Many thrilling scenes now occur but the final ending shows hero and heroine in other's arms.

PROGRAM READER

Emmy Wehlen will be seen in the latest Pathè offering at this theatre on next of next. This picture is filled with thrills which will interest and hold an audience throughout.

It relates the life of Vasia, a young Russian girl who lives in an atmosphere of revolution in her native land. Coming to America she is pursued by a band of assassins who demand that she should come to a certain place which her father had entrusted to her to be a member of the outlaws. Unwillingly she also pursues her to the "Land of the free," for she marries a dragoon-man whose actions become so repugnant to her that she divorces him and the only way out. He still pursuers her in his venous manner, which results in a highly thrilling scene. Vasia is tried for murder but is acquitted. Love comes to her in the form of the young lawyer who had kept the man's letters. The proposal man, for he comes to tell him. After many thrilling and exciting scenes which are our hero and heroine overcome by their love, the final cut-up shows them in each other's arms with marriage at the outcome.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture may and may not interest your audience. If you care to give them a thrill of the old Pathé thrill, they'll like it. After all, they know that it is a propagandist picture with nothing new in it. If you do not do your part, you may have many disappointed patrons in your picture. But above all, keep with your advertising.

There are many dramatic moments in this story which you might play up by telling your story. One such dramatic scene is:

Of course, the star has a reputation which she should be played on and ought to take an interest in the story. She might be the interest of the story as a whole, in which case she is well selected and gives a good account of itself. Always be ready to take advantage of any story that you play as a feature and feel in doubt as to your patrons accepting it.

CATCH LINES

"THE INNER VOICE"
(American-Pathé)

Should Satisfy Any Audience Anywhere

HERE's a picture that can play any house and give splendid satisfaction, for it contains the necessary ingredients to make it entertaining. Although the story is not new, it unfolds so well and holds the interest so strongly, that you cannot help but enjoy it. And it also points a lesson to producers who claim that unless a story is completely new they cannot make a hit. Now here's a story which tells of the innocent proprietor who is swindled out of his money by the enaming "stock promoter," and as a result falls to the lowest depths. Fortune smiles on him again, however, and makes him a successful man in Wall Street, accomplishing his aim—vengence upon the swindler. Now he usually asks why this film is so interesting. The reason is this, the story is told in the right way. Plenty of time is taken to land its points, which are never jumbled and when a big scene comes along which requires plenty of money, the audience is by then all "peace and quiet" until the time arrives for the planting of another big scene, thus giving the picture the right amount of balance.

E. K. Lincoln is a splendid type for this kind of production, where the dress out alternates with the rough character rough. It given a fairly good story of this kind and a good cast, he'll put it over any day in the week.

And let us not forget to mention the director R. William Neill and the cast, for their combined efforts are responsible for two-thirds of the feature's success—Length, 6 reels—Frank Leonard.

PROGRAM READER

If you want to see a picture without a dull moment in it, be sure and watch this one, for it contains all the necessary ingredients that go to make an interesting feature. It has thrills, a good love story and enough action to make you grip your seat and hold your breath. E. K. Lincoln, the star, who is an artist in the line of work called for in this picture, has never been given a better vehicle in which to display his talents. And he is surrounded by the most capable cast ever assembled in the company of Fuller Mellish, Riley Hatch, Walter Greene, Agnes Ayres and Edward Keppler.

E. K. Lincoln's character is that of a young inept prospector who is swindled out of his money by a scheming promoter and left a penniless wanderer only to be clutched again by the hand of fortune and placed in a position where he can make his enemies be his friends, and all that he has to do is to get even with his enemies, he is in his element.

The story contains many thrilling moments, among them being a fight between the hero and a prospector who is trying to do him out of his claim. The struggle is continued, and again and again with Reid gradually gaining the upper hand. This happens—on an Indian appears upon the scene and throws a knife into his hand with which he is about to turn the prospects over to the swindler. Suddenly, the swindler drops it—"Samaritans," as he is called, stands with the combatants to cease their struggle, which they do and shake hands. This is only one of the thrilling moments in this exciting picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here's a feature you can go the limit on in your exploitation. It contains about everything that would make up a good production. It has a good story, a good cast and a good producer.
"THE GIRL IN NUMBER 29" (Universal)

Surprise Ending Picture Provides Average Entertainment

UNIVERSAL has given us a picture that is somewhat different in structure and conception from the usual spelling out from A to Z, starring Ruth Hix, Mayo. It is full to the brim of rapid-fire action furnished by the star, whose series of wild and startling adventures comprise the greater part of the picture.

The plot is of the "surprise ending" type, and reminds one of the stage of "The Seven Keys to Baldpate." The hero is a playwright who refuses to work, so his friends hire half a dozen actors, including a beautiful girl, who is surrounded with mystery, to provide inspiration. The spectator is, of course, not in on the secret. From then on follow adventures and it should be said that the audience may not take it seriously and therefore suspect the surprise that comes out. They may swallow it whole for a while and become so charmed with this "mystery house" sort of action that they will not take a hint of their sense of probability soured in the final reel.

The director seems to forget, however, that the "frame-up" was planned to fool the amusement seeking hero and not the audience. There is no reason why we should sit, as we do in several scenes, two of the conspirators carrying on their fictitious drama, when the hero is nowhere in sight. To divert the audience—characters are made to behave most unnaturally. And this is not a natural trial drama. The audience is liable to resent this illegitimate effort to feed their nerves.

Frank Mayo provides real thrilling action, and Clara Anderson plays the pretty, frightened little heroine quite well. The picture has some poor photography. On the whole it is a good average picture, somewhat different from the usual melodrama, and will entertain in most homes. Length, 5 reels—Matthew Taylor.

THE CAST

Laurie Devon, Frank Mayo, Doris Williams, Harry Hilliard, Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Hunter, Vivian Oakman, Robert Drucker, Pauline Star, Robert Hunter, Bill Mathias.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Mayo, Universal's popular star, will be seen once more in this theatre, in a five-reeel feature, "The Girl in Number 29." This picture is a novel adaptation from the average photodrama. The story plays Laurie Devon, a playwright who has produced, one success, but has been unable to produce anything since. From one of his wounds he watches a girl in the apartment across the street. He sees her watching him through her windows. She is, he supposes, a simpleton, until one day she is barely in time to save her, and she tells him a little of her story. Apparently she is under some sort of threat, and he takes her in. Laurie, in an effort to save her and unravel the mystery, is led through a series of adventures, and eventually he finds his way to a house in Long Island, where Laurie rescues her sister the basement, and is later driven out of the house by the landlord, and watches one of his pursuers slip into the ground.

When he returns he is heartbroken, for he has lost his sister and friends. That is a murder. Then follows the confession from the conspirators. The whole story was worked up in an effort to make the malicious author write. His sister and two friends must share the guilt of the crime. Then the girl in number 29 was seen in revolver. It is the one she had used in her supposed attempt at suicide, and was loaded with blank cartridges. The murder was in a gunwali, disguised with his robe, and Laurie and the girl in number 29 met in each other's arms in the final face-out.

PROGRAM READER

If you feel that you would like to see a picture that departs from the ordinary type of photodrama that you have been witnessing, place your order for "The Girl in Number 29." This is a five-reeel picture that is entirely novel, and one that will startle you, and thrill you. The story is that of a man who, in an effort to save his sister, is driven out of a house by the landlord, and watches one of his pursuers slip into the ground.

When he returns he is heartbroken, for he has lost his sister and friends. That is a murder. Then follows the confession from the conspirators. The whole story was worked up in an effort to make the malicious author write. His sister and two friends must share the guilt of the crime. Then the girl in number 29 was seen in revolver. The murder was in a gunwali, disguised with his robe, and Laurie and the girl in number 29 met in each other's arms in the final face-out.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is adapted from the novel by Elizabeth Jordan entitled "The Girl in the Mirror." Its star has a large following who like to see him in this type of picture. The picture is in many scenes of wild and thrilling action and display a photograph of Mayo in your lobby. In your advertising copy work up the mystery which surrounds this picture, and use catch lines showing how the star comes out to rescue her from a fate that he knows nothing what soever about. If you make use of this "You can't find the end that the story is laid in Long Island." Advertise it as the "kite of a story O. Henry might have written."

CATCH LINES

What matters protection when you can see a picture with such a "kick" as "The Girl in Number 29," and as thrilling as any serial.

"A CHILD FOR SALE" (Ivan Abramson)

A CHILDFOR SALE" is, in theme at least, about as up to date as possible. It deals with the rent profiteers in New York City and carries a condemnation of unscrupulous landlords. For this reason it will have a strong appeal.

Being essentially a "reform" picture, it carries with it little love interest. A wife is found for the hero in the end, but no love theme runs through the picture. A dramatic story is woven in, dealing with the past of the villain, who finds in his life tenor her long lost son.

The picture has no particular star, but Creighton Hale outshines the rest of the cast. Gladys Leslie and William Tooker play their parts well, but Julia Swain Gordon, as the mother with the past—which consists of a hidden previous marriage—is entirely overdrawn throughout.

The picture, commending the "vethorn aristocrats," carries a moral. The episode of the father being obliged to sell his daughter seems to have been worked in to give the picture a box office title. It is not an essential part of the plot, and the wealthy widow who buys the little girl drops out of the story as suddenly as she entered. The story ends when the downtrodden tenant saves the life of the landlord, thereby changing all his ideas on economic questions.

It seems as if the success of this picture would be proportional with the scale of rents in each city. Besides the anti-profiteer appeal there is not much else to attract.—Length, 6 reels—Matthew Taylor.

THE CAST

Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Child for Sale," a powerful drama, setting forth the evils of profiteering, will be the attraction at the _______ theatre on _______. The story is written and directed by Ivan Abramson, whose earlier productions will be remembered by all who saw them.

The story is laid in the Greenwich Village section of New York City, where Charles Stoddard, a struggling painter, striver to earn a livelihood for his wife and two children. But his home is owned by William Harrison, a wealthy philanthropist, who, while he gives to charity with one hand, girds higher rents from his tenants with the other. Stoddard's wife dies, and he is forced to sell his baby daughter to a ditto in order to cover his expenses. This is picked up in the streets for begging and taken to Harrison's protests. There his father comes for him and draws a stormy scene ensues when Stoddard unburds the hypochondriacal philanthropist.

When little Sylvia contracts scarlet fever, a kemi-healed doctor brings the little boy to the Harrison home. Stoddard questions him and learns that Stoddard is her son by a former marriage which she has kept secret from her husband. The story comes to a thrilling climax when Stoddard saves the life of his landlord, and Mrs. Harrison tells her husband of her long hidden secret.

The story is a powerful condemnation of present day evils of rent profiteering and one that will make a lasting impression.

PROGRAM READER

Ivan Abramson's dramatic production, "A Child for Sale," will be seen at this theatre on _______. This is a straight-forward story, suppression of the present day evils of rent profiteering. The cast includes Gladys Leslie, Creighton Hale, and Julia Swain Gordon, besides the two talented children, Bobby and Russell Sullivan. This is the first picture which puts forth in dramatic form the story of the injustice practiced today by unscrupulous landlords. It is a picture which will not fade from the memory when you leave the theatre and is the kind of a story that will do a great deal toward alleviating the horrors of unjust rents.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture has its great appeal in its condemnation of rent-profilers. There is a story which will fill the minds of American people today as does this. The papers are full of it. You can get several clever and pertinent points from them in your exploitation. If you do any advertising at all, you can use a good full page in form of a classified ad, such as "Wanted: A decent place to live, with a landlord who cares, and learns something of the evils of the housing question of today." Do not boost this a too much, the idea is to stir up interest, bring people in and do it honestly.

The dramatic story behind it all, Gladys Leslie and Creighton Hale both have a goodly following on the screen.

CATCH LINES

A story dealing with that which is uppermost in your mind—the evils of rent profiteering of the present day.

See "A Child for Sale"—the most powerful condemnation of profiteers cloaked in a tense dramatic story.

SIMONETTA
By Edwin Lefever

Character of Story: Romance.
Theme: Art and love.
Characters: Geoffrey Thurston, a New York collector; Giovanni Vespa, a modern, old-world artist; Simonetta, Vespa's servant; Marcellino, Simonetta's cousin; Alfred Purita, a lawyer. Father Giovanni Vespa.

The Plot: Thurston is left with a sufficient fortune, though not a huge one, as fortunes are reckoned nowadays, and with a large collection of early Dutch paintings brought together by his father during the latter's lifetime. As a young man, for the reason that he found the one type of art terrain, Thurston turned his attention to Italian art and became more or less an expert on the impressionist artists. While staying in Florence on one of his numerous vacations, Thurston is approached in his hotel by a distinguished French actor who has come to Italy to hunt just as he is standing before the portrait of Simonetta, who used to be his legal assistant and whom he used to help to send his paintings to the exposition and who had been a wonder painting. Thurston is wary for he knows the old man who wants to try to sell him something—probably some imitation of an old master, since he is too often self-conscious about this. The old man is so earnest, however, and assures him so sooleingly that he obtained it from the picture, that Thurston finally consented. He took the same a very considerable place, full of interest for Florence. (Cell.) He was left at the hotel and the house that Simonetta of Bologna. He writes the old man, who says it might be or it might not be. But Boccicelo. For his hunter and the girl who is his model, he would it would add anything to its value by putting a finger to it and he therefore will not call in experts to verify it. However, Thurston declares that it is easy to recognize the model as the woman who appears in several of Boccicelo's famous portraits. Yet another person for which this portrait has been done from the life, and he will not certify it. He has this cudgel in his bag, and the girl will have it at last, that is, if it is not to be brought in as the first effort. Simonetta, however, on leaving. She was Simonetta's effort to secure speech with the young woman, for it is not that it is no record of his imagination. After some lecturing by the somber and somewhat pretentious and a bit of magic, he became an audience with Simonetta and it is a case of love at first sight with both of them. They are secretly married, and Thurston hurried home to the United States to make enough money to buy back all of her father's property, for it has been the lifelong theme of Simonetta's father to paint beautiful pictures in the style of Boccicelo and other artist actors and allow collectibles to persuade her to sell them. He has told nobody that they were old masters, but, having been trained in the same school and learning to paint by the same methods, his work is such that there is no doubt of the origin of the pictures in the minds of the purchasers. But when Thurston comes to buy back the pictures, nothing will give them up, for they believe in them in spite of all that Thurston may say.

THE WRECKERS
By Francis Lynde

Character of Story: Business romance.
Theme: Profits and politics.
Characters: Granville Norcross; Sheila Macne; Missie Ann Macne; Jimmy; George W. Bartlett, stepbrother; Major Beryl Kendrick; Chadwick, a lawyer; Brenda Hutton; Howard Collingwood; Rufus Hatch; Van Britt, superintendent; Hackett and Cranham, railway workers, politicians, etc.

The Plot: Granville Norcross, who has just completed the construction of another section, has persuaded his friend, Chadwick, a heavy stockholder in the company, to take charge of the Pioneer Short Line, a railway which has been marked by Wall Street interests, and which has become thoroughly involved in local politics so that it has the public reputation of being controlled by a number of local grafting financiers who operate under the general title of the Red Tower Company. Norcross is given general charge of the line and proceeds at once to clean out the incompetent men who have been given jobs because they are relatives of some of the officials. He announces that the control of the road will be to attend strictly to railway business, to stay out of politics and to give everyone a square deal. In this program he is opposed, not only by Hatch and other leaders of the local gaffers, but also by the president of the road. Norcross is determined to see the fight through, and is aided by the advice and inspiration of Ft. Macon whom he supposes to be a widow, but who is, in fact, the owner of the road. Mr. Norcross takes an interest in the girl's love interest, and is gradually won over by her charm. In the end, however, he is able to carry out his plans and the road becomes a success.

OUT in the big spaces of the West where the mountains and the sky leave an impress on a man's soul, William S. Hart has been living all his life—and thinking.

Thinking of a story of the West that would be as big as the country itself. A story that he would do some day when he had the time and money.

That story is "The Toll Gate." It's Hart's own story, the story he has been thinking about and planning and dreaming all these years.

And it's the biggest and finest picture he has ever made.

The one thing that could make "The Sea Wolf" more popular than ever to the millions of lovers of this greatest romance of the sea was to put it into pictures.

And that's what's been done! Not merely "put into pictures" but, at enormous expense, and with a grandeur equalled only by the mighty sea itself, made into an epic of the screen, a picture that shows the art of photoplay story telling in its very greatest perfection.

A de-luxe production whose very name means crowded houses, long runs and enthusiastic patrons.

"Sex" Is What You Would Expect From Title

REVIEWED BY HELEN ROCKWELL

"A tip I learned about women from her"—the aphorism of Mr. H. P. Lovecraft—might have been inspired by Louise Glau's character in "Sex". For Louise Glau's character, the tone is more acumen and more real intelligence in its writing than the situation gives her the opportunity for. Nevertheless, "Sex" is a lavish, arresting, and at times startling piece of entertainment which will serve nicely in any theatre, where the exhibitor desires to make his audience "sit up and take notice".

There is no lack of the demon run "in Sex"—and—there is no lack of sex. The picture lives up to its title and no one can complain of being bored in under false pretenses. It is chock full of wild scenery of revelry, chorus girl lassos, energy insolent, divos and thongs. Booths openly set up chorus girl establishments and tell their tales to go hang. Wives sit at home and breed while the darlings of the Frolic give midnight supper and dance on the tables. One particularly wild first reel is truly captivating and deliciously full of thrust.

A good story with an original twist accompanies the revelry. And the bugle of it is so sound, and the moral so true that the end justifies the means. Not just the same the realism could be tempered to some degree and give quite as much satisfaction in a more genteel fashion. The settings are lavish and in harmony with the general theme of the picture, and it is evident that expense meant not a thing.

EXPRESS TRADE REVIEW

"Sex" by J. Parker Read, Jr., Seven-Real Production for Hodkinson Features Louise Glau in Unusual Story

It is difficult to believe that the writer of such a repute as C. Gardner Sullivan could turn out as trivial a story as that on which the J. Parker Read, Jr., production "Sex" is based. It is not only trivial but immoral, and it is difficult to see how its seven-reel, visualizing, which is being released through the Hodkinson Corporation, Louise Glau, the featured member of the cast, works overtime in trying to put across the salacious character of Adeline Renaud. That its performances are confined to the structure which the scenes between the dancer's personality governed by the theme of the story and the more delicate requirements of decor, is reasonable to believe that in making the picture the director overly anxious to create an impression, has brought too much to the spectacles of the picture. It is notable for its liveliness, and it is apparent that it should have been more liveliness. "Sex" is a lavish, arresting, and at times startling piece of entertainment which will serve nicely in any theatre, where the exhibitor desires to make his audience "sit up and take notice".

Distributing through VAREX Exchanger, Incorporated
Here is a story rich with the scents and odors of the Big Woods; dramatic with the crash of falling trees; filled with muscular action and daredeviltry.

"King Spruce" for ten years has been one of the foremost novels of the great outdoors. All the big motion picture producers have bid for it.

It contains a sweet, clean love story. It shows the sweep of a great forest fire. It contains hard fighting and breathless adventure. It is enacted by a cast of fine players who feel the story they are acting.
Immense Power

When this production came to us for first examination we said: "This is the kind of independent production we like to take in from the outside and get behind with our organization."

We have rarely said about this, that or the other picture that it is "the biggest production of the season." But we do say about "King Spruce" that we like it a great deal; that you, the exhibitor, will like it and that your public will like it.

And we also say that we wish we could, in the course of the year, find eight to twelve other pictures of equal power, appeal and quality.
TRADE REVIEW says: "King Spruce" has plenty of plot and rapid action; it gives the spectator a real thrill quite often.

THE WORLD says: A straight melodrama that is good entertainment. Fine in detail and picturesque in setting.

THE NEWS says: We are quite genially disposed to this virile and pleasing picture.

"King Spruce" is pre-released in the large cities April 18. Prints are ready for screening in all of our branches.

The STORY

"Slam-Bang Jim" is an adaptation of "Snap Judgment" one of the snappiest, peppiest, fastest comedy-dramas ever penned. It is crammed full of action—thrills—comedy—romance. It is made up of 100% of what the speaking stage producer terms "Sure-Fire stuff".

The STAR

is William Russell—sturdy, handsome, typical red-blooded American hero—the featured player in such sensational successes as "Six Feet Four" and "The Valley of Tomorrow". In "Slam-Bang Jim" he has unlimited opportunities.

The DIRECTION

is above criticism. Some of the scenes are laid in the East—a lot more of them in the West. In both locations some wonderful "shots" were obtained, and the splendidly balanced cast of players register the action in a manner that thoroughly satisfies.

"'EDGAR AND THE TEACHER'S PET', the first of the screen comedies written by Booth Tarkington for the Goldwyn Company, and shown at the Capitol Theatre last week, may be counted a promise fulfilled.

First of all, it is excellently acted. No better person than young Johnny Jones, it seems, could have been found for the part of Edgar, and the others in the cast, children and adults, are fit company for him. The scenes, as a whole, are well-made moving pictures, not too simple, nor yet involved with extraneous details. E. Mason Hopper, who directed the production, apparently was a fortunate selection.

"This first chapter, more than fulfilling the promise made for it, is a promise of delightful chapters to come."

The leading role is simply written to order for Miss Hawley; it throws her up so fetchingly that much as you admired her work in “Old Wives for New,” “For Better, For Worse,” “We Can't Have Everything” and other successes—you’ll only remember Miss Hawley in “MISS HOBBS!” This is saying a lot for this vehicle, but all our claims must be borne out by your experience with the picture the week you run it, if we are to ask you to buy the others in the series.

WHEN DOES MISSOURI BELIEVE?

When it sees it.

When Does IT See “IT”?

Not when it is shown in the flowery language of the press agent, nor in the wiles or smiles of the publicity man.

The film man who is always hard-headed when it comes to cash, believes only facts, FACTS, FACTS, and nothing but FACTS.

Now, gentlemen of the film trade, please go over the following facts carefully, cautiously, with all the skepticism and cynicism, if you please, of a real film man, but thoroughly and to the end.

We have a picture. It is called "A MAN THERE WAS."

It's author is HENRIK IBSEN.

Our star is the great American artist, VICTOR SEASTROM.

This picture of ours was shown before representatives of the trade press of America, and to some representatives of the European press, and here it is their verdict:

L. R. Harrison in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD

The performance of Victor Seastrom, as an actor deserves abundant praise, but his handling of the subject matter as director awakens curiosity... There is evidence of it in the vivid stories of potential genius, his handling of the spirited and realistic scene of storm at sea is almost a revelation. "A Man There Was" is a picture of high intensity and tender pathos, a drama of the soul.

John Morel in the NEW YORK REVIEW

In looking at "A Man There Was," we cannot think of an American director who has brought out its psychology or its realistic scope any better, perhaps not at all. The picture keeps the spectator completely fascinated. In point of picturesque, story quality, interpretation and direction, it is an exceptional offering.

The star is Victor Seastrom, who is also the director. Peace as his hero is interpreted in a way completely different from what we have thought of him. As an actor he resembles William Farnum in countenance, but his performance is more finished. It is said that Mr. Seastrom is an American who is recognized in Europe as one of the foremost artists of the cinema. His work could not be better handled and teach some of his rivals how to get into character.

Lawrence Reid in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS

In this picture of a man under pressure, "A Man There Was," there is revealed one of the trends of the season. As intellectual and carefully wrought as is the performance of Victor Seastrom, his direction is even better. His marine views resemble animated masterpieces. His entire work is highly realistic. Presenting, as he does, a powerful theme logically worked out and directed with infinite care and splendidly acted, "A Man There Was" may be called a real achievement.

Helen Rockwell in the EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

"A Man There Was" is presented with such simplicity and realism that its effect is often as forceful as if indulged of the conventional melodramatic. The picture has been beautifully produced with distinctly well-realized, and the picture worth viewing it only for the marvelous glimpses of the sea, which are shown.

WIPS

Direction—has handled the sea scenes wonderfully well and registered the drama effectively. Photography—generally very fine. The star renders a powerful character.

The drama unfolded is one of strict elements. All the sequences are handled very dramatically. Vilken's attempt to save his boat is pictured with a real thrill, and his attempt to save his life by the risk of dashing which proves to be owned by his enemy the drama is swift and strong. Certainly no sequence of sea scenes produced in this country has ever coused in sheer natural force the sequences that leads to the climax of "A Man There Was." For this, Victor Seastrom, is a splendid character actor and plays the role of Vilken with feeling. His physique is admirable and hisainty at makeup quite superior.

NEW YORK DIALECTIC MIRROR

Victor Seastrom, an American artist hardly known in the United States, acclaimed in Europe as the "Prince of the Screen," appears in Henrik Ibsen's masterpiece, "A MAN THERE WAS." The story, symbolizing the life of a red blooded man in the clash of real human passions, is exceedingly dramatic in every respect.

AND THIS FROM LONDON ABOUT OUR PICTURE:

THE CINEMATOGRAPH

With magnificent photography, intense acting, and a story which raises the standard, "A MAN THERE WAS" is one of the most attractive productions we have seen for a long while. Seldom has such a heroic, natural, human story been seen on the screen. It is a sea story that appears to convey the spray of the ocean in every scene, and being a clean, wholesome, well-told and intelligent narrative, it cannot fail to prove of inestimable value to the exhibitor.

THE BIOSCOPE

People who have grown weary of "the eternal triangle" of cocktail wive and telephone intrigues, will welcome this grim epic of the sea where illusionism emotions are substituted for by grand tragedy where the fundamental passions by which all humanity is swayed sound in a deep, deep vibration. Here is the author of "A MAN THERE WAS" and it ranks with the works of the great master became poet and not lyric. The photography is excellent.

THE CINEMA

Whether Ibsen be the greatest of all times, or merely a scintillating flower of genius, any work to which his name is attached will always be sure of a full measure of respectful attention. There is that elusive something about it all which will not be denied. The play is most admirably acted; the action becomes tense and tense as the play proceeds and some of the scenes on the sea are uncannily realistic. The photography is exceptionally good.

W. Stephen Bush in THE BILLBOARD

This is a picture of rare merit, approaching our best in the technique of its photography, and equally our best in direction. In the subtlety of its art and its wonderfully calculated appeal to our pity, it comes close to surpassing our best average.

Victor Seastrom in the leading role dominates the situation. Without putting too great a strain on the press agent's popular group of adjectives, one cannot do justice to his great art, to his extraordinary powers of portrayal, to the subtlety of his characterization.

How many pictures have been offered to the trade with such a send-off by men, whom you, gentlemen, have conceded to be the leaders and authorities in your trade, and by whose judgment, you, as well as the public, have learned so often to abide?

BY THE EDITOR

Having a chatty little column dropped in this half-way position—almost advertising and nearly editorial—we have one advantage.

There can be no serious objection if our typewriter wanders into a discussion of that more or less sporadic subject: advertising.

And on this occasion we are just forced to "touch and aperitif" advertising. For it seemed to us that the one topic of Film Row conversation during the past week was an advertisement—last week's bow of Associated Exhibitors.

** * * *

Seldom have we heard a film trade advertisement praised so generally and from all angles—printing art, engraving art, beauty and effectiveness.

We have heard many colored inserts praised because of their lavish splendor—but then some carping critic has always arisen to ask, "But will it sell anything?"

That's the fire extinguisher—from that point on everyone engaged in the particular discussion starts to pick flaws in the insert and when the analysis is completed you are pretty well convinced that it wasn't as good as you originally thought after all.

But Associated met all points of the argument. The beauty and costliness of last week's insert did its share to sell the quality at which Associated is aiming: the dignity and restrained sound logic of its text sold.

So there you are. * * *

While on the subject of inserts, and the fact that Associated hit the bell on its first shot let's take a little of the room left in this box to mention the name of the team that surely ranks near the top for consistent "bell-ringing.

Nat Rothstein and Mon Randall are the boys. And we'll say— in the line that is left us—they never fail to "hit that bull's-eye."

BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS AND POSTERS

A MOTION picture poster should sell seats to the maximum number. Everybody knows that. But not many people know how to impart that quality to a poster. Of those who do, practically all are in the RITCHEY organization. They are poster experts who have the unusual ability to give "poster expression" to their ideas, and, under a masterful direction, they do it in an attractive, a persuasive, and an absolutely convincing way. The RITCHEY poster always has a distinctive charm and it always shows an interestingly individual character. It invariably voices a message to potential motion picture audiences—a message that gets over because its presentation is suave and sure.

The RITCHEY poster is a product of intense conviction. It is positive and powerful, and because of these things it never fails to get the maximum of box-office results.

It is as a sign post directing the passing public toward the auditorium. It is the most profitable investment that a distributor can make. For the exhibitor it stands literally as an emblem for box-office prosperity!

The Problem of 1920

It seems necessary again to call attention to these salient facts:
That the motion picture is and must remain a low-priced amusement;
That the small town theatre is a totally different proposition from the city theatre with its very large potential audience. That you can tax a small town theatre just so far with high rentals—just so far as you compel this theatre in turn to overtax its limited clientele. Then you invite the sheriff.
That the small town theatre still represents 80 per cent of the picture theatres of the country; that, to use a stale but true phrase, it still does and always will constitute the backbone of this particular amusement field; and that if you break these theatres you will break the backbone of the industry itself.
All this, in view of the fact that we are now at the peak—or have we passed it?—of a considerable inflation in rental prices.
The business has been prosperous. Everything has favored theatre attendance;—for that matter, we believe attendance will increase still further. Money has been easy. Therefore, we have had inflation—and inflation has been most vividly expressed in rental prices. They have soared.
It's time now to take a good dose of Spring anti-febrile medicine—a strong cupful of common sense and circumspection. The whole industrial body needs it.

Looking back to last Fall we would say that the present season has been more strikingly dominated by high prices than by good pictures. In too many instances the picture did not meet the claims made for it or for its star nor by any possible effort at exploitation could the box-office return the rental price asked.
This is inflation.
Looking forward to the approaching season we believe that this situation will be considerably changed.
As for pictures we believe they will be better—and we say this with sincerity and after a first hand knowledge of the production situation. They will be much better because they will be far fewer per production unit and because they will come from many more units and from unhampered individual effort and from more highly trained producing organizations.
As for prices—they must be more equitable. They will be more equitable—because there is such a large insistent, broadly economic demand that they be made more equitable.
This problem of price adjustment will be the big problem of 1920.
The leading distributors; to take their own word for it—are keenly at work upon the problem—we know they must be for we know they must realize that their success will be largely dependent upon its correct solution.
It is our firm belief that some system of percentage satisfactory both to producer and exhibitor will be arrived at.
We have been warned by exhibitor friends to keep off the subject of percentage. This we cannot do so long as we believe in it.
We would like to state, however, and we trust for the last time, that we do not subscribe and never have subscribed to any present system of percentage. We do not subscribe to "forced" percentage nor to any forced rental system.

If it will make our position more clear, we will eliminate the word percentage and say—that we believe in a division of the box-office earnings of the picture—one fair to each factor concerned—and this after there has been a cooperative advertising effort on the part of the producer and exhibitor to put the picture over for all that it is worth.
We believe in such a system because it will eliminate "bunk" and overselling; because it is utterly impossible to gauge a single picture's value in advance of its showing; because we need a system which will encourage good pictures and penalize poor ones—and because, above all, it will put the producer and exhibitor upon a sound and above all a cooperative basis.
We believe that such a system is in the cards—and that it will come forth this year.
It will be based, first, upon good pictures.
No plan, however good, can succeed of itself. Building a big plan upon inferior pictures is like building a skyscraper upon sands.
It will be based upon exploitation.
It will be based upon the same and sincere belief that the exhibitors' and producers' prosperity are dependent one upon the other.

Foreign Market in Critical State

Blumenthal Tells of German Conditions

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, returned recently from a business trip abroad, during which he secured first hand knowledge of the film conditions prevailing in England, France, Germany and other continental countries of Europe. At an interview given to a representative of the "News" this week, Mr. Blumenthal narrated some of the personal observations that he had made and revealed some interesting facts concerning the picture industry in the various countries he had visited. He deplored the present lowered rate of exchange, which he considers to be one of the greatest impediments to mutually favorable interchanges between the American and foreign film fields.

"Until the exchange in European countries is stabilized," said Mr. Blumenthal, "American manufacturers cannot hope for a ready market for their productions. As a result of the unwise methods of some foreign concerns who have bought our film products at the American rate and then foolishly sold them to their patrons at the lowered rates prevailing in their respective countries, we have been obliged to shoulder not a little of the losses resulting from this disparity."

Speaking of production activities abroad, Mr. Blumenthal said that prospects pointed to an expansion along this line. "England, Germany, Italy, the Scandinavian countries and even Holland are making progress as production centers. France, however, at the present time is not producing to any extent." Germany as a producing ground was discussed with considerable detail by Mr. Blumenthal. "The bigger productions made in Germany," said Mr. Blumenthal, "are favorably received by our picture patrons in the United States. The German people are attending motion picture theaters in great numbers, and there is a heavy demand for pictures as a source of popular amusement. This is probably an evidence of a reaction following the deprivations of war. German producers are expending large sums for the manufacture of picture products, considerably more money than formerly."

"The largest German production company is the Universum, or the 'U. F. A.' as it is generally called. This company has a film studio outside of Berlin where it manufactures its products. The high-water mark of the current production in Germany is probably the Munich

Barry' picture, starring Pola Negri, German actress of Polish birth, who resembles our Nazimova closely. She is accredited to be the best known picture actress in Germany today.

"Prohibition on the importation of films into Germany is still in force. The present law continues in effect until May, and it is likely that at that time it will be extended even further. I undertook to approach the larger film industries in Germany with a view of having them start governmental action for the repeal of this law. While the U. F. A., the theatrical interests and the larger exchange-concerns endorsed my efforts, the smaller producers refused their co-operation, their argument being that the influx of foreign films into Germany would throw a great many at present employed out of work. I suggested various compensating measures, for example, the printing in German laboratories of American film sent over, and so on. The recent political disturbances will probably have the effect of delaying any modification of the present ban on foreign film importations, for the reason that the prevailing feeling is that any change would work hardship on certain laboring classes. This is more than enough to cause the present government to avoid any tampering with this question."

"I am forced to disagree with the recent opinion expressed by Mr. Howells. I am against any effort to discourage the importation of foreign films into this country. That is exactly the attitude we decry in film centers abroad—the wish to keep the American picture out of the foreign market; and that tendency abroad is a strong one, I know from my own experiences. Now, if we adopt a non-importation policy on our side of the water, we will be giving the people abroad just the excuse to retaliate by putting some restrictions on the advent of American pictures into their markets. What the American producer wants in its picture theatres at the present time is variety. The circulation of the best pictures the foreign market has to offer is one of the most effective ways to meet this demand of our own audiences. Moreover, the United States controls 90% of the world's film industry at the present time; America has no reason to fear competition with any other forces."

German Films Flooding Market in Holland

Perhaps the most prominent feature to an observer of the film market in Holland is the flood of German films to be found in that market. The majority of buying companies in Holland are interested directly or indirectly in German productions. Practically all the film companies there have tried to profit by the low price of the German films, with the result that many of them are sold up with money invested in these productions that they are not in a position to buy American films. Most of the German productions are of a very ordinary standard, the plots being based in a great many cases on life of a more or less moral standard.

The low class of films shown has led in Holland to a proposed law, copied somewhat from the Swiss law, prohibiting all children under a certain age from entering picture theaters unless the films shown therein have passed a very strict censorship.

Holland seems to be going through the same process of development in the film industry that America went through some years ago. Holland being a very religious country, and many of the ministers and prominent men being opposed to films for the reason that they say they have a degrading influence on young children, this attitude has been stimulated much by the class of films shown during and since the war, and imported from Germany. The purchase of this class of films was executed on the ground that the public wants it. Of course some of the German productions are more pretentious; these are the exceptions. But the chief excuse for buying the German productions is their cheapness.

Recently Germany has placed 100 per cent export license on certain productions, including films, and this has had a tendency to curb the wild purchase.

Practically all the machines used in Holland are of the German type and the theaters run only one machine at a time. However, it was noticed that in one theatre in Amsterdam two Powers machines of the latest type had been installed, and these machines were being used so as to leave no stop between the reels. The rarity of the American machines there was forcibly shown by the fact that the machine authorities in Amsterdam were very timid about allowing these machines to be used for the reason that it was felt that they were dangerous. However after many unsuccessful attempts to set the films on fire while in the machine, and the explanation of visiting Americans that these machines were being used extensively all over the world, this theatre was permitted to use these two machines.

Another feature that attracted attention in Holland was the fact that no fire extinguishers were permitted in the projection "cabin," the theory being that in case of fire the operator should not try to put out the blaze himself, but should leave the projection room immediately, and it was stated that if the operator were given a fire extinguisher his first thought would be to put the fire out instead of saving himself.
Experts Review Continental Field

Julian Thomas, of Howell's Paris Organization, gives Impressions from Holland, France, Italy and Belgium

Business conditions appear to be fairly good. The prices charged at picture shows are as high as in Paris, and a good deal of money is now being placed in new theatres and new companies. It is certain, however, that the cheap German film has made the sale of higher priced, higher quality American films much more difficult, for in spite of the fact that the exchange situation in Holland is nearly normal, when compared with other countries of continental Europe, film men get the habit of, saying “a film is a film.” When the prices are broached they immediately say how much they have paid for films by the meter purchased from Germany and expect the American to sell at the same price.

An international cinematograph exposition is being planned for next fall at Amsterdam, at which all countries, including the United States, England and Germany, will be represented. This exposition is being directed at the present time by Mr. J. O. H. Gildemeyer, a Dutch cinematographer, director, writer and producer. Mr. Gildemeyer is now in France in the interests of the exposition.

Financial Interests Investing in Belgium

Belgium is in a much better condition than Holland in spite of the adverse exchange. There is a pronounced reluctance on the part of our friends the Belgians to invest in German films, although they are inclined to use the cheapness of the German films as a threat to the Americans to induce them to reduce the price of American films in order to overcome the exchange. However, the Belgian film buyers are kindly disposed towards the American films, admitting that they are without doubt the best in the world today, and admitting also that the Americans pay more for their productions and hence are entitled to more for the films in Belgium. A number of new companies are being formed and money is being invested in the film business in Belgium by financial men who never before have looked to this lucrative branch of investment. They have been particularly directed to the film business by the fact that banks and large business institutions in America, foreign to the film business, are now investing heavily in theatres, producing and distributing companies. Here also German machines seem to predominate, although French and a few American machines have been introduced during the war. The theatre owners in Belgium are complaining bitterly against increased taxation.

In Italy the importation of American films has been brought practically to a standstill owing to the exchange situation. Practically no foreign films can be seen in the theatres there.

Percentage Booking a Live French Topic

In France the question of percentage is being discussed broadcast. This question was brought to a head on March 10th, when it was voted on by the French Syndicate of Cinematograph Managers, the question being put “Are you for or against percentage?” Hundreds of managers were present and the percentage system (the word “percentage” being considered very barbarous) was discussed at length. The issue is between the film renters who demand percentage and the theatre owners and managers who object to percentage. The interest of the managers certainly is to present to their clientele films which combine the double advantage of high quality and low price. The producers and renters seek films of quality which they seek to sell at as high a price as possible. The film renters who purchase in many cases the films themselves would be given difficulty in renting at a sufficient price to pay them for their investment. It must be understood, however, that the general theory of business in France is that in order to make a successful affair, one must make at least 100 per cent within a very short period of time. Anything less than 100 per cent profit is considered rather poor business transaction. Programmes are rented in France at a ridiculously low price. At any rate this matter was decided by the Syndicate of French Cinematographers against percentage, a resolution having been passed unanimously rejecting the proposition. The meeting however was very animated. This French syndicate is composed of the following organizations: Cinema Federation of the Southwest of France, Managers’ Association of Marseilles, theatres, Association of Cinemas and Exhibitors of Alsace-Lorraine, Theatre Managers’ Association of Lyon, Syndicate of the Cité d’Azur, Syndicate of the North and of Pas-de-Calais, Syndicate of the Western and Central Sections of France.

Demonstrations have been tendered recently to Louis Lumière by the French Academy of Sciences in honor of the work that Mr. Lumière has done for photography and the discoveries that he has made. Among the demonstrations was one on the occasion of twenty-five years ago of cinematography, by the National Society of Popular Conferences. This manifestation was preceded over by M. J. Bratou, Minister of Hygiene and President of the General League of the French Cinemas. Part of an interesting programme was a discourse by M. Walton on the history of the Cinema which was illustrated by many ancient and modern pictures.

Patriotic Propaganda Speeds up French

France is endeavoring to bring its picture industry to the prewar standard. A number of studios are being constructed and French productions are being encouraged in every way. Every production that can possibly be given the name of French is being urged on the public for patriotic reasons. Through a desire to encourage French productions a tendency has been noticed to criticize all foreign films, and as the American film is by far the lead in the foreign production the French film is getting more than its share of this misdirected antagonism. However, it has been pointed out to our French friends that a good film is an international institution, and that if the French produce films adapted to the American market no one will be more happy to encourage their production by the purchase of the same than their American friends, and that it should be kept in mind that if their films be high-class and adapted to the American market, they will probably look for a large part of the financial support for their films to the Americans, but if this tendency to knock American films is carried on it might create an unfavorable impression in the American market, and so act as a boomerang on the very persons who use it.

It is recognized that one of the causes of inferiority in French films is the poor equipment of studios and the scarcity of apparatus which confines the producers.

Another step which is being taken to protect the French industry is propaganda, which is evidenced by the following notice which has been published by the French in Belgium: “Belgian business men and merchants do not favor the exorbitant exchange rate of the florin, dollar, and pound sterling. Do not forget that the sympathy of France for Belgium is disinterested.”

One thing which has brought forcibly to the attention of practically every American exporter shipping negatives to France is the lack of the most modern facilities for making prints. If some reliable American company were to establish a thoroughly modern film manufacturing and printing house in Paris, or any other large center in Europe, there is no doubt that it would be a benefit to that house and also to the American exporter, for it is something for which there is a big demand here at the present time.
Skouras Brothers Buy St. Louis Theatres

After several weeks of negotiations, a deal for the purchase of the New Grand Central theatre, the Central theatre and the Grand Central Film Company of St. Louis, the local First National exchange, has been consummated by the Skouras Brothers, of that city. The properties were purchased from the Grand Central Theatre Company and the Grand Central Film Company corporations. The principal owners were William Sievers, Edmund Koeln, Theodore Rassieur and Harry Troll. The consideration was $350,000.

Exhibitors in Canada Form New Company

The exhibitors of Montreal have recently taken out a Dominion charter and have organized a Limited stock company under the name of the Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Ltd. They are now offering shares in the new company to the exhibitors of Canada, the par value of the shares being $100. It is the intention of the company to operate a chain of film exchanges throughout the dominion with competent exchange managers at the head of each.

Three Benefits Arranged for Y. W. C. A. Drive

Three benefits have been arranged in New York by the committee representing the motion picture industry in the effort being made to reach the $15,000 quota allotted in the Y. W. C. A. drive. They will be on Thursday morning at the Strand theatre, at the Capitol theatre on Friday afternoon, and on Saturday morning at the Rivoli theatre.

Rumored Pantages Plans New Orleans Theatre

ALEXANDER PANTAGES, western theatre owner, signed a 75-year lease for a theatre site in New Orleans last week on which he is to erect an enormous show house, hotel and stores, according to pretty well confirmed rumors last week.

If the project is carried through as reported, the Pantages interests will come to New Orleans and erect a magnificent theatre building on the site now occupied by fruit stands, chop suey joints, and other small and unsightly buildings on Canal Street between Rampart and Basin streets, about 400 feet from the Elks' Home, 150 feet from the Southern Railway station and one block from the new Orpheum theatre and the Grunewald hotel.

The plan is said to embrace an immense theatre built behind and over a row of modern stores, which will front on Canal street.

Earl Edmondson, personal representative of Mr. Pantages, has been in New Orleans several weeks looking over sites and he is the person said to have recommended to Pantages the leasing of the site.

M.P.P.A. Amalgamates With Actors Equity

Following a series of conferences between the Arbitration Committee of the Motion Picture Players Association and the Conference Committee of the Actors Equity Association, the amalgamation of the M. P. P. A. with the A. E. A. was proposed and unanimously accepted, it is stated, at a meeting of the M. P. P. A. on March 26th at Geneva Hall, New York. Among the speakers were Frank Gilmore, John Emerson, Paul Dalzell and Col. Booth, President Jack Frazier of the M. P. P. A. acted as chairman.

New Executive Elected by Capitol Film Co.

At a special meeting of the Capitol Film Company, held on March 29th, Hugh Woody, a prominent Indiana banker, was elected in the place of S. L. Barnhard, who has also retired from the directorate of the organization. Mr. Barnhard's vacancy in the board of directors has been filled by B. Herbert Milligan, treasurer of the Capitol Film, who also assumes the general-managership, relinquished by C. Eddy Eckels.

According to Treasurer Milligan, the directors have voted the new management $150,000, which is to be immediately available for the purpose of carrying out the Capitol's new policies and exploiting special features that were recently determined upon.

Company Increases Capital to $5,000,000

The Catherine Curtis Corporation, which was organized last June, recently increased its capital to five million dollars. Miss Catherine Curtis is the president of the growing organization, which is backed by conservative Wall street capitalists. It is expected that at the director's meeting to be held this month, some announcements will be made in regard to the company's plans. Negotiations are under way for New York executive offices.

Federated Film Exchange Formed at Chicago Meeting

Independent Producers on Invitation Confer With New Distributing Body

THE Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was originated last week in Chicago at a meeting of independent exchange men, called by Joseph L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, and within the next thirty days it is expected that the powerful nation-wide organization will be in full operation.

A number of financially sound, progressive and successful state right men from every section of the United States and Canada convened at the Congress Hotel, on March 24, in response to Mr. Friedman's invitation, and the new organization, which it is predicted will mark an important milestone in the progress of state rights men and independent producers, was evolved after three days hard work.

Before the adjournment, on the third day of the meeting, the organization of the new distributing body was perfected, a constitution and set of by-laws drawn up and accepted, a charter applied for under the laws of the state of Delaware and the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was capitalized at $100,000, completely paid in by the men on the floor of the convention hall. It is explained by the exchange men, who are franchise holders, that the subscription of capital was more for the purpose of proving the stability and good faith of the subscribers than for the purpose of raising funds upon which to operate as, it is understood, the operating finances already have been arranged for.

In anticipation of the formation of a financially sound and permanent organization of exchanges at the convention, independent producers also met in Chicago and on the last day of the convention, submitted the results of the producers' deliberations to the exchanges' organization with a program of pictures which they would be prepared to furnish.

The Federated Exchanges appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. H. E. Whyte, New York; B. Amsterdamer, Philadelphia; H. J. Charnas, Cleveland, and Sam Grand, of Boston, to meet the producers in New York on April 2 and attempt to arrive at a definite arrangement with them.

The producers announced that they intend to perfect the recently formed organization, known as the International Film Board of Trade, the sole purpose of which shall be to secure for the exchanges such negatives as they may desire upon terms which will let exchanges make a reasonable profit. It was pointed out that there was nothing in the plan which would force the exchanges to sign up for three years for any product that would not prove profitable, for, by a vote of the exchanges purchasing committee, the Board of Trade will be obligated to cancel all our contracts providing for the distribution of subjects featuring a star who is not making money for the exchanges.

The attention of the exchanges was further called to the fact that the big program organizations had been made profitable through negative andooted advertising and exploitation campaigns and under the plan of the Film Board of Trade, a stipulated amount has been set for advertising and exploiting every star and every picture released through that body, and that the advertising and exploitation campaign calls for continuous advertising of the product of the producer for fifty-two consecutive weeks in each year during the three years provided for in the proposed contract, thereby preventing the dropping of advertising immediately after a territory has been sold, as too often has been the case in the past.

The following took part in the conference of producers preliminary to the meeting with the exchanges: Jack Kohn, C. W. Harris, representing Out-Of-Chester; W. A. Schaller, representing New York Film Corporation; Joe Brandt, National Film Corporation; C. Eddy Eckels, Locklear Productions and Neil Hart Productions; Louis Burston; Harry Sherman; M. Garston; A. E. Schweinir; Spanh of Commonwealth; M. J. Weiss; S. L. Barnhard, Capital Film Company; R. S. Sawyer; C. A. Mead, representing C. B. Price, Inc., and Victor Kramer.

The officers elected at the exchanges' convention were: J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, president; J. E. Pearce, of New Orleans, vice-president; D. J. Chatkin, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, Calif., secretary, and Sam Grand, of Boston, Mass., treasurer.

Board of Directors will be as follows:

J. L. Friedman, Chicago; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans; D. J. Chatkin, San Francisco; M. S. Grand, Boston, Mass.; H. L. Charnas, Cleveland, Ohio; H. E. Whyte, New York, N. Y., and B. Amsterdam, Philadelphia.

Following is a list of those who hold franchises:

The Federated Film Exchanges unites the buying power of the various members into one strong body and it is interesting to note that their purchases of pictures last year ran close to $5,000,000. Instead of each individual distribution house picking separately for the product of independent producers, one hundred per cent of the territory of the United States and Canada will be bought outright. This same buying power promises to secure for the (Continued on page 3264)
Neilan and Kaufman in Producing Alliance

Although Financially Separate, Technical and Executive Staffs Are Merged

An important announcement in producing circles is that of a co-operative production alliance just formed between Marshall Neilan Productions and Albert A. Kaufman Productions, two of the foremost film producing organizations in the industry. Details of this alliance, which is the result of a long-standing friendship and the fulfilment of the mutual desires of the two notable heads of their respective companies, have just been given out.

Mr. Kaufman recently announced the severance of his connection with Famous Players-Lasky and the formation of his own company. He has already planned the erection of his own independent studio, but in the meantime while the facilities at the Neilan plant were such that they offered the two producers an opportunity to realize the ambitions of their early picture days, the co-operative alliance was quickly agreed upon.

The Neilan-Kaufman studios now consist of two separate units, each unit comprising a light and dark stage and set of individual dressing rooms.

Although neither producer is financially interested in the other’s company and while their methods of distribution have no connection, the results of the affiliation will be of material benefit to both.

The producing, technical and executive staffs have been merged into one and by carefully following a working schedule the different departments will be at the disposal of both companies, and it can be readily seen that the cost of productions will be considerably reduced.

Mr. Neilan is a member of the Associated Producers, who, when their present contracts expire, will release their productions as of one organization. His current pictures are released through the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit.

Mr. Kaufman, who recently signed Allen Holubar to direct a series of special productions starring Dorothy Phillips, has not yet made known his plans for distribution, but announced that work on the first Holubar-Phillips feature will begin at the Neilan-Kaufman studio within a few days.

Five years ago Mr. Kaufman was studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and under his supervision were numbered the productions of such famous stars as Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick, and many others. At the same time Marshall Neilan was a leading man of considerable renown and most of his work was opposite the stars under Mr. Kaufman’s charge. Mr. Neilan had previously shown directorial qualities and his ideas on production were very much in common with those of Mr. Kaufman, who shortly afterwards engaged him as director for Famous Players-Lasky.

An admiration for each other’s ability and a strong personal friendship arose between the two young men who were later to become so prominent in the motion picture world. It was mutually agreed that should they ever branch out for themselves as independent producers a lot could be accomplished by their aligning themselves together.

Promotions came rapidly for both, Mr. Kaufman becoming general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood and later filling the same position in that company’s New York studio. Mr. Neilan’s worth became recognized more with each succeeding picture he directed until his achievements made him one of the most sought after directors in the country.

Then came the war and Mr. Kaufman’s two year period of war services in which he served as captain in the army overseas. Upon his discharge he was entrusted with the work of organizing and building the Famous Players-Lasky studio in England, which he accomplished in a manner which reflected more credit on himself, Mr. Kaufman then returned to this country.

In the meantime Mr. Neilan had severed his connections with Famous Players-Lasky. He organized a producing staff and made many pictures for various companies including such successes as “Daddy Long-Legs,” with Mary Pickford; “The Unpardonable Sin,” with Blanche Sweet, and “In Old Kentucky,” with Anita Stewart. Later he formed his own independent producing company.

Daylight Saving Defeat Pleases Exhibitors

Exhibitors of Indianapolis are elated over the fact that the city council, by a vote of six to two, rejected a proposed daylight saving ordinance which, had it passed, would probably have meant a loss to the owners of motion picture houses.

Emphatic Denial of Marcus Loew's Affiliation with Other Interests

H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., discussing the appointment of a new general manager for Universal City, the Universal studios. He said:
"I have appointed a new general manager of Universal City. This is my first appointee for the big job and I am confident I have picked a good man. He is a hard worker, conscientious and knows all the ins and outs of the business because I myself brought him up in it.

"I am going to give him a corps of assistant general-managers which if laid end to end would reach from Universal City to Medicine Hat, a distance of over 1000 miles, and give us the best pictures in the history of the Universal. His name? Oh yes, his first name is Carl, and his last name is Laemmle."

"The present exorbitant prices asked for stage scripts amounts to nothing short of a hold-up," the Rowland statement continues. "In the last six or seven months the valuations placed on stage plays—soon as it is discovered that picture producers are after them—have soared to almost unbelievable heights.
Where we used to be able to get a screen story for from $500 to $1000, theatrical producers now think nothing of charging from $2,000 to $5,000, and in some cases more than these fabulous sums for the rights to a stage success.

"This condition may force us into the field as stage producers. If we should it would be on the theory that it would actually save money on the gross overhead cost of a film production of the play later.
When it is considered that now a screen producer must pay on an average of $30,000 or $50,000 for a bare script, and that he could produce an original play in the theatre for about $10,000 to $15,000, and recover his first outlay on the success of the play and still retain it as a screen vehicle, the reason for such a move becomes apparent.

"We will make approximately fifty major releases during the ensuing year, beginning early in the fall. In the majority the big special productions will be all-star cast pictures. We will, of course, retain our present stars; and we expect that the all-star productions will develop new screen players of outstanding merit, who,
if they demonstrate their fitness and popularity, will be given early opportunity for further conquests as featured players with notable surrounding ensembles.

"Our present stars, we are proud to tell, possess qualities without which no screen artist may long endure—they are able to rise superior even to the powerful stories and magnificent productions such as we have been giving them. As an illustration, one of them, Bert Lytell, has dominated such strong themes as 'The Right of Way,' from Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, and 'Lombardi, Ltd.;'
the Mexican stage play from the pens of Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

"Mr. Lytell's impersonations of Chary
Steele in 'The Right of Way,' and of Tito Lombardi, in 'Lombardi, Ltd.' simplyed him as one of the most gifted figures on the screen today. He has contributed another extraordinary characteriization in Paul Armstrong's great crook play, 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' shortly to be released. Through sheer prowess ability alone Mr. Lytell has doubled his following and earning power during the past few months and is destined to reach

New York Exhibitors “Get Things Done”

Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Reduces Liability Insurance Rate by 50%

WILLIAM BRANDT, president of the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York, in a recent interview, characterized the new association as “one hundred per cent. progressive,” and submitted in support of his assertion the information that negotiations have just been completed whereby a blanket contract has been secured from the largest liability insurance company in the world, reducing the liability rates on members’ theatres from 22 cents to 11 cents. Mr. Brandt also outlined some of the projects that the organization has under contemplation at the present time.

“I must be understood at the outset,” said Mr. Brandt, “that the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York, is a body made up of ‘live-wire,’ progressive exhibitors. The required qualifications for membership in this organization are such that only members of the progressive calibre can become members.

“Though our active career began less than ten weeks ago, the organization has already achieved objectives that testify clearly to the progressive character of its members and its practical worth in ‘getting things done.’ The high-water mark of achievement, realized by the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York up to the present time, is the arrangement which it has just secured with the largest liability insurance company in the world by virtue of which the liability insurance rates for motion picture houses, owned by our members, have been reduced from 22 cents per seat to 11 cents.

“The steps that led up to this reduction are of interest. It was ascertained upon investigation that the old twenty-two cent rate was a relic of the early days when a motion picture house meant a store-front with little or no facilities for the protection and accommodation of the audiences. It was obvious that though the old rate persisted, improvements had been effected that made the present-day picture theatre vastly superior to the conditions that obtained in the old store-theatre upon which the rate was based. Accordingly, an accurate history was compiled with a view to showing how the motion picture theatre had been developed and improved with the passing of time. For this purpose, fifty of the representative theatres in Greater New York and New Jersey, belonging to members of our organization, were selected. It was pointed out that with their up-to-the-minute facilities for handling large crowds, their accommodations for the convenience and comfort of their patrons and the numerous devices and protective measures installed to safeguard the audiences and prevent damage to the property of the house itself, the motion picture theatre of the present time is not only vastly superior to its predecessor of the early days but is also an excellent insurance risk.

“The result of our campaign is this: The liability insurance company with which we have just concluded negotiations has agreed to a blanket contract, covering all the members of our organization, whereby the liability insurance rate for our houses has been reduced from 22 cents to 11 cents. A leaflet, explaining how to secure this reduction, has been prepared by the association and is now available to all exhibitors by application to Secretary Hy Gainsborg, care of the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York, Hotel Astor, New York City.

“There are under contemplation at the present time various co-operative-purchasing measures, designed to reduce further expenses, common to picture theatre owners in the maintenance of their houses. Negotiations have been practically completed whereby our members will secure carbons at a 50 per cent. saving.” Plans are also under way, according to Mr. Brandt, for a club-house in the film district. The regular weekly meeting of the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York is held every Tuesday afternoon at the Hotel Astor. At the meeting on next Tuesday, elections of the regular officers of the organization are to be held. The temporary officers at present in power are as follows: William Brandt, president; Hy Gainsborg, secretary; Samuel Bock, treasurer, and Adolph Stockhammer, sergeant-at-arms.

Film Containers Must Be Securely Fastened

A note of warning has been issued to the officials of all film companies in the form of a bulletin which has been sent out by Chairman P. H. Silston of the Transportation Committee of the National Association, calling attention to a recent order of the president's office of the American Railway Express Company, which provides that covers of motion picture film containers must be sealed or otherwise securely fastened so as to prevent the covers from becoming unfastened in transit.

Chairman Silston, in calling the attention of the officials to this order, urges that instructions be given to all employees.

The Transportation Committee strongly advocates the sealing of all cases rather than merely fastening, and similar requests should be made of exhibitors to return the container properly sealed to the exchange.

New Links in Richmond Chain of Theatres

Featuring the week's real estate activity in Richmond, Va., was the sale of the Bijou theatre, between Eighth and Ninth streets, on Broad, to the Van Realty Corporation, of which Jake Wells is president. The transfer of the theatre was one step in the general plans of Mr. Wells for a general rehabilitation of the Richmond theatrical field. The property was sold by M. V. Tyler, the purchase price being $150,000.

Plans for Jake Wells' new Colonial theatre were approved during the week and the building permit issued, in preparations for active operations on the new building, which will cost $150,000.

Mr. Wells said that he and his associates plan to spend about $2,000,000 in Richmond on their theatres. In addition to the new Colonial, the Isis will be added to the Bijou, giving in addition the latter a seating capacity of 2,000 people. Two new theatres are planned, one of which will be the home of Keith vaudeville and pictures on North Fifth street, and the other playhouse will be for colored people. Both sites have been acquired.

Abrams Discredits Recent "Variety" Story

Hiram Abrams called the attention of the trade press this week to the following story which was printed in Variety in the issue of March 26:

"Philadelphia, March 24.—A deal has practically been consummated whereby the United Artists ('Big Four') will hereafter distribute its pictures through the Stanley Booking Co. in this territory. Heretofore they have been releasing independently here, but now, I am told, Mr. Abrams, like others concerning us, which have appeared in the same publication, is utterly and absolutely untrue. We have repeated so often and have demonstrated so continuously the absolute independence of our distributing organization that I feel sure we have made it clear that we will at all times and in all territories release the pictures of United Artists exclusively through our own exchanges. I am certain no exhibitor will take any stock in a story of this sort."

"I do not know what prompts the publication of this kind of a story. It isn't news, because it isn't true. It isn't good journalism, because in the case of this particular story we were not asked by Variety whether the story was true or not. They merely published it."

"I can only urge on exhibitors to consider always the source of publication of stories like this and to realize that our business is an open book at all times and any radical departure in plan or policy will be announced from this office over my signature, and need never come to the exhibitors in a round-about, mysterious way."

Miami Valley League Has Many New Members

Mr. Kinzeler further states that two organizations have been hard at work during the past two months and that wonderful results have been obtained. These men are Homer V. Guy, former exhibitor, and C. J. Donlin, a local theatre owner.

Picture Presentation Improving in Rural Arkansas

An Article By H. V. Hodupp, Pathe Manager at Little Rock, Arkansas

A LITTLE more than five months ago Pathe Exchange, pioneering as usual, opened the territory out of Little Rock, embracing the State of Arkansas, ten counties in Mississippi, and ten counties in Tennessee. This territory had been the shag end of several other branch offices and no effort had been made to intensely develop it. The conditions found were what might be expected.

Almost all of the theatres were in small stores, automatic pianos furnished the music, poor machines ruined the pictures and tore the film, and moving pictures were shown at their worst. Poor prices were paid for film but still the exhibitor was not making much money for he was not getting the business. The motion picture just casually existed. It was not the vital part of the community life that it is in so many parts of the country. It hardly ranked with the general store in popularity.

News reels were rarely heard of in the smaller communities and it may seem strange but when I asked one exhibitor in those days what News he was using he replied:

"Well, I have been using the Arkansas State Gazette for many years. I read it every day and I like it first rate."

That man is using a Pathe News reel today and he would never be without a news reel of some kind.

In a few communities, where the colored population is large, efforts were made to run theatres for the colored folks without success because the majority of them could not read the titles. Today in most of these theatres little colored boys educated in the progressive schools of the state sit in with the audience, scattered about in convenient places, and read the titles aloud. An amazing increase in attendance has resulted. In fact pictures have been made possible for these people.

In one lumber town where a big lumber man put pictures for hundreds of employees the men were so tickled with excitement they actually fell down from the ladders.

"Blaze Broadway will not believe me when I say that very often one of these lumberjacks would draw a gun and shoot at the screen villain at some critical point in the picture. Many a screen was ruined. I have seen the bullet holes in the sheaths myself."

The first step in stopping this trouble was to arrange for a checkroom at the entrance where weapons were left before going into the store theatre. Under rough exteriors these big men are of deep and sympathetic nature. They are more strongly affected by a motion picture than any other type I have ever encountered. A tender moment in a film will bring tears every time.

With the exception of a few exhibitors in the more important cities newspaper never bought. The picture was the only advertising was never used, posters were lowering every development of the industry with the keenest interest. The trade papers are eagerly followed and the Motion Picture News ranks with the Bible in some of the exhibitor's libraries.

Our first big fight was with poor projection. Our film was being ruined constantly. We kept after the exhibitors, showing them the advantage of new and modern equipment. A certain big firm handling projection apparatus made a drive throughout the territory and today it is a rare thing to find a theatre where the projection is not good, where the film is not carefully handled, and every exhibitor is grateful for the advice which has given him this equipment.

No company could ever exist in the territory on the prices being paid for film, and still the exhibitor could not afford to pay more for he was not getting enough money at the box office. To get prices that would permit us to exist we had to show the exhibitor how to get money into his box office and exploitation and advertising, as well as good projection and presentation, was necessary.

We got the advertising and the exploitation going with the cooperation of the newspapers and today in towns of five hundred people it is not unusual to find a progressive exhibitor using half-page office is getting much larger returns. He and full-page advertisements. His box is putting on pictures with greater discrimination, he is using an orchestra or a good pianist, his presentation is good, and naturally his receipts are much bigger. Prices for film are higher and the distributing companies can afford to continue the development of this excellent territory.

In a town of six hundred souls one of our salesmen recently took an order for a film which represented more than two dollars per capita of population at a single order. Along with the order went a big set of posters and fliers. The exhibitor is keen on his advertising and in that small town he is making money.

"Boys in Blue" Vote for Dwan Picture

The spirit of the boys in blue has not changed much in the fifty years since the days of Bull Run, Appomattox, Gettysburg and Lookout Mountain, if their expressed preference in motion pictures can be taken as a criterion.

The G. A. R. post in Kansas City, Mo., decided that while the boys of the American Legion deserved all the attention they were getting in the country, the time had not yet come for the Boys in Blue to pass into memory.

They determined to hold a big celebration to bring out in forcible fashion some of the pertinent facts of history in aid of Secretary Lane's appeal for Americanization propaganda in motion picture theatres.

The Warwick theatre was engaged for March 16th and 17th. G. A. R. ranks had thinned considerably in the last five years, but the members figured many people in Kansas City would join with them in celebrating the feats of American history in which they had taken part.

And they were right. The event was taken up by the newspapers and for the time being the American Legion doings were backed off the front page and the G. A. R. came in for the lion's share of attention. The event proved to be a highly popular patriotic one and the Warwick theatre is reported to have had two of the biggest days of business in its history.

A number of features were submitted to the Post for its consideration, but after going over the list a vote was taken and "Soldiers of Fortune."
Here We Find a Result of Good Newspaper Exploitation

When "The Luck of the Irish" played Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, a very novel exploitation campaign was waged in connection with the feature in the nature of interviews with Producer Dwan and the members of the cast who had leading roles. The result was entirely satisfactory from every angle. Los Angeles is of course fortunate in being the production center and able to pull stunts that are denied other cities.
Comedy Without a Face or a Title

There is something new under the sun, as is being shown at the Rivoli Theatre this week with the presentation of "Daisy Feet," a comedy in which the face of none of the actors is ever shown on the screen. In fact, their "figures" are confined to that portion of them from their "knees down," including that portion of the anatomy of an attractive girl. There is not a title in the whole picture but the action is so apparent that titles would be superfluous.

It shows a quartette of men—their feet only—standing in front of a cigar store and a girl passing. One of the men follows; the girl flies; a passing train separates them; the coy maiden hesitates; the youth overtakes her; a flirtation on a park bench, interrupted first by a tramp and then by a fat negress; courtship and then marriage; the groom's celebration and the bride's punishment.

Carr and Schad Welcome Children

Children, as a necessary adjunct to the exhibition of motion pictures in a neighborhood theatre, have been recognized by Carr and Schad in opening the Strand Theatre in Reading, Pa. The firm, which operates three other theatres in Reading, made a special appeal to the children and the parents of children on the opening date, on the theory that a picture showing special care for the comfort and welfare of children which acquire a friendly standing in any neighborhood made up of American homes.

Accordingly the announcements of the opening contained the invitation to bring or send the children. The fact was advertised that two women would be employed regularly by the theatre to look after the comfort of kiddies who attended and to give them any attention that was necessary. Charlie Chaplin's "A Day's Pleasure," which was used as the opening feature, was also advertised as a picture that would make a special appeal to the young folks.

The Strand is one of the most beautiful theatres in Pennsylvania. The seats are extra spacious, the aisles wide, and the scheme of interior decoration makes it most attractive. In addition to a large orchestra pit the theatre has a three-manual organ. The ventilating system makes it possible to entirely change the air in the auditorium every three minutes.

Carr and Schad, owners of the Strand, already operate the Colonial, Arcadia and Princess theatres in Reading. These houses are located in what is called the downtown section of the city. The Strand is located in the main residential section and it was the idea of the owners to give the people residing in the neighborhood of the theatre a photo-play house of their own and a place to go without the trouble of traveling or being all fussed up in their best clothes.

Comedies Present Great Billing Possibilities

A glowing example of how the most interesting and helpful exploitation may often be obtained with insignificant expense has recently been demonstrated by George Fischer, maager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, who, at the same time, touched a vital spot as relates to the justification of promotion for subjects that usually go on a program unheralded.

It is an old precedent established at a time when exploitation was not fully understood, checking exhibitors who desire to take progressive steps in the grand art of increasing box office receipts.

This is a problem which Mr. Fischer has answered in his novel campaign and in the answering thereof he has established once and for all in Milwaukee, at least, that a novel comedy served in one-reel or ten-reel portions is just as good food for exploitation as the standard six-reel production.

And in the proving of the facts that unique exploitation can be accomplished with a small expense and that there is a new field for exploitation Mr. Fischer changed to devote his time and attention to "A Twilight Baby."

"It is unaccountably yet thoroughly established that exhibitors have given the exploitation of comedy attractions little or no attention," said Mr. Fischer. "Just why, I cannot explain, for, indeed, comedies of the nature of 'A Twilight Baby' afford the exhibitor a forty per cent better chance for appealing exploitation than the stereotyped films that invariably are promoted.

"It is a matter of motion picture history that exploitation has followed an old precedent. Original ideas are now being brought forth with more frequency than ever before but to the showman who is striving for long, progressive strides the steps now taken are only a beginning. Figuratively there has been a color line drawn against certain types of production so far as exploitation is concerned. Our little experience with 'A Twilight Baby' shows that if such a distinction is being made, it is an undue discrimination and in so recognizing it the exhibitor is robbing himself.

"Some might call it luck but others would term it a bit of exhibitor ingenuity that led Mr. Fischer to arrange with the Gridley Dairy Company to furnish him with a number of giant papier-mache milk bottles which they had used a number of months previously on a pure food drive in Milwaukee. These bottles ranged in length from four to eight.

"As a coincidence a motion picture ball was given at the Auditorium just a few days previous to the first showing of "A Twilight Baby" at the Alhambra. A number of the attachments of the Alhambra so adapted the bottles as to get within and make the bottles appear to walk about. Each bottle was labeled "A Twilight Baby."

"After the bottles had served their purpose at the photoplay ball they were removed to the lobby of the Alhambra theatre, the great length of which readily lends itself to such use. Here the bottles were placed in such a manner it seemed that large cut-outs of boston babies were holding the bottles.

"Supplementing the lobby and novelty exploitation, Mr. Fischer was liberal with his display advertising, devising snappy word matter to accompany his advertising. The result was that he had reaped big feature profits from a production that might have been neglected through antiquated custom and prejudice.

One of the big things we have been building with the territory is confidence in the men distributing film and in taking an order such as described here. The greatest care was taken to see that the exhibitor had the right assortment of stuff and was certain when he had played his contracts to be satisfied with his returns.

The secret of the whole matter, to my mind, lies in the fact that the man running the theatres in the territory were business men of the highest type but they were not showmen. They were at the shag end of several territories and few salesmen took the trouble to help them. They wanted help, they wanted to do the thing right, and when the chance came they were grateful. They have been helped, and the industry as a whole has been helped, and it has been definitely shown that the true success in this business lies in every branch of it extending the helping hand to every other branch.

It also demonstrates that the showmanship, accessories created and directed by specialists in the big centers are the greatest help to the industry in every part of the country. The public must be reached and the distributor must assist the exhibitor in every way in reaching the public.
Saenger's Got Busy When "Brother Isaiah" Arrived

There is only a lesson and an inspiration in this page layout showing "Brother Isaiah" preaching and "healing by faith" at New Orleans, as told on the opposite page and that is to follow the example of the Saenger Amusement Company when they booked "The Miracle Man" for a return engagement when "Brother Isaiah" arrived and took advantage of a local event. Never neglect an opportunity to "hook on to local color."
New Orleans Faith Healer Great Boon to Saengers

“Brother Isaiah’s” Visit Suggests Return Engagement of “Miracle Man”

T. R. Johnson, City, Tenn., exhibitor who had a hot dog fight in his lobby knew he was after some kind of exploitation, but the Saenger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, has been getting more exploitation the last week and a half (and it’s still going) than it knew what to do with. It didn’t even have the picture booked when the exploitation started and had to do some scurrying around to locate a print of “The Miracle Man,” when a “miracle man” in the flesh showed up in New Orleans one morning and began healing any and all who came under the “blessed” touch of his hands.

“Brother Isaiah” Cudney, 72-year-old boatman, woodman, fisherman, watchman on a government dredge boat, had been in New Orleans five years but only a few knew him. Those who have seen “The Miracle Man” have seen the same scenes, almost, reacted, but at first there was no clicking whirr of the cameras nor the shouts of directors. “Brother Isaiah” had a houseboat on the Mississippi river, moored on the New Orleans side. He had been healing by faith various ones who went to him for more than a month before the newspapers discovered him, because those he had helped feared to let others know of his efforts lest he be made stop by ethical doctors or someone else. Thursday morning, March 11, the first newspaper story appeared. Before Sunday evening following more than 30,000 persons had visited him and seen him and heard him preach and pray.

Daily newspaper reporters checked up “cures” and verified from the patients’ own lips that more than 40 of them had been instantly relieved of such apparently incurable afflictions as deafness, muteness, paralysis, internal troubles, some afflicted since birth and others for years. Several children born deaf and dumb were helped. They were made able to distinguish sounds and light.

Immediately the headline writers on the newspapers called “Brother Isaiah” the “Miracle Man.”

Like fire the word spread. Saengers saw the opportunity but where was a film? Telegrams flew. Phones were kept ringing and finally a print was located. It went on all last week at the Globe theater and played to capacity houses. The only additional advertising Saengers did was to run one ad printed in The Item.

There were several characters among those treated by “Brother Isaiah” who correspond almost identically to the characters in “The Miracle Man.” Those who had not seen the picture when it played in New Orleans the first time heard of this and went to see it. Those who had seen it remembered the likeness of the events and again attended to verify their remembrance. Others went because they thought it was a movie of the New Orleans “Miracle Man,” and they were not disappointed because Saengers had motion pictures made of “Brother Isaiah” ministering to the multitude and showed those in addition.

At first suspicion was expressed by the public that it was an exploitation scheme, especially when the newspapers carried the first two days 72-point, eight-column, page one streamers in which the words “Miracle Man” were used. Editors ordered the use of these words stopped, but the name stuck in the people’s mind. Despite offers of all amounts of money for his cures, the “Miracle Man” has refused to accept reward for his services and continued his preaching, praying and ministering eight days with only ten hours sleep or rest. His houseboat was sunk three times by crowds climbing on it. He had to get in a skiff and go out into the river to answer correspondence and to escape the crowd.

Exploitation Expert Impersonates Rogers

WILL ROGERS, in his delightful tramp character of “Jubilo,” was given an effective advance introduction to the people of Atlanta, Ga., through a novel impersonation stunt pulled off by Arnold Rittenberg, Goldwyn’s local publicity man.

Rittenberg, after an anxious week of trying to develop a real, honest-to-goodness tramp “stubble” on his face, arrayed himself in all the disreputable-looking old clothes he could find. Then, with his wife, who was all dressed up in her best, and a huge and battered valise, a couple of other crusaders, he ambushed along Atlanta’s leading streets—the forerunner of the new motion picture star, who, with his delightful naïveté and quaint, spontaneous humor, has won thousands of hearts wherever his pictures have appeared.

The suitcase, acting as a megaphone, bore on its side in large white letters the legend, “Why would a swell girl like this marry a hobo?” and the words, “See the great Jubilo at the Forsyth, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Their plan of attack was very much like that of the old-fashioned patent medicine vender. They would swing along for a block or two, suit case prominently displayed, and, when a sufficiently large crowd had gathered behind them, they would stop—and pull off a well-staged domestic wrangle (they’re married, so they know how it’s done).

During the argument the suit case would be dropped, and as it fell it would open, revealing a large card upon which was lettered, “Why will a beautiful woman like this marry such a creature as Jubilo?”

Of course, by this time the crowd had caught on, but they enjoyed it just the same, and talk of “Jubilo” could be heard along every street in the neighborhood of the Forsyth.

The pair made their appearance on the most populous thoroughfares of Atlanta, and the enthusiastic reception given the picture directly afterwards at the Forsyth was plentiful evidence that their stunt had proved a big success. When Will Rogers finally appeared upon the Forsyth screen he was received by a record crowd which responded sympathetically to all of his amusing, though intensely human, situations.

Because of the interest awakened in Jubilo through this stunt, the engagement of the picture at the Forsyth Theatre was more than usually successful.

In addition to this special stunt, other good publicity work was accomplished during the run of Jubilo at the Forsyth. Two of the best known eating places in Atlanta were induced to serve a special “Jubilo Salad,” and to announce the fact with large placards placed in their windows, which are among the best window display locations in Atlanta. Here, again Mrs. Rittenberg was called into service. She furnished the recipe for the “Jubilo Salad.”
On the page is shown something of the business which Tally’s Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, did with “The Mystery of the Yellow Room” on the opening night, February 23. It will also give those who have never visited Los Angeles an idea of what a winter’s night is like in lower California. Note that many of the people in the crowd are not wearing overcoats.
How Watts Killed Two Birds with One Stone

“Everywoman” Exploitation Serves Double Purpose at Springfield

WHEN W. W. Watts purchased the Princess theatre from Kunz Bros., he looked around for an attraction to inaugurate the playhouse under his management. "Everywoman" was decided upon as the first offering. When Watts had made his decision on the picture, he began to devise plans to put the picture over in the proper manner.

Getting in touch with the State Journal, Watts agreed to give as many tickets to the theatre as would be necessary to put on some sort of a contest. It was suggested that a page or double page be worked up with advertisements calling attention to things that every woman needs or would like to have. One of the mats sent out by the producers was then cast and cut up and distributed among the advertisers. The rules of the contest stated that it was only necessary to cut the pieces out and paste them together in the neatest and most artistic manner.

A page and a half was sold by the State Journal to run twice—once with the rules of the contest and then again when the winners had been decided. This gave three full pages for "Everywoman" and also called attention to the fact that the Princess was passing into the hands of a new manager.

The State Register, the other local paper, also put on a similar advertising proposition, running a full page twice. When Watts had decided the winners in the State Journal contest, all of the winning offers were taken to the theatre and displayed in the lobby. They caused a great deal of comment.

Another thing that Watts did that made friends with a great many was his decision when it came to awarding the prizes. Originally there were twenty offered, but when Watts saw the number of replies he decided to give away fifty additional prizes to those who did not win the first twenty. Of course this pleased a great many youngsters who would have been a bit disappointed and downhearted because their efforts were not successful. The advertising that Watts and the Princess received from this matter can not be estimated but it must have been worth hundreds of dollars.

Watts thanked the newspapers for their part in helping him put over the opening in such great shape. But the papers did not expect or wish thanks, for they had secured two or three pages of additional advertising at little expense and were able to offer their readers some worth-while prizes, which is a very valuable aid in securing and holding circulation.

What was done in Springfield on "Everywoman" can be done in any city on any picture that has merit.

Printed Novelties Jennings’ Specialties

Toronto Exhibitor Believes in the Potency of Good “Printers’ Ink”

MANAGER HERB JENNINGS of the Allen’s Danforth theatre, Toronto, Ontario, can be counted upon to evolve a wider variety of printed novelties to advertise a moving picture theatre than half a dozen ordinary mortals combined. Every few days his brain invents a new advertising stunt and generally it is a printed booster. Jennings capitalizes every local topic or appropriate incident and links his house with current themes. Further, the new Danforth theatre is a community centre in every sense of the word. Before the theatre was built a number of people representing the Danforth Avenue section, headed by several clergymen, waited upon the Provincial Government to protest against the granting of a license for a theatre to be erected in the district. Almost any day now, with the theatre not yet a year old, you will find some of these same preachers and representatives of the citizens visiting with Manager Jennings in his private office. Jennings is in touch with every development in the section and the result is that reporters of several local newspapers include the Danforth theatre in their list of daily calls for news. One of Jennings’ recent stunts was a baby show for the Danforth district and he was also responsible for the organization of the Danforth Business Men’s Association which has, for one of its objects, the improvement of stores, traffic facilities and other local features. Many stores in the neighborhood now look cleaner and brighter as a result of this association’s activities.

For the presentation of Clara Kimball Young’s “Eyes of Youth” at the Danforth theatre on March 15 to 17, Jennings distributed several thousand folders on which both visible and invisible ink was used. On the outside of the folder appeared the words, “For—from the Far East came the Yogi.” On the first inside page was the following: “Bear well his words of wisdom.” On the opposite page: “For the Yogi commands you—Heat the opposite side of this paper with a match and behold one of Life’s greatest lessons.” Below this appeared a large blank square and beneath appeared: “My ways are mysterious, my visits are short. At Allen’s Danforth, March 15, 16 and 17.” By heating the page as instructed, the title of the picture and the name of the star came out as if written with pen and ink.

The Danforth presented “Polyanna” during the first half of the week of March 22 and a “Scholars’ Matinee” was arranged for Tuesday afternoon, March 23. To advertise this performance, handsome two-color cards bearing adapted nursery rhymes were distributed at all schools of the district. The special price of admission, 10 cents, was noted while the special message to parents that “Polyanna is just the sort of a picture you would enjoy having your child witness,” was also set forth prominently.

“When the Clouds Roll By,” starring Douglas Fairbanks, was booked for the first half of the week of March 29 and for this Manager Jennings has sent out “Leap Year Proposals.” The front of this folder says, “Leap Year I propose”—and inside one reads: “That you see Douglas Fairbanks in ‘When the Clouds Roll By’” This is followed by an impromptu proverb: “‘And Noah says: ‘When the Clouds Roll By, we ought to have good weather.’”

The patrons of the Danforth are now always looking for something out of the ordinary in the way of original folders, cards, circulars, etc., announcing coming attractions and Jennings does not disappoint them. Week after week something entirely new and different appears and the patrons hold their hands out eagerly for the dodgers. Many of these novelties are worth while saving.

Showing Two Lobby Displays For "The Fortune Hunter"

The exploitation possibilities of "The Fortune Hunter" were quickly recognized by exhibitors who go in for lobby displays. The top cut on this page shows the lobby decoration for this picture, which the Princess theatre of St. Paul designed and arranged for the film's engagement at this house. The bottom cut is another "Fortune Hunter" display somewhat less elaborate but very effective, the work of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga.
Sane Exploitation Box Office Asset
Says Thos. Soreio

Lowell Showman States Exaggerated Claims for Pictures Are Boomerangs

ONE hears so many complaints on all sides from moving picture patrons concerning exaggerated claims in film advertising and publicity that there is room for wide improvement in setting forth facts and figures of the pictures and at the same time without giving offence.

I am forced to admit that many managers, some of them shrewd business men and capable leaders, utterly ignore the fact that their patrons may possess intellects of their own. I could cite instances where managers have made claims through 'letters' in the newspapers which, to their regret, were not borne out in fact, as many of the patrons soon learned. These claims were mere exaggerations, and probably seemed to the managers as perfectly proper and a part of the up-to-date methods used too largely nowadays in the motion picture industry for its own good.

What is sane publicity, then? To my way of thinking (and I have been devoting a large part of my time to the study of this phase of the problem), that medium which reaches the largest number of people calculated to respond to the facts set forth and accepting these facts as honest statements, is the only ideal publicity. Sane publicity can be achieved through the newspapers, by contests in connection with the theatre, bill-boards, hand bills, and through any of the other dozen or more agencies available.

In this instance intelligence must be shown in selecting the medium of publicity. One would not (and should not) attempt to interest the better class of patrons by distributing garish hand bills at their doors. Perhaps a carefully worded letter-pamphlet directed to the intelligence of the cultured patron would result more satisfactorily to the manager than the gaudy pamphlet, if this agency is desired. Since all types constitute the average moving picture audience, the lower strata must not be ignored. To enlist their attention without being charged with exaggerating, is a problem no less serious than that which confronts the manager in appealing to his better class of patrons.

Newspaper publicity, including an unstinted use of cuts and display ads, supplemented by the so-called contests (about which I will go into detail later on in this article), gives excellent satisfaction, I have found. The appeal of these agencies is, of course, very broad. This is in direct contrast to the carefully worded letter directed to the more intelligent patrons. A great many managers feel that so long as they present facts to the public, no matter how extravagant they are, this accomplishes the true function of publicity. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Barum's philosophy that the public loves to be bunted has been replaced by a hatred of being cheated and humiliated. If a manager sets forth facts, either unconsciously or deliberately, which his patrons learn have been exaggerated they become embittered and lose their respect for the house and its manager. I don't say that all managers do this, but there is a tendency to seek patronage by surpassing rival managers in making vast claims with respect to their houses. This breeds contempt and suspicion on the part of the patron. He grows more and more skeptical of moving picture publicity, and probably in the end rejects the whole business and determines to 'take a chance' and find out for himself. This is the attitude of the more intelligent every time they enter a moving picture theatre, and is something which should be deplored.

Good publicity is the life of a theatre, and bad publicity will drive away patrons from the most carefully managed theatre. Perhaps I should say here that many of these statements are conventional and perhaps stereotyped, yet nevertheless I firmly believe they cannot be repeated often enough to sufficiently impress managers who wish to enhance their reputation and enlarge their box office receipts.

By studying your audience as a collective unit and with respect to the locality in which your theatre is situated, and by studying the temperament of the city as a whole, one can determine what is the proper publicity and will give the best results. One wouldn't be expected to use the same methods in a university city as in a mill city; therefore, it doesn't mean that publicity must be exaggerated even with patrons not classed as intellectual, for the worth of publicity is measured by the responsiveness of those to whom it is directed.

When a theatre sets forth publicity in an attractive, catchy manner without exaggeration, patrons grow to learn they can depend on what this particular theatre has to offer.

Newspaper men tell me that a large percentage of the publicity which is received at the copy desks of dailies is 'bunk.' They say neither intelligence nor good taste. A great deal of this trash is sent out, they say, by professional press agents who fail to make a study of the particular needs of the house, and use the same old hackneyed expressions. These fellows seem to think the more exaggerated their statements the larger the appeal. Unfortunately a great many of them don't seem to know what to leave unsaid—true art in itself.

This subject is a vital matter to the managers, and therefore, no matter how busy they are, they should at least read the publicity which goes into their papers. A bald statement dressed up with a lot of adjectives cannot achieve the result, in most cases, that a suggestive assertion combining dignity and modesty, can. I don't mean that publicity need by mysterious, but by subtle inaudible and a clever play on the imagination publicity can be made to win many friends and fatten the coffers of the manager.

The follow-up, whether in newspaper publicity, is another matter and an admirable way to focus attention on the theatre. Perhaps I can illustrate this better by concrete example.

For instance, I have just laid out a publicity campaign as general manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., which will include some very clever descriptive ads, all hand drawn, and the same have already been tried out, and have brought very good results at our theatre. During the summer the patronage of moving picture theatres is perhaps slightly less than in the winter, and I felt that if I could interest the school children it might increase the box-office receipts. So I began early, and during this past week or so opened my campaign on the youngsters by offering five dollars in gold to the Lowell school child finding the first pussywillow of the season, as the official harbinger of spring.

I secured the co-operation of the school authorities, and while it did not involve any large expense, it attracted wide attention and great excitement among the little folks. Incidentally, the winner was Anna Readon, twelve, who is in the 8-A grade in one of the public schools here. I brought it to their attention by the use of slides, so that it didn't even cost me anything for newspaper advertising.

To illustrate the follow-up method and to increase their interest I also offered five dollars in gold for the best drawing of a pussywillow among the school children. This again the school authorities heartily endorsed. All the drawings have been made, and the drawing instructor will act as judge, and select the winner within the next fortnight.

A prize drawing and the best of those drawn by the children will be exhibited in the lobby of the theatre. I have in mind several other such stunts as these to follow up with.
Two West Coast Ideas Which Register As Extra Good

This is a reproduction of a special 24 sheet poster used for the showing of "Dangerous Days" at the California theatre, Los Angeles, and which was productive of a great amount of interest. The same idea may be followed out in various other ways besides that shown here.

When Sid Grauman played "Easy to Get" he used the interior of a Pullman car as the setting for a prologue number before screening the feature. Same was described in a recent issue of the News. Shown above is the "car" which had "practical" wheels and the performers who presented the act.
Patrons "Review" Serial for Kashin

UNUSUAL means were adopted by Morris Kashin, manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, Quebe, to popularize the "The Lion Man." Public and private invitations were extended for attendance at special screenings of the first two episodes at the Holman. Two of these screenings were held in the morning and a third was conducted late at night. The house was well filled on each of the occasions by regular and casual patrons who were asked to fill out a printed form, giving their honest opinion of the serial as well as their names and addresses. A copy of this printed form was published in one of the local newspapers with the request that the people bring it with them to the theatre for the private presentation. Copies were also given to those who had neglected to clip the coupon. The scores of replies all indicated that the "reviewers" were well satisfied with the episodes screened and the picture was then announced as booked as a result of the public verdict.

Another unique stunt was the sale of "season tickets" for the entire serial of eighteen chapters. These tickets were first distributed without charge with a coupon attached which read as follows:

"Save Money! Here's your chance to see the entire eighteen episodes of this wonderful serial at a greatly reduced cost. Let us tell you about the discount on this season ticket. Bring this ticket to the Holman Theatre." The card, which bore eighteen numbered spaces for punching, was not good for admission to the theatre until the holder had paid the amount required in which case it was countersigned in a space indicated for a signature. Following this procedure, the ticket was duly honored at the theatre entrance. The card served both as an advertising stunt and for the purpose stated. The reduction in price granted was five cents for each admission.

“Huckleberry Finn” Dance Makes Hit in San Francisco

The exhibitors friend, the "tie-up," was put to a new use when "Huckleberry Finn" played the Imperial theatre, San Francisco. While the film was playing on Market street, a Frisco cafe boasting many pretty waitresses staged a "Huckleberry Finn" dance, of course after due permission by the exploitation man. On this page are shown the "female Hucks" who took part in the number.
Electricity and Art Aid

“Daughter of Two Worlds”

The last word in the creation of inexpensive atmosphere of the most enticing variety for the front of a theatre was seen recently by hundreds of Milwaukee picture fans, who, responding to the lure of electricity and art, flocked to the Alhambra to witness the showing of Norma Talmadge in “A Daughter of Two Worlds.”

The space above the great doors leading from the lobby into the foyer was occupied by a realistic painting of two classes of domiciles. On the one side was the home of wealth and luxury, a dignified residence with stately colonial pillars, surrounded by handsome grounds and noble trees. Just beside it was the picture of the star—laughing, happy, carefree.

On the other side was a reproduction of a tenement district, with tall, forlorn houses lining the alley and clothelines hung with nondescript garments, clipped from actual fabrics. Close by was another picture of the star, this time shown as the daughter of the tenements—sad, wan, hopeless.

The pictures were cut from 24 sheets. Each of the two Talmadge heads used measured some six feet in diameter and of course were lithographed. They were mounted on beaver board, one overlapping the other, while around the pair ran a rim of electric bulbs shooting off into arrows that pointed at the two homes.

Charles Brewster, electrical wizard of the Alhambra, made the lighting arrangement striking, the rims flashing alternately. The bulbs around the happy girl’s face were red and their rays glinted off the tip of the arrow that pointed to the rich home. Green lights circled the face of the unhappy woman, casting a sickly shade over the miniature tenement district.

“April Folly” Prelude Dainty

ONE of the most artistic prologues that has ever been given a feature on Broadway is provided at the Capitol theatre this week in connection with the showing of “April Folly,” with Marion Davies as the star. The prologue is to be especially commended, since it is very brief and leaves the audience longed for more. In fact, when all was witnessed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS critic the applause was insistent.

Because of the length of the performance, there is an intermission and promenade concert just after the main musical number, and then comes the comedy. Immediately at the conclusion of this the curtains part, showing a half circular window effect, one of the clever creations of John Wengert. Lighting effects with the colors blended bring out the figures inside of the restaurant in their gay costumes and their wild tribute to folly. A few bars of song are rendered and almost immediately the feature is projected on the screen. The whole thing occupies less than two minutes.

even greater heights and greater popularity in the year to come.

“Thus our special productions with our established stars as well as those we will make with all-star casts should possess the greatest box-office magnetism.

“In the making of our specials our studios in the east and west will be utilized. The western studios in Hollywood, California, will be in charge of Joseph W. Engel, as general manager. Our Sixty-first street studios in New York will be under the watchful eye of Maxwell Karger, who as director general will personally supervise all production at these studios.”

Goldman Stages Atmospheric Prologue for Nazimova Feature

Exploitation and presentation are receiving the undivided attention of the management and publicity of departments of King’s and Pershing’s theatres, St. Louis, these days.

During the recent engagement of Nazimova in “Stronger than Death,” William Goldman managing director of the theatres presented a very artistic atmospheric prologue. He engaged Miss Adele Kirkwood, a St. Louis girl, to dance in a scene which was an adaptation of Nazimova’s number on the temple steps in “Stronger than Death.” The setting and lighting effects were in keeping with the splendor of the scene in the picture.

Lang Believes in Personal Letter Idea

A. P. Lang, manager of the Temple theatre, in Pleasantville, Ohio, is a progressive showman whose original exploitation ideas contribute greatly to the success of his house. Mr. Lang is a firm believer in the efficacy of mailing campaigns to swell the lines at the box-office. He devotes considerable time and thought to the composition of the letters he sends to persons on his mailing list, and the result is that their cleverness attracts a great deal of attention.

Recently the Temple theatre showed “Fair and Warner,” starring May Allison, using this form of publicity. The result of the exploitation strengthened Mr. Lang’s belief that his plan is good. Later an equally clever letter was sent out for “Lombardi, Ltd.,” with equally satisfactory results.

Two Exceptional Displays For "Back to God's Country"

Perhaps no picture of recent release has had more good lobby decorations than "Back to God's Country." On this page are shown two displays for this feature.

Great Thought if You Can Locate a Real Vamp

A REAL live vamp, with eyebrows curved and otherwise vampishly constituted, her shirtwaist low and her French heels high, specializing in shaking a wicked hoof and manipulating a slippery orb, stimulated the heart-beats of young bloods of Fort Madison, Iowa, recently.

This "vamp" stimulated something else, and this "something else" was nothing more than the ticket-selling machine in the new Strand Theatre, of which James Boyle is manager.

When the great Day of Reckoning comes for those showmen who do and dare, Jimmie Boyle ought to find himself decorated with more citations than any of Broadway's kindly head waiters in the pre-prohibition days. And if there is any citation for which Jimmie is going to be given his just deserts, it is going to be for the courageous way he put through his original idea for the exploitation of "A Virtuous Vamp."

This campaign began when Mr. Boyle decided to bring the "Virtuous Vamp" to life. This was delicate business. The average girl does not mind vamping a little on her own hook, but she is pretty apt to kick when someone, even a hard-working exhibitor with a family, asks her to do so as a profession. But thanks to Miss Phyllis Lake, of Fort Madison, local vamp stock has attained a high place of eminence because it was through her efforts, which knew neither union hours nor maddening habits, that vamping became an art and not a dissipation.

Those exhibitors who want to adopt Mr. Boyle's idea will find it to their advantage to employ a girl who has stage ambitions. Miss Lake had 'em. The work Miss Lake did was as clever a bit of acting as has ever been seen on the Fort Madison stage. For instance, when Miss Lake put a red rose in her hair, penciled her eyebrows, applied the lip stick, donned a sky-blue satin skirt and an emerald green silk shirtwaist, and walked up the lobby of the New Strand, two show-clerks, the village wag, half a dozen actors and two policemen were immediately pleased. It took a young man, however, who just made his fortune in the Texas oil fields and who was in Fort Madison for a convention, to break down in tears of joy. He had thrown him a kiss before he had made his fortune, to make the first advance. Thinking himself clever, he began to whistle, "Nobody Knows and Nobody Seeks to Care."

"I do," said Miss Lake sweetly and nervously.

"Gosh," stuttered the youth, almost choking on a high frill.

"I am a 'Virtuous Vamp,'" said Miss Lake, loud enough for the collection of bright young men to hear her.

"Read it in every newspaper and magazine," someone wrote in the lobby the first time Miss Lake was there. "Tell them this is the girl who is about to become a "Virtuous Vamp,""

And while Miss Lake was doing her vampiest vamping the local newspaper was not neglected. Ads, press notices and sublet readers warning the public to beware of a "Virtuous Vamp" who looked like the first day of spring, and like her resemblance was turning young men's fantasies to thoughts of love. It was simply awful, the newspaper said. It seemed that a vamp epidemic had hit the town.

"Remember your mothers, wives and sweethearts," said the articles, "don't be fooled by a 'Virtuous Vamp.'"

And while the newspapers carried warnings, Miss Lake was exploiting the picture everywhere the street cars, automobiles and taxi-cabs would take her. One of her most popular stunts was dropping her handkerchief, her purse, her gloves, or her red rose in front of a group of either young or elderly men. The result was always the same. It looked like a stampede, and when the knight errant, who had probably suffered nothing worse than having his fingers or his favorite cigar crushed, picked up the naughty vamp's belongings, she would invite him to meet her in the Strand lobby on Thurs-tay night. What more incentive for the blight?

Miss Lake was an exceptionally fine dancer. Fort Madison is exceptionally fond of dancing. And it was at these dances that the alluring press agent of a "Virtuous Vamp" vamped everyone from the coat-check boy to the trap drummer. Age meant nothing to her as did nothing else. At the dances she attended she distributed neat little cards advising the showing of a "Virtuous Vamp."

The campaign climaxd on the opening day of the showing when Mr. Boyle used a full page newspaper ad to herald the first performance.

Local exhibitors estimate that Miss Lake only talked to 12,174 people. On Thursday night it seemed at least that number were trying to keep their appointments in the New Strand lobby.

And that was the way Jimmie Boyle put over "A Virtuous Vamp" in Fort Madison.

Results from Exploitation Costing Five Cents

Four cents spent in stamps and the cost of two letterheads and envelopes was the entire outfit made by Frank Holland, manager of the Murettc theatre in Richmond, Ind., in getting satisfactory exploitation results from "Soldiers of Fortune."

The place is a college town and Mr. Holland realized that most of the students in the colleges and high school of the country had read all of Richard Harding Davis's works, and that they were studied as models in modern writing.

He determined to let the students know that the picturization of one of the stories was to be shown at his theatre and decided that two letters would turn the trick as neatly as a large amount of money spent in various ways on handbilling newspaper and billboard advertising.

He wrote two carefully worded letters concerning the feature. One was sent to the principal of the Richmond High School and the other to the president of Earlham College in Richmond. In the letters he asked the school authorities to make an announcement that "Soldiers of Fortune" would be played at the Murettc, if they felt that the case warranted it.

The announcements were made and, according to Manager Holland, the results were very gratifying. The students at both the college and the high school made a special event of the showing and large blocks of seats were sold to them at every performance. The Murettc was crowded to capacity at every showing.
Lobby Display By Washington Theatre, Dallas, Texas

The electric sign as an advertising medium can be estimated in this cut of the front of the Washington theatre, Dallas, Texas. Also that even with such a giant sign as that which the Washington boasts, an enterprising showman like the manager of this house does not think it advisable to confine his lobby exploitation to this medium alone. Note the special display for “Smoldering Embers,” especially how a cut-out of Frank Keenan from a 24 sheet was utilized to great advantage.
Incorporates New Thoughts in Old Exploitation Idea

Ernest Stellings Pulls Beauty Contest That Has Lot of New Wrinkles

INCORPORATING the new ideas in an old exploitation stunt and varying it so as to get original results is the plan adopted by Ernest Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., in connection with his showings of "Erstwhile Susan."

He made arrangements with the Washington Herald, an afternoon newspaper having about 2,000 circulation, to cooperate in a beauty contest to select the young woman in the city bearing the closest resemblance to Miss Binney.

Despite the fact that the newspaper had no engraving plant to make cuts of the entrants' photographs, Mr. Stellings was not deterred. He announced that a season's pass to his theatre would be given to the young woman winning the contest, a pass of one month to the one bearing the next closest resemblance, and a week's pass to each of the next three.

A photographer was engaged to take the pictures of all entrants without charge to them. The photographer also mounted and framed the pictures without charge. This arrangement was possible for the reason that the photographer derived much valuable publicity from the stunt.

The campaign opened with publicity on the first page of the Herald, announcing the terms and specifying that it was necessary for each entrant to obtain a permit card from either the Herald or Manager Stellings before the photographer took the photographs. On the Sunday preceding the opening of "Erstwhile Susan" at the Grand, all of the photographs of the entrants were displayed prominently in the show window of one of the leading merchants in the town. Needless to say, that attracted much attention.

Now up to this point, it will be noted that the stunt followed stereotyped lines, but here Mr. Stellings injected some new life into the idea and the whole thing went over with a smash as a result.

On Monday, the judges of the contest went over the photographs carefully and picked Mrs. Claude Bennett as the winner. Then, Mr. Stellings got the merchants of the city to cooperate and Mrs. Bennett was asked to visit the principal stores where women's apparel was sold.

The different merchants selected a specialty which they christened "Erstwhile Susan." One displayed the "Erstwhile Susan Hat," another the "Erstwhile Susan Coat," another the "Erstwhile Susan Suit," and so on through a long list of articles.

These were put prominently on display in the store windows. Mrs. Bennett during the days of showing went about the streets of Washington shopping, wearing a number of different styles and combinations of various "Erstwhile Susan" clothes.

It was announced that a complimentary ticket to the Grand theatre would be handed to any person who spotted Washington's "Erstwhile Susan," on the street. This brought another big display on the front page of the newspaper. The persons recognizing Washington's "Erstwhile Susan" were instructed to say, "I know you, 'Erstwhile Susan.'"

Mrs. Bennett would thereupon hand the person a complimentary ticket to the performance. She was identified a number of times and Washington's 8,000 population had an exciting and busy time tracking down the young woman. The prizes were given away the day before the "Erstwhile Susan" opening. So effective was the campaign that Mr. Stellings hung up a new box office record for his theatre on the very first day the picture was shown.

Unquestionably, neither of the two old stunts of a beauty contest or the "spotting" contest would have produced this result. And yet tying them up together with the effective newspaper publicity tended to make a new appeal. But it was the tie-up with merchants on fashions that was added to this combination that brought the real punch. It gave an aspect to the old material that was entirely fresh and new, and appealed particularly to women.

And the fact is, as every exhibitor knows, that the matinees attended by women chiefly are the factor that mark a big success from ordinary business. Right there lies the secret of why Mr. Stellings set up a new house record.

Small Town Exhibitor With Big Town Ideas

J. D. Smith runs the Princess theatre in Rockford, Ohio, a town of 1,200, dogs and all, as Smith says. His theatre seats exactly 168 persons!

He booked "The Miracle Man" and having booked, decided to put it over city fashion. Here is how he did it:

He put out his paper—an unusual amount—and did all the orthodox advertising according to Hoyle. Then he went to the business men in his town with a subscription list for tickets and told each of them about the wonderful effect of bringing such a picture as "The Miracle Man" to Rockford.

He sold 150 tickets for each show each night, two shows a night! That left the Princess theatre box office 18 tickets to sell for each performance when playing date arrived. Mr. Smith didn't have to worry about the weather, the flu, or Lent. But filling his house was only one aim of this showman. He wanted to let everybody know he had a picture like "The Miracle Man." He wanted the prestige and the noise. He advertised on the front page of his papers and put up lithos on barns, chicken coops and fences, in all parts of the country near Rockford and surrounding towns.

"Everybody was talking 'big show,'" writes Mr. Smith. "Just to illustrate how important they thought 'The Miracle Man,' one old lady asked me: 'When that Miracle Man comes to town where will he stay?' There's not a hotel here and she wanted the honor of renting the Miracle Man a room!"

But, wait, Smith isn't done yet. You've heard exploitation men boast about putting over double-page spreads in big towns. How about a double-page spread in a town of 1200? Smith did it! He got out and sold the ads himself; wrote the copy for the merchants, read the proofs. All he failed to do was to deliver the papers!

Then he dressed the front of his house. Cut-outs and a 24-sheet banner turned the Princess into a bright spot of the town.

First National Officers Busy

CONSIDERATION of the details of the distributing arrangement sought by Associated Producers, popularly known as the "Big Six," decision on the date and place for the 1920 annual convention of First National members and exchange managers, a final survey of the percentage allotments determined by its Statistical Department and conferences in which several new producer offers were debated, were the important features of a special joint meeting of the Executive Committee and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held in New York on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

According to the announcement, there has been no formal action taken by the First National executives which in any way terminated the negotiations which have been in progress for weeks between the Associated Producers and the Circuit, or which the director members of the Big Six have had with other distributing organizations. Two meetings between members of the Executive Committee for First National, with its attorneys, A. L. and S. F. Jacobs, and Nathan Durkan and Nathan Vidaver, chief counsel for the Associated Producers, resulted in an exchange of terms and conditions favored by the exhibitor members of the Circuit and sought by the directors, but without any concluding action resulting, it is said.

Pending a definite settlement of releasing arrangements members of the "Big Six" are continuing their work on present contracts, or planning in advance production work to be included in the output through which distributing affiliation finally is made.

The annual convention of exhibitor members of First National, and the managers of the Circuit exchanges will be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 26, and continuing throughout the week. The convention will be the biggest of the annual affairs held by Circuit members since the organization of First National as an exhibitor cooperative body three years ago. As in 1919, it will be a joint meeting of the franchise owners and managers, but on this occasion, it is announced, many of the important exhibitors throughout the country will attend, in addition to the present members of the organization.

Coincident with the transaction of organization affairs by the members, the most important feature of the convention will be a complete explanation of all details of the new sub-franchising arrangement, which will become effective immediately after the convention. Present on the sessions devoted to the expansion method will be salesmen from every territory, the exchange managers, their respective exploitation managers, the total body of exhibitors, present members and future members by franchise, together with the executives for the various producing companies holding contracts for the release of their pictures through First National.

Exhibitor cooperation will be the keynote of convention it is said. Several new production proposals, fostered by important independent directors, stars and producers, which have been submitted to First National in the last four weeks, were discussed by the members of the Executive Committee, and will be made public at the convention, when they will be taken up for final action by the membership at large.

Two Interpretations of Sennett Comedy

The latest Mack Sennett five-reeler comedy, "Down on the Farm," admits of two interpretations, according to United Artists Corporation, who purchased the production. The story may be accepted as an authentic tale, or it may be enjoyed as a travesty on the melodrama that flourished years ago. It reveals the entire Sennett equipment at its best; chickens that never saw Broadway; cows of the "prop" variety; ducks, geese, turkeys and the rest of the feathered creatures of Mr. Sennett's farm, became, so to speak, the background for the romance of Louise Fazenda, the rustic cornfed beauty.

Robertson-Cole to Build Soon

To Have Own Home in Film Row; Work to Begin in April

To house adequately its rapidly increasing volume of business, and to throw open to the world a New York headquarters for visiting motion picture exhibitors, the Robertson-Cole Company, which has grown from a vigorous infant to one of the most robust forces in the film world in little more than a year, now makes the announcement that it will erect at once its own home. Work is to start during April on a ten-story entirely fireproof building which will be situated at 723 Seventh Avenue, in the heart of America's motion picture administration world.

The company has in mind besides a building to care for its swiftly-growing business, which includes distribution to the domestic and foreign fields, a place where all exhibitors of the world can gather when in New York—whether Robertson-Cole clients or not—and avail themselves of a quiet nook in the city's whirl where by stenographic service, a reference library and other conveniences will be given them absolutely free.

The new building, which will be erected of the best material available, is to be by, and for Robertson-Cole. The company has now cumbered with an old five-story building which is to be razed at once. Upon this site Robertson-Cole will build the new structure which will belong to it exclusively.

There will be no partnerships or associations. The building will be owned and operated by and entirely under the direct administration of Robertson-Cole at all times.

It will be a ten-story structure of brick and concrete, and fireproof throughout. The first two floors will be of Bedford stone. Above this will be face brick. This will be of ornamental glazed tile. The building will front on Seventh Avenue and will be in the shape of an "L", turning around into 48th Street, where it will also have frontage.

With a full set of passenger elevators and in addition to this will have one freight elevator which will be for the carrying of film exclusively.

On the second floor of the building will be situated the Robertson-Cole New York City exchange, which will cover the Metropolitan and surrounding territory with Robertson-Cole film service. The main Robertson-Cole offices will be on the four upper floors. Here will be situated the Robertson-Cole executive offices and offices of the foreign department, and the home office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, which will be members of the facility.

There will be two theatres on the roof. These will be utilized for the showing of films to press representatives, foreign buyers, and various persons interested in Robertson-Cole pictures. The best possible equipment will be installed in these theatres, including four standard machines. Two operators will constantly be on duty to project pictures. This will double the present facilities of Robertson-Cole for the screening of pictures.

As a most unusual feature of the twenty theatres, on the top floor of the building, there will be installed a suitable organ. This will enable the company to give free special exhibitions at various times to which guests will be invited, as well as to screen a picture with musical accompaniment so obtaining the exact effect of a regular theatre showing. Opportunity also will be given to all the men of the men who are concerned in making the full musical setting which goes with each Robertson-Cole picture.

Read's Agent to Make Wide Sales Tour

Sig Schlagel, general press representative for J. Parker Read, Jr., productions, left New York last week on a tour of thirty principal cities of the country as Read's special sales representative on a campaign of exploitation and investigation into selling conditions.

Schlagel has been in New York nearly six weeks with J. Parker Read, Jr., during the conferences of the Associated Producers. He broke away from the publicity Bennett as studio manager. The resignation of Whitman Bennett as production manager at Shorty Brown's Picture Corporation has been announced two weeks ago and is now pending.

Mr. Bennett is announced to have signed up Lionel Barrymore for a series of pictures and will enter the producing field for himself.

Notes of the New York F.I.L.M. Club

Mr. Norman Moray, having succeeded Mr. Fred Salinger as New York Branch Manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, attended last meeting, and his return was enthusiastically received.

The Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation was unanimously voted to membership. Manager Goldfarb presented the regular initiation ceremony.

Mr. Buxbaum, chairman of Jersey Sunday Opening Committee, reported that Passaic Law in Jersey was almost certain.

President Chadwick appointed a Committee of Six, headed by Mr. Robertson, to co-operate with a committee from New York Exhibitors League in raising funds for the benefit of Visiting Nurses.

Keefe Appointed Production Manager on Coast

Wm. E. Keefe has been engaged by the American Lifegraph Company which has studios and laboratories at Portland, Oregon, and he will serve as production manager. Keefe's initial work will be that of supervising the making of a series of two reel situation comedies based on a futuristic plot construction conceived by Keefe.

Bob Gray, formerly of Lasky who later directed Judge Brown's juvenile stories and Shorty Brown's pictures, will be in charge of the direction, and principals will be Parkes, Jones, Claire Morris and Eugene Gilbert.

Neilan Picture Makes $75,000 in a Week

What is thought by motion picture sales experts to be the record on the weekly gross business of a photoplay after the first runs have been made last week by Marshall Neilan's first independent production released through First National, "The River's End". In its fourth week after release date, contracts for the production were approved by the Marshall Neilan upon aggregating $75,000. This total sale for one week, it was pointed out at the Neilan offices in New York, is not the result of a concentrated sales drive for a given period to attain a record amount as is often done by companies desiring to make an exceptional showing, but comes as natural sales resulting from the exceptional business the photoplay is playing to wherever booked. W. O. Hurst Engaged by Whitman Bennett

W. O. Hurst, for the past year supervisor of production of fiction subjects for Famous Players-Lasky, tendered his resignation last week, effective March 27, to join the Picture Corporation as studio manager. The resignation of Whitman Bennett as production manager at Shorty Brown's Picture Corporation has been announced two weeks ago and is now pending.

Mr. Bennett is announced to have signed up Lionel Barrymore for a series of pictures and will enter the producing field for himself.

OLD LADY 31

by RACHEL CROTHERS

OLD LADY 31 — when produced by LEE KUGEL on Broadway, was one of the greatest theatrical successes New York ever saw. It ran for more than a year and later for long engagements in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago & other large cities.

It's heart-reaching story revolves about Angie Rose and her husband Abe. For fifty years they have lived and loved side by side. Then comes poverty & the prospect of separation — he to go to the poor house and she to the old women's home.

At the gate of the home for aged women Abe is invited to become an inmate. Labeled "Old Lady 31" — he is the sole male — he enters into the life of the institution.

Finally he can stand it no longer: "I dunnno whether I'm a woman or a man," he wails and runs away.

What happens after that makes this one of the quaintest and most tender stories ever screened.

Universal Contest Under Way

Exhibitors Suggest Names for Single-Reel Novelty

Motion Picture News. Upon these names devolves the task of ascertaining the most striking title subsequently, should two or more exhibitors suggest the winning name, each will receive an amount equal to the prize itself.

Universal Camera Correspondence, now operating in Europe and Asia Minor, have already obtained much excellent footage of strange and unusual nature. Among several of the subjects reduced are actual scenes showing the Dyak, head hunters of Bornéo on the war path and engaged in a foray against their enemies; actual pictures of the engagements between Chinese revolutionists, and African sacrifice dances taken on the upper reaches of the Congo, and strange rituals of the semi-civilized folk on the Mongolian frontier.

"In putting the production of this idea," said Mr. Hodes, "Carl Lenzulli, the head of our organization, told me to spare neither time nor expense to do the best I could in putting on the most exciting and surprising production which I could devise. In addition to all these, we have a little surprise up our sleeves, which will not need to be mentioned before the reel itself is ready for release. The latter feature alone will cause the new novelty reel to be booked on sight."

The prize contest was begun on Friday, March 26th. It closes at 12 o'clock on April 30th. There is only one restriction of any kind, and that is the name which contains the word "magazine" will be considered. Exhibitors are requested by Universal to forward their suggestions to Hal Hodes, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1100 Broadway, New York City, making sure that the names of their theatres and addresses are indicated clearly on their lists of title suggestions. No limit is placed on the number of names each contestant may submit.

Kane Pictures Have New Office in New York

The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation has moved to its new offices in the National Association Building at 25 West 43d street, New York. The lease to these quarters was signed several weeks ago, but delay in construction work on the new building prevented moving soon. The young corporation has had its temporary quarters in the Knox Building at Fourteenth street and Fifth avenue.

Producers Reach Coast After Four Weeks' Visit in East

Messrs. Ince and Read also expressed their appreciation of the hospitality they had enjoyed during the stop-over in Chicago. Series of the Windy City daily seen the delegates at the Hotel LaSalle and devoured much space in their respective columns to a resume of the current and coming movements of the Big Six.

Asked his opinion of trade conditions in New York and Chicago, Mr. Ince replied very emphatically that the forecast is unusually bright and replete with big opportunities for both the exhibitor and the producer.

"Our discussions with prominent exhibitors and leaders in the distributing field supported my own convictions that the industry faces a new era of progress and prosperity," Mr. Ince said.

"Generally speaking, the evidence was quite conclusive that the day of the author and the production or is at hand, and that the successful exhibitors now fully realize the necessity of big productions, big stories, big casts and faultless direction."

"Exhibitors are buying pictures on merit only. They have learned to distinguish the really fine, universally appealing production from the inferior film that gets over mainly by the device of exaggerated exploitation and advertising."

"One of the outstanding, and most pleasing, impressions of our visit in New York was the growing tendency of the exhibitor, the producer and the distributor to cooperate for the advancement and general welfare of the industry. It is evident that the industry appreciates the importance of unity in all things and I was altogether impressed by the willingness of exhibitors to lend their endorsement and wholehearted support to movements which are designed to further protect and advance the best interests of the trade."

Hampton Picks Winner in "Sagebrusher"

Benjamin B. Hampton showed good choice of screen material in his selection of Emerson Hough's "Sagebrusher" for production as a big Carl Laemmle feature. A year ago there were exhibitors who questioned both his judgment and knowledge in the picture, but his liberal scale multi-reel portrayals of so-called western stories. During the past few days the picture has been booked in Kenneth, Desoto, Noydena, Cal, Wilkinson, Del., and many other cities.
Walsh Picture Ready Soon

Producer Nears End of “The Deep Purple” for Mayflower Release

THE motion picture rights to “The Deep Purple,” the stage success by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Miner, have been purchased by R. A. Walsh and will be used by him as his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation under the recent affiliation. Work on the production has been virtually completed and it is booked for early release through Reahart.

“The Deep Purple” was one of the most successful plays of the late Paul Armstrong. It was originally produced by Liebler & Co., at the Lyric Theatre in Chicago, on October 3rd, 1910. After a three months' run there it moved to the Lyric Theatre in New York City, where it opened on January 9, 1911, and played for more than a year.

The play had a long career in road companies about the country and after nine years is still being played by stock companies. In the original cast of players were Emilie Corrigan, James A. Finney, Ada Dwyer, Catherine Calvert, wife of the playwright, Paul Armstrong, and Richard Bennett.

“In addition to being a proved stage success,” said Mr. Walsh in explaining his selection of the drama, “the play must be adaptable to the screen. All good stage material is not good screen material necessarily. Particularly is this true of stage farces and comedies. A good melodrama is good as a general rule, whether as a novel, play or playphoty. That’s an axiom of the trade.”

“The Deep Purple” is a clean, human and vital drama. Let that be known as the Walsh policy, and a rigid one — super-features which contain the heart punch minus morbidness. I am confident it is going to prove a popular policy with the exhibitors and am very happy that the recent affiliation with Mayflower will give it the enterprising promotion of the youthful, but energetic Reshart organization.”

Metro Changes Its Plans

Viola Dana Will Not Be Starred in “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath”

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it will picture the successful stage comedy, “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,” by C. W. Bell and Mark Swau, as a big special production with an all-star cast, instead of as at first planned, using it as a starring vehicle for Viola Dana. As two of the featured players in this de luxé special, officials at Metro’s west coast studios in Hollywood have engaged Ruth Stonehouse and Eugenie Pallette, both of them seen frequently in recent Metro productions.

Miss Stonehouse will play the leading feminine role of Polly Hathaway, a society reporter, in “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath.” She has just finished playing in “The Hope,” the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. It was with the old Essanay Company that Miss Stonehouse made her début in motion pictures. She has also played with Triangle, Lasky, Universal and other organizations. Before the inauguration of Metro’s “fewer and better” specials, Miss Stonehouse appeared in a Metro program picture as leading woman for Hale Hamilton.

Eugenie Pallette has had a long and varied career in the silent drama. He has appeared in a number of recent Metro productions, among them “Fair and Warner,” with May Allison, and “Alias Jimmy Valentine,” with Bert Lytell.

A. P. Younger prepared the scenario for “Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,” and Edward Dillon, a new acquisition to the Metro directorial forces, will direct the all-star production.

Laboratory Has New Vault

Rothacker Company Provides Safe For Negatives in Chicago Studio

A FIRE and bomb-proof vault is now ready at the Rothacker Chicago Studio-Laboratory to receive 60,000,000 feet of negative. Cinema engineers have said that hardly anything short of a direct hit by a 16-inch shell could touch a Rothacker client’s negative once it is inside that vault.

It is really five vaults, one within another. First is an outer wall of reinforced, waterproof concrete and brick, twenty-four inches thick. Within this vault, inside a 6 inch “air cushion,” is another vault of similar construction. And within this second vault are built five vaults sealed with automatically closing steel doors.

The “air cushion” between the outer and second vaults is for ventilation and insulation. It will aid in keeping the heat out in the summer and the cold in the winter, the same temperature is to be maintained inside the inner vault the year around. A specially designed brick ventilation shaft, which rises about fifteen feet above the remainder of the vault, will permit the free passage of air currents into and out of the inner vaults. Thus there will be no chance for the accumulation of film fumes.

There are no electric switches inside the film vaults. The film vault at the Rothacker plant, which is now being built in Los Angeles, will be patterned after this one. So will the vaults of the laboratories which are to be erected in New York and London.
Endorse J. D. Williams’ Stand

ADDITIONAL letters, endorsing the statements of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, apropos the alleged invasion of the exhibiting field by producer-distributor interests, have been received from various exhibitors, each one adding the quota of his own personal experiences to lend confirmation to Mr. Williams’ main contention. The pertinent paragraphs of three of the communications received are submitted in the following:

Martin Mcherry, manager of the Lincoln Way theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., writes:
"The automobile dealers of Gettysburg wouldn’t pay the exorbitant prices of the Atlantic Refining Company if they had any other place to buy their gasoline. We are in the same predicament. We wouldn’t pay the prices of these producer-distributor companies and submit to their terms if we had any other place to get good pictures."

"My remarks are promoted by a careful survey of the contents of articles written by Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, and J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit in last week’s Motion Picture News, calling upon all independent exhibitors to ‘wake or be annihilated.’"

"I cannot say too much against the present situation in the motion picture world. This tendency of producer-distributor companies to get a monopoly on everything is bound to prove ruinous. I agree with the statements of Mr. Williams in everything that applies to small towns. I am thoroughly awake to the situation but do not believe that any chain of motion picture houses owned and controlled by the producer-distributor companies can get a foothold in Gettysburg or other small towns in this immediate vicinity. The people know who has furnished them good pictures for many years and must see the situation through proper newspaper publicity."

Three More Letters Approve Tenor of Recent Remarks

In the cities, however, the matter is growing alarming.
"My present system the exhibitors are slaves to the will of the producer. They tell us what pictures to take and we even have trouble getting a transfer through at a late date. No better example of their tactics could be shown than that of an agent who came to my rival exhibitor here, offered him a recent big feature for $100 and then, after the contract had been signed, came to me and sold me the picture rights for $115. I did not know until some days later that a palace $15 had caused him to take that action. The first contract was then returned to my fellow exhibitor."

From William Dowling, Central Square Theatre, East Boston, Mass., comes the following:
"The mind of the independent exhibitor rightly is in a disturbed state these days. The claims, counter-charges, antics, warnings, pleadings and threats coming to him in varied shapes and guises form cause enough for this. Add to these the very timely warning to we independent exhibitors by Mr. J. D. Williams in the last issue of Motion Picture News. The exhibitor threatened with threats in the moving condition about him. He is told not to sell and he is coaxed to sell. Generally he is undecided whether he has not forfeited his right to live and possess because he owns a theatre. But if he is made of the stuff that makes life worth while he will run his business himself and operate with his own judgment, taking, as he hitherto has done, his losses with his gains, and use the brain God gave him to control his future movements."

"The invasion of the exhibiting field by producers cannot hurt produce in the sensible exhibitor’s mind a resentment that is as rebellions in spirit as ever a Bolshevist treasured. He feels that this present invasion of his rights as vendor of the producers’ products. Such competition as will result if allowed to grow unchecked is despotic and against all recognized rules of proper trade conditions. He is placed in a predicament against an insidious foe for his existence with the cards stacked against him. Of course, he is fighting to check this if he has any value at all.”

Eloyn Simons, manager of the North Family and Garden Theatres, Adrian, Mich., writes:
"There is no alternative for independent exhibitors but to view with apprehension the announced plans of large motion picture companies of invading the exhibition field and operating their own picture houses. Competition would be virtually impossible on the part of individual exhibitors if the move is carried out.

"Competition will be eliminated if they are to operate their own theatres. I feel that this is a separate field for producer, distributor and exhibitor and that neither should ever overlook this. We have seen what the lack of competition has accomplished as regards the exploitation of the theatre and I am sure the public would not welcome the dissipation of competition among the various parts of the motion picture industry."

Marion Davies Greeted by Capitol Audience

Such an enthusiastic reception as few celebrities have ever received was accorded Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan Productions' star, when she made a personal appearance last Sunday, March 20th, at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in connection with the premiere of her latest starring picture, "April Folly." Escortled by Robert W. Chambers, Messmore Kendall, president of the Capitol Theatre, and several other notable men and women, Miss Davies entered the huge auditorium during the showing of "April Folly" and sat in a box on the right-hand side. In the darkness she was not recognized, but when the feature was done and the lights came up the audience of approximately 3,500 persons greeted her with great applause. Nor would they be stilled until Miss Davies blushing and somewhat taken aback by the spontaneous outburst, stood up and bowed for fully a minute.

This was Miss Davies' first personal appearance in connection with any of her own productions. It was not intended as such, however, as Miss Davies had gone to the theatre as the guest of Mr. Chambers and Mr. Kendall only to witness the premiere of "April Folly." She was also her guest at dinner in the theatre's own restaurant.

Bessie Love Starts Work Has Begun on Her First Independent Production — "The Midlanders"

Following the announcement last week that the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., have formed a company to star Bessie Love in big story vehicles, with high class direction and production, comes the further news from Los Angeles that the star has already begun work on "The Midlanders" the widely-read novel from the pen of Charles Tenney Jackson.

Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park, each of them credited with the successful direction of such stars as Dorothy Phillips, Percy Madox, Dean, Susie Hayakawa, Dorothy Dalton, Lew Cody and others, have undertaken supervision of Miss Love in her first picture.

Calling for an initial outlay of thousands of dollars for picture rights to "The Midlanders" and for the services of the distinguished pair of directors, the Callaghan organization is fulfilling its intention, published last week, of placing this talented young actress in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever her undisputed dramatic ability.

"It will be evident at once to discerning exhibitors," said Mr. Callaghan in a statement from Los Angeles, "that the business man who is placing unlimited capital at the disposal of Miss Love and her directors have tremendous faith in her ability to do something for the screen that will surpass by far anything she has ever done previously. Our faith is being expressed in dollars and cents devoted to the purchase of the best directoral talent, the most suited vehicles adapted from first class novels and plays and the highest class production all around."

As our first step in this direction we have secured the picture rights to the famous American novel, "The Midlanders" by Charles Tenney Jackson. This dramatic narrative of pioneer society in the blooming and colorful Mississippi Valley is tense with action, and running through it is a human story of love that hurls the obstacles of the years and finds itself dramatically triumphant in the end. Miss Love has been dreaming of such an opportunity for years, to find herself in a character that requires the expression of every line of motion, a character with the depth of real life and place in a narrative alive with action."

Glaum Melodrama is Breaking Records

Exhibitor demand for Louise Glaum productions resulted last week in the signing by the W. W. Hodkinson managers of contracts in excess of five hundred bookings on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," all of these contracts being in cities of upwards of 50,000 population. This Louis Joseph Vance melodrama has attained a booking level in fourteen weeks seldom equaled by the pictures of most of the stars of the screen.

National Ass'n Gives Notice of Removal

Blanche Sweet Picture Due on Big Circuits

With practically every large theatre in the Metropolitain district under contract to show the latest Blanche Sweet production "The Deadlier Sex," and with the leading theatres throughout the country bidding for dates, the picture is destined to be the greatest success of Blanche Sweet's career, according to all reports received at Pathé Exchange. Many of the bookings were made on the reputation established by "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cossy," but hundreds of exhibitors have signed contracts after privately reviewing the latest picture, "The Deadlier Sex," it is stated.

All the Keith and Proctor houses will show the picture and the Fox and Loew houses have also contracted for it. In Connecticut it will be played at all the S. Z. Poli theatres.

Star is Signed for Pathe Serials

CHARLES HUTCHISON, the star whose performance in "The Great Gambler" and other productions won him his present reputation as one of the premier daredevils and stunt men of screen serials, has signed a contract to star in four serials for Pathe, it was announced by that company this week.

The contract becomes effective in April, and the first picture Hutchinson will do for Pathe under the new agreement is to be produced at the Robert Brunton studio in Los Angeles under the supervision of Robert Brunton. The scenario has been signed for the first picture but no information as to the author or of production plans were given, further than a statement by one of the officials of Pathe that a picture on the scale of "Daredevil Jack" as regards settings and details of production would be provided.

Mr. Hutchinson left New York, Tuesday, March 23rd for the Coast. He was accompanied by his wife and stated that he would make a stop-over in Pittsburgh to visit with his parents there. He will arrive in Los Angeles, according to present plans, in the middle of April and expects to find everything in readiness at the Brunton studio for him to commence work.

A Studio Secured by Bennett

W. H. BENNETT announces that he has leased the former Triangle Studio on Riverdale Avenue, Yonkers, New York, and that it is his intention to make this a permanent institution for the production of his special pictures to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The first series of these pictures, for which arrangements have been completed, will be four subjects in which Lionel Barrymore will appear as the star.

In order that the Barrymore productions may be made under the very best conditions, Mr. Bennett has completely refitted the studio, installing modern lighting apparatus and all known conveniences and helps for director and artist. The studio, which has hitherto been operated on alternating electric current, will hereafter be operated on direct current, for which purpose an elaborate motor generator has already been put into service.

The laboratory attached to the studio, has also been completely overhauled so that the negatives will be developed and the sample prints made in the premises from day to day while the pictures are in work.

Although Mr. Bennett made his arrangements with Mr. Barrymore only a month ago, work has progressed so rapidly that Mr. Barrymore will begin his first picture on Monday, April 12th. Although the pictures are to be made strictly under Mr. Bennett's direct supervision, it is to be noted that the attitude of the regular theatrical manager and is fortifying himself by employing known experts in every department.

The director for the first two Barrymore pictures will be Kenneth Webb, who has been favorably known in connection with the direction of Vitagraph and Famous Players, has scenes with both famous and rising stars. Mr. Webb is one of the younger generation of directors, but is a graduate of the company of experienced men and an acknowledged artistic talent of high order. His assistant will be his brother, Roy White, who has been associated with Kennells in many undertakings.

The head of the Technical Staff will be E. Worthman, formerly the head technical man in New York for the Goldwyn Film Company. The chief photographer will be Tom Grifith, who dates from old Biograph days and has been for some four or five years one of the main members of D. W. Griffith's photographic staff, and the art director will be Mes Pharllls Dodson, who has been for several years connected with the School of Interior Decorating at Columbia University and is noted for his knowledge of costumes as well as decorations. The Business Manager of the Studio will be O. H. Hurst, for several years the Manager of the Paramount Magazine.

It is Mr. Bennett's hope that he may have the famous Triangle Studio into a genuine craftsmen workshop. In addition to the studio and the production department, the premises include a large dwelling house formerly occupied by the famous actress, Clara Morris, and this house is being turned into a combination office and library.

Earle in Mayflower Film
Alaskan Picture, to Be Ready Soon, Shows Former Vitagraph Star

EDWARDE EARLE, who was starred by Vitagraph in the O. Henry series and other important productions, has the leading male role of Morgan Kneath in Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon," presented by Midland Photo Play Corporation.

The picture is now being cut and assembled by Director Miller in New York City after completion of the camera work during the winter at Port Henry, N. Y. The story is based on Robert W. Service's poem, "The Law of the Yukon," and Director Miller promises something new and entirely different from anything presented on the screen before of Yukon life.

In addition to Earle, the leading roles are filled by June Eldridge, Nancy Deaves, a newcomer to the American screen; Joe Nash, Warburton Gamble, Thomas O'Malley, Bigelow Cooper, Joseph Smiley and John Dillon.

According to the policy followed in Mayflower features, no player is to be starred in the cast, but each one will be featured in accordance with the importance in the action. This principle existing has been found to produce more balanced results and to accentuate the action and the production.

Edward Earl, according to Mr. Miller, was peculiarly suited to the role of Morgan Kneath, the man from outside in the story, who comes to Gold City to establish a local newspaper and bring with him the more civilized standards of life.

The picture is being backed by Realart Pictures Corporation, and, although no release date has been set for it as yet, it is expected that prints will be ready for exhibitors silents within a month's time.

Coast Missions as Locales
Seen in Vehicle of Clar. Young, Who Heads Restoration Campaign

CLAARA KIMBALL YOUNG, who has been selected to head the Restoration Committee in California, is to make a great campaign to restore its famous old missions, it is announced.

This movement was officially launched at a meeting between the San Francisco Missions Restoration Committee and the Spanish Missions Association, held at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, March 31. On that occasion, Clara Kimball Young was the guest of honor and delivered an address on the subject of "The Old Missions." The chairman of the day was Archbishop Hanna.

The missions of Southern California are, perhaps, the most romantic edifices in the world. They tell of the story of nomad wanderings of groups of holy men, beyond the conquest of ignorance and unreligion. They tell of strife, of struggle, of some patience and charity, of vigorous campaigns against superstitions Indians, treacherous bears, a strange land and strange people, all combined through scintillant hearts. And the edifices—majestic, powerfully built, picturesque and at once dignified and beautiful—are admirably to the picturization of Sarah Ellis Ryan's story, "For the Sake of Raphael," which Clara Kimball Young and her producer, Harry Carson, decided to use as material and apoprops backgrounds for one of the most interesting and impassioned stories yet sentenced.

Every important mission, from Los Angeles to the south, to Mount Shasta in the north, has been utilized as locale for the attractive stories, it is stated. "For the Sake of Raphael" was written in the little village of San Juan Capistrano, and to secure atmosphere, Sarah Ellis Ryan, the author, was permitted to live in the San Juan Capistrano Mission, which she occupied for a period of many months, during which time the book was written.

David Butler to Star in Own Productions

It has been announced in Los Angeles that David Butler, who has appeared as co-star in numerous featured productions, will hereafter be starred in his own productions in which he is financially interested. His first picture, which has already been completed and will be shown in New York shortly, is by the direction of a recent story published in the Saturday Evening Post. The leading part is said to suit his capabilities better than anything he has ever appeared in and one that he himself selected from many stories that were available. Mr. Butler has had a world of experience and has certainly created a great following by having done consistently good work.
Screen to Be Poet’s Vehicle

Picturization of Clyde Fitch Tale Under Way

Picturization of Clyde Fitch’s masterpiece “The Truth” is now under way. The Goldwyn company, which recently purchased the screen rights to the famous play, has begun work on the new production in its eastern studios on east 48th Street. Midge Kennedy will play Becky Warder, whose penchant for little lies led to the brink of a ghastly tragedy; and of the rest, which consists of three persons, includes Zelda Sears, who will portray Generie Gergorg, and the same part which she took in the original Broadway production of “The Truth,” whom Clara Bow will play. Clarence Badger has been assigned especially to direct the picture.

“Jiggs” Make His New York Screen Debut

“Breaking Into Society,” the first comedy of the famous “Bringing Up Father” series, released by International Film, has been brought to Pathe, was booked by the Strand Theatre, and the New York debut of Johnny Ray on the screen as “Mr. Jiggs” and Margaret Fitzroy as “Mrs. Jiggs” has been staged at that theatre. The booking of the comedies is in keeping with the well-established policy of the management in seeking clean, lively comedies for the theatre’s patronage and in this case the added advantage of having Mr. Jiggs in his first New York appearance is secured. The first comedy has been played for the entire current week, commencing March 28th.

“Velvet Fingers” to be New Path Release

“Velvet Fingers” is announced as the title under which Pathe will release the serial which George B. Seitz is now producing at his studios in New York. “Velvet Fingers” is an original story by Bertram Millhauser. The continuity was written by James Shelly Flannan. Sig. Schaefer and Marguerite Courtay play the leading roles.

“Sex” Released on April 11th

THE week of April 11th will establish a record for J. Parker Read, Jr., as a producer of motion pictures. This record has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Louise Glauin’s newest production, “Sex,” by C. Gordon Sullivan. April 11th is the official release date of “Sex” and for that week all first week stand-first run theatres will play “Sex” as the most widely exploited attraction they have offered their public in the past year.

In two weeks of selling since the prints of “Sex” reached the homes of the Hodkinson managers they have held the time through the desire of exhibitors for what the trade generally recognizes as one of the exceptional pictures of the past few years.

To W. C. Dineen, general manager of the Harry Moir chain of downtown first run theatres in Chicago, goes the credit for the handling of the results factor in America’s largest playing contract for “Sex.” He will open this production for a two weeks’ engagement pictures. The picture, which uses Mr. Dineen, through his advertising manager, has bought four times the larger space than he has ever used before on any picture of his, and the same hath been done by other special representatives west of the river.

Isaac Wolper, President of the Mayflower Corp, predicts that Poetry Is to Be Source of New Film Themes.

Plot is nothing more than a method of story telling. Poetry gives us something finer and deeper. It is not a thing, it is an idea—a beautiful thought.

“And it is ideas that pictures need most. Ideas will lift a picture far above the commonplace level. Analyze one of the greatest pictures ever produced, ‘The Miracle Man.’ Why is it that the public response to it is eager and spontaneous? The crux of reason is expressed in one word. ‘Idea.’ The pictures of crude ideas of life beautifully expressed.

Poetry projects only fundamental ideas and emotions of life. Through the universal language of the screen these fundamentals can be understood and appreciated by all classes of people.

“The time is not far distant when producers will recognize this fact and the screen in common with the original screen story will provide more screen themes that stage plays have.”

By using the basic ideas of celebrated poems, and interpreting them by means of logical, well-knit, dramatic situations, Mr. Wolper believes that producers can achieve a two-fold purpose. They can deliver poetry to the screen so as to meet requirements and can offer to the public a finer and more meaningful type of production.

That the potentialities of great faith in the adaptability to pictures of poetic themes is indicated by the fact that the Charles Miller’s initial production to be presented by Mayflower. Around the spirit and ideas conveyed by the Service poem, Director Miller has woven a story of great dramatic force and human appeal.

William Fox, leading man opposite Gladys Brockwell, who has signed a long-term contract under the Fox banner
Unprecedented Demand for Beach Picture

Reports from the Goldwyn branch offices show what is called an unprecedented demand for Rex Beach's next Goldwyn picture, "The Silver Horde." The western division under A. S. Aronson leads the field with interest running strongest in San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles, Denver and Salt Lake City. J. A. Koerpel, the Goldwyn manager at Seattle, claims that his section is the greatest West Coast territory in the country. Extra prints of "The Silver Horde" are being made to meet the demand.

"For ten years" says Goldwyn Pictures, "exhibitors and their public have been looking forward to the film production of "The Silver Horde." It is released now as a special Goldwyn production and Rex Beach's masterpiece."

Educational to Release New 'Intimate Reel'

Homes, happiness and domesticity form the ingredients of the Photoplay Magazine, Screen Supplement which will be released by Educational Films Corporation. The series is designed to show the stars "at work and at play." We see Taylor Holmes, who illustrates the various methods of love-making. Alan Dwan and James Kirkwood are seen dosing away a Sunday afternoon at the former's home, and Helen Chadwick also proves that she is a home lover. The final chapter shows Sessue Hayakawa bidding friend and wife good-bye as he hastens off for his studio.

Unusual Theme Presented

American Film Production Treats of "Blood Coin"; Strong Cast Seen

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER," a picturization of Albert Payson Terhune's story, is the latest offering of the American Film Company, Inc. The story centers around the last and supposedly extant one of the silver pieces, which were presented to Judas Iscariot for the betrayal of Christ. The time is the present and the locale is the City of New York. The characters are taken from the fashionable set of the Metropolis, and the leading male role, played by King Baggot, presents Tyler Cole, a collector of rare coins and the owner of the historic shackle. And so the young husband, Tyler Cole (King Baggot), in the "Flying A" special, forbids his beautiful bride, a la Bluebeard, to open the cabinet in which his precious shackle reposits. His over-anxiety is due to the fact that he has lost the true and original coin, and to retain his position of prominence among numismatists, he replaced it by a counterfeit. Now to forbid an American wife to do anything she may choose to do, is dangerous, as Cole learned later.

Mystery and humor find ample and appropriate places in the unfolding of the plot, when the jealous young bride takes her troubles to a crystal gazer. The beauty of the interiors, excellent photography enhance the pleasure the spectator experiences throughout the picture. A small cast admirably adapted to portray Albert Payson Terhune's characters, include: Margaret Fisher, King Baggot, Lilian Leighton and Forrest Stanley.

Bookings Follow Showings

Screenings of "King Spruce" by Hodkinson Brings Good Results

TELEGRA PHIC requests from fourteen Hodkinson exchanges urging immediate shipment of accessories on "King Spruce," starring Mitchell Lewis, from Holman Day's famous story of the Maine forest, speak volumes for the results obtained from the simultaneous trade showings of the production held by all Hodkinson managers last week. Already five contracts for pre-release engagements in the larger cities are awaiting approval at the home office.

"King Spruce" is a gripping, human drama that the producers believe is certain to hold the interest of its audiences by its stirring heart appeal, rather than by a series of thrills injected to excite the nerves of audiences. But many a scene in this W. W. Hodkinson release, nevertheless, raises a supreme thrill of sheer excitement.

Chief among these is a spectacular forest fire said to be one of the most gigantic incidents of its kind ever enacted for the screen. Another thrilling incident in "King Spruce" is the blowing up of a river dam which was a straight feat of engineering and motion picture generalship on the part of Director Clements.

Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" shatters another record

EVERY Exhibitor in the world understands the language of the Box Office. When unusual results are achieved, no further eulogy is required, for none is necessary. We present herewith a telegram received from Mr. George Smith, Manager of THE PLAYHOUSE on Michigan Avenue in Chicago. It tells in showman's language what "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" accomplished at that House, and constitutes but one example of the wires Equity is receiving from all over the country telling of similar sensational box office results.

AEOLIAN HALL - NEW YORK
Co-operation Urged by Berst

"T"wenty-eighth century efficiency is summed up in the word 'co-operators.' This is the axiom laid down by J. A. Berst, president of United Pictures Theatres, Inc.

"This is the lesson taught us by the world-wide war," said Mr. Berst. "Co-operation has come to be recognized as the all-important factor in any great industry. It is a question of helping one another for our own common good.

"As a result, the exhibitor is hampered down to the fact that if you don't get together with your brothers in your industry, no matter what that industry may be, success will be without you. That is the secret of success among the exhibitors. That is the secret of success which the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is striving for.

"The exhibitor is in a peculiar consumer position. He is the owner of his theatre today, but tomorrow that plays may not be there. There are two important factors that determine his success or failure - showmanship and the quality of the pictures he runs.

"The exhibitor's problem is this: 'How can I be assured of a steady supply of good pictures?'

"He knows full well that he cannot count on any producing organization which goes like a wolf in the night unless his film rentals will not only support his business but also enable him to enjoy a decent life. It can't shake its branch and butter out of his mouth at the same time. It is either for you or against you. And you know it for yourself.

"It is the realization of this fact which forced a number of first-class exhibitors to band together in the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. It was up to them to protect their theatres by creating an organization by which they could not only safeguard their supply of pictures but to get them at a fair rental rate. The association was formed to run their business profitably.

"United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., owns a one-third interest in the United Picture Productions Corporation. The money which the exhibitors pay for their United Pictures thereby gives them a part ownership and a part control of United Pictures Productions Corporation. The United Picture Productions Corporation has, through its purchase of the Triangle exchange, now established itself as a distributing machine equal to any in the industry. Twenty-four exchanges are in operation, and each now furnishes a screening of the most popular pictures at a price that is a minimum of the cost of any others in its class. United now controls the famous Griffith and Ince productions starring William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, the Gish Sisters, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Claram, Charles Ray, Olive Thomas, Taylor Holmes, Bessie Love, Mae Marsh, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Warner and the famous Mack Sennett comedies.

"Under the United plan, we have cooperative buying. The exhibitors of America are now able to get not only the best pictures due to the force of their buying power, but exhibitors will be able to get these pictures at a fair rate of rental. For these pictures are being rented to themselves by themselves. The money that they take out of their right pockets they put into their left.

"United is the franchise holders' organization. Every move for the betterment of United means a direct benefit for exhibitors who are sensible enough to see the handwriting on the wall. When United took over the Triangle and Lynch exchanges, it meant that the exhibitors who are franchise holders now are assured of an efficient distribution.

"In United means that the exhibitor is his own boss. It means that he owns his theatre in every sense of the word. It means that he can run his own theatre in his own way. He can show any picture he pleases. It means that he can wear what he pleases and he can eat what he pleases. It means that he is free and not a slave."

Showman Suggests New Name for Realart

J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Strand Theatre of Robinson, Ill., affiliated with the Roscoe Cohan Amusement, suggests that "Real Service" be added to the trade-mark name of Realart Pictures Corporation.

His suggestion is based on what he terms unusual service from Realart's St. Louis office, of which Floyd Lewis is manager. Mr. Hewitt commented: "I think 'Real Service' is a much better name for the Realart office, with Floyd Lewis in charge. Floyd is an old friend of mine who has always been fair and courteous. He has always been willing to help me in any way he could."

Shorty Hamilton Leads Fast Two-Reelers

Mr. B. H. Mills, of the Elko Photo Plays, Inc., reports that business on the series of 15 two-reelers, featuring Shorty Hamilton, is heavy. Mr. Mills also reports that extra prints have been ordered. Mr. Mills says: "I believe this enormous increase in bookings is due to the fact that Shorty Hamilton is appearing in person with the splendid two-reelers. As Shorty leaves shortly for the Coast, I would advise all exhibitors who have not as yet taken advantage of this magnetic money-getter, to get busy and do so at once."

Noel Smith to Direct New Rainbow Comedy

Noel Smith has been engaged to direct "A Temperamental Artist," a new two reel Rainbow comedy which will be released Oct. 21. Mr. Smith is well known in the farce comedy field. The cast will be announced later.

Two other Rainbow Comedy companies are at work on their current productions. William H. Watson is directing "The Right of Way," and J. A. Howe is directing "Who Is Which and Why?" a mystery melange.

Educational Has Volcano Films

E. L. HAMMONS, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, this week announces the signing of a contract with Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, of Washington, D. C., which will bring to Educational the motion pictures made by the expeditions sent by the society to investigate the eruptions of Mount Katmai, in Alaska.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" is probably the most important of the releases, although the same subject has been covered by some punch title writer, it is the official name given to the region by the society's investigators to the scene of probably the most violent eruption in the world's history. Another picture deals more specifically with the activity of Mr. Katmai itself.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" shows the unique phenomenon resulting from the eruption. The expedition headed by Prof. Robert L. Griggs found in a valley near the mountain more than a thousand openings emitting columns of smoke 500 feet in height together with a number of smaller ones. Three different expeditions were sent out by the National Geographic Society to make the investigations and obtain the pictures, which have been viewed only by small groups of scientists.

Several articles have been published by the National Geographic Society about these investigations and in a recent contest among the 75,000 readers, "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" was voted the most popular article that has appeared. New delights are promised by the pictures with the combination of the "smokes," the glaciers and the snows, contrasted with the boiling crater and black of lava. So startling were the discoveries that the society has just put through a movement for the conversion of the scene of the disaster into a national park.

Goldwyn Buys Irvin Cobb Play

In line with its announced policy of securing the work of the most popular writers of the day, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just purchased the screen rights to Irvin S. Cobb's "Boys Will Be Boys," which was adapted for the stage by Charles O'Brien Kennedy and presented by Joseph Hart at the Belvoir Theatre, New York, October 13, 1919.

The picture possibilities of this story, which is rich in characterization and human interest, are particularly good. It will be handled with a view to bringing out the full humor of Irvin Cobb. As the deal for the rights to the play was only closed a few days ago, the Goldwyn executives have not yet had an opportunity to decide upon the details of production. It is probable that within the next week an announcement will be forthcoming relative to the players selected for the leading roles.

Particular interest will center in the choice of an actor for the role of Peep O'Day, the delightful character that was portrayed on the stage with such conspicuous success by Harry Heresford. The story, with its rural background and truth to life in characterization and incident, affords other excellent opportunities for telling performances, but the central figure in the story, as in the play, is bound to be Peep O'Day.

It is doubtful if there are many authors in the country who have as large a following as Irvin Cobb. His stories are eagerly awaited by thousands of readers, and there is expected to be a great audience for any work that carries his name. The Goldwyn purchase is expected to profit by the interest first aroused by "Boys Will Be Boys" in story form and later by the stage version prepared by Charles O'Brien Kennedy.

Fifty Wires Received by Pathe Boost Star's Last Two Reeler

H. E. ROACH, president of the Roan Film Company, which produces the Harold Lloyd two reel comedies for Pathe distribution, last week dispatched the following wire to Paul Bruet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.: "Have received fifty wires from exhibitors commending last Lloyd, 'Haunted Spooks.' Jack Eaton of N. Y. Strand says it's the best comedy he has played this year. All agree it is Lloyd's best. Wait until you see the next one. It's a sure knockout.

With the sixth, the last of the first series of Lloyd two reeler about ready for distribution, both Mr. Roach and Pathe feel that every promise they made regarding the multiple reel comedies has been fulfilled. In recently discussing the success of the Lloyds with a representative of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the West Coast, Mr. Roach said: "When we first decided to take Lloyd out of the one reel class, and star him in two reel features, we felt we were making an experiment, yet we were perfectly confident of success. We know Harold was in a class by himself when it came to portraying the kind of comedy he excels in the screen. But above everything, we had every resource and facility for making the finest type of comedy. We had unlimited financial support, and one of the best equipped studios in the United States to work with. "Our last series of comedies will be concluded with the next release, which will soon be in Pathe's hands, and which I feel will evoke even more praise than 'Haunted Spooks.' We have set a standard of excellence with this latter production that we will have to maintain. We are not only prepared to maintain it, however, but even to raise it to a higher level, if it is possible."

Ulrich, editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's press books, in which he gives the highest praise to the work of Mr. Ulrich and his assistants. "If I were editor of the Paramount Press Books," writes Mr. Schneider, "I would make very few changes in the policy which seems to govern your books. "The stories are well written and informative and it is quite often possible for us to use much of the material in precisely the form in which it comes to us. To Enlarge Publicity Forces

Robertson-Cole Plans Effective Organization for U. S.

The Robertson-Cole Company has standard the organization of a publicity and exploitation force that will be the powerful the American branch of the company. The Robertson-Cole branch has been established to have a trained publicity, advertising and exploitation force that will carry out a careful and judicious campaign of promotion, so planned that the entire force will be directed toward the attention of the public.

To accomplish perfect harmony of action "a manual of instruction and duties" has been prepared, distinctly states what each and every member of the exploitation organization is expected to do. This manual covers every step to be taken, from the time the pictures are received from the producers till the day of the show, the maximum of attendance in the theaters.

Initiation and organization will not be carried out in any direction, but the entire Publicity Department will work like a perfectly assembled machine. Plans have been made so that within the advertising department, plans can be carried out simultaneously in every section of the country without any lost motion and the utmost efficiency attained in both advertising and the Robertson-Cole Company.

Each branch publicity man will be a "service man" in the fullest sense of the term. He will be the realization of the service and promotion principles that the Robertson-Cole organization has taught its customers. The promise of assistance made by the sales force will be real, not just a formality, and the exploitation man will be trained to carry out the promise with intelligence and vigor.

One of the outstanding features of the Robertson-Cole exploitation force will be the establishment of the merchandising side of each feature. The old system of playing "hookum" will be eliminated and the commercial attractiveness of each picture will be exploited, in the same manner that the distinctive features and standards of merchandise are played by the big sound commercial institutions.

For that reason, one of the main qualifications demanded of their branch publicity man, is advertising experience. Men who have been trained in the merchandising field and have been taught to clearly discern the commercial advantages of all articles that come under their attention and know how to put forward these qualities in an interesting manner.

As an indication of the caliber of the men that will be employed as branch publicity directors, the following is reprinted from a letter written by Mr. A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager of the National American Distribution Corporation, specifying qualifications demanded of the men to be employed.

"The public will be given to men who have had experience both as reporters and advertising writers. On many papers there are men who handle the combination job of editor of certain departments and secretary of the advertising of the same class. These men make ideal publicity men for the exploitation of motion pictures. They know news values and are capable of exploitation.

"Live wires of this organization are to be found particularly in the automobile departments and the trade articles of the various newspapers.

"A manual will be furnished each publicity man that will thoroughly instruct him in the duties it is to perform. He need know nothing of the technique of the motion picture business, but merely know is how to write a news story."

Eighteen Authors on List

Benj. B. Hampton Controls Rights to Wide Range of Literary Works

Benjamin B. Hampton, who is making special photo- graphy productions of the works of a group of America's most famous novelists and authors, has placed himself on his list and controls film rights of their works, written or yet to be written, but which have not yet been filmed. This gives Mr. Hampton the range of selection to be had in a list of 254 novels and 681 short stories. From this wealth of material the books most popular and best fitted to screen presentation by Mr. Hampton's unique method of production, will be selected for filming in the near future.

Six pictures have been filmed to date, "The Westerner," and "Desert Gold," from the lists of Zane Grey and Stewart Edward White respectively, have been showing for some time and proved immensely popular. Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher," has just been released in the large western cities, "The Desert of Wheat," and "The U. P. Trail," by Zane Grey, and "The Dwelling Place of Light," by Winston Churchill have not been released in the East. An Uptown Studio, a company formed by two experienced producers, is probably the next in the order of production.

Mr. Hampton's policy of playing each character of the story to its full value and having no featured star, but instead using star players in all roles, will be continued as in his productions already filmed. The authors co-operate, and sign contracts after its completion to indicate personal endorsement of the photoplay. Hugh Ryan Conway, who directed "The Dwelling Place of Light," commissioned "The Desert of Wheat," for Mr. Hampton, will direct forthcoming pictures.

"Hunting Trouble" Is Warwick's Next

After considerable debate, "Hunting Trouble" has been chosen for the title of the latest Robert War- rick picture for Paramount Art- craft.

Prepare for Record Output

Vitagraph President Is in Los Angeles to Plan Year's Schedule

AUBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, is in Los Angeles from New York to ar- range for the greatest year's output in the history of his organization. He will spend several weeks at the studio in Hollywood, preparing to concentrate the bulk of his motion picture production in Los Angeles and in planning the year's schedule with W. S. Smith, general manager of the Western studios.

Mr. Smith expects 1920 to create a record for the industry, and has indicated his faith in his own production by expanding his Hollywood Studio grounds by ten acres and increasing activities there to ten units. Vitagraph now has twenty-six sound stages in Hollywood. Its original site of ten acres has been utilized to capacity with stages, permanent sets, laboratories and offices. The additional ten acres will be occupied by more stages and permanent sets, and Mr. Smith will approve the plans for those during his stay in the West.

With two special features and three serials included in the ten units at the studio, the magnitude of the production schedule has assumed unusual proportions. In addition there is constantly a regular star feature at work as well as a Larry Scowen production under way and three separate Big "V" comedy companies working high speed.

In addition to production, Vitag- raph has been guided purely by the demands of its exchanges, and is making pictures to meet the market, years.

"The Orphan" Completed

William Farnum Finishes Work on New Western; J. Edwards Directs

WILLIAM Farnum, under di- rection of J. Gordon Ed- wards, has completed the first of his Fox productions to be made since his arrival on the Pacific Coast. "The Orphan," written by Berenice E. Mullford, is the basis of the picture. The author's name was built originally upon the series of "Bar-20 Ranch" stories, in which that lovable character, Hop- pong Cassidy, appeared. In "The Orphan," the author's name has been hooked upon an outline by J. Gordon Edwards. A baroness, a thousand dollars, a gar- den of flowers, and a batch of Russian whores will make up the cast of the picture.

Ludlow Lovejoy has returned to the Fox fold to play opposite William Farnum in this, his first Western for the season of 1920. Miss Lovejoy plays the part of Helen Shields, sister of the sheriff and the cause of all the fun and trouble in the story.
Cody Exploitation Planned
Robertson-Cole Tells of Advertising Arranged

FULL advantage has been taken of the remarkable exploitation possibilities of the Lew Cody Special, "The Butterfly Man," in the unusual advertising campaign which Robertson-Cole has planned for this picture. "The Butterfly Man," which was produced by L. J. Gasnier, with Ida May Parks as director, is expected to surpass the popularity of "The Beloved Cheater," which was the first of the new series of Cody productions being made for Robertson-Cole.

Great play will be made on the popularity of the author, George Barr McCutcheon, whose romantic stories of society life have millions of readers. Mr. McCutcheon is one of the best American writers of the "Four Hundred," and he filled "The Butterfly Man" with types easily recognized, and bound to have a broad appeal because of their humanity. He also sketched a series of bewitching pictures of homes and resorts of the rich which terminated the director's opportunity to place upon the screen some of the finest "high life" backgrounds ever seen.

Hollywood managers are instructed on the use of throwaways and letters, and there is an attractive layout of large size display ads. Thus a page is devoted to what the critics say about Lew Cody. A full-page art layout of the supporting cast follows. There is also a novel tie-up with stores handling clocks, worked around a catch line in which Lew Cody says, "The right time to love is all the time." Another tie-up is suggested with stores which handle women's wearing apparel. One page is devoted to the life of George Barr McCutcheon, and another to decorating the lobby.

One-Reel Comedy Listed
Goldwyn-Bray Comedy-Reel to Be Issued Weekly, Opening April 18

THE Goldwyn Company announces a new release, the Goldwyn-Bray Comedy, a single reel subject that will be distributed weekly, beginning April 18th. It will be prepared at the Bray Studios, as is the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, also a single reel which is firmly established as one of the most popular releases on the market. The Comic will be in no way encroached upon the specific field of the Pictograph.

The new issue is a split-reel presenting a comedy cartoon in the first half and what are termed "lampoons" in the second. In material and treatment, it will be unlike anything heretofore presented on the screens, combining the services of the foremost cartoonists and humorists of the country, it is stated.

During the first half of the film, the motion picture public will re-nov old friendships. Happy Hooligan, the Shamanic Kids with the Captain and the Inspector, also Judge Remsen and his pal, Silk Hat Harry, will again make their appearance on the screen.

The cartoons, produced by the International Film Service, for the Bray Pictures Corporation, are the result of the combined efforts of Gregory LaCava, John Foster, Vernon Stallings and of Max Fleischer of "Out of the Inkwell" fame. The brief stories in which these characters figure contain many surprises of plot and effect.

The "Lampoons," comprising the last half of the release, present jobs at the follies and foibles of everyday day sayings, together with the best jokes of the week selected from the press of the world.

merman has recently addressed the league on several occasions and his suggestions and advice have been heartily endorsed by the members.

Fairbanks Finishing Film

Star Rushes Final Touches on His Next United Artists' Production

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, who was slightly delayed some weeks ago because of breaking his finger during the filming of his next United Artists' production, "Mollyoddle," is now speeding up the finishing touches of this picture, having returned to his studio at Hollywood after spending many weeks with the Hopi Indians, where many of the exceptional shots were made.

Upon his return to California, he sent the Indians several reels of motion pictures, among which were some of the scenes which were taken in their natural habitat. Accompanying the films were a sketch, a projection machine and an electric lamp, all necessary electrical equipment for operating same.

When the pictures were shown it was the first opportunity the Hopi Indians had ever had of seeing themselves on the screen and with some of the moving figures on the silver sheet. And recent died, the red skins were sure that the ghosts of yesterday had arisen and were parading in some mysterious fashion.

On the occasion of showing the pictures to the Indians, they were called together and everything was set for a pleasant time. After a short while the projection machine began to click and the Indian figures in fantastic dances began to sway and move across the screen. All of sudden there was a buzz of excitement throughout the audience. Then there was a mysterious noise that came from the rear and an old red skin hurriedly left the ghostly spectacle. The excitement grew and later it was learned by the leader of the red skins explained "Heap like picture show, but they keep big ghosts."

United Will Invade Market

Directors Decide to Have Franchise Holders Pay for Pictures

ONE of the most important matters acted upon and decided at the recent meetings of directors of the United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., at Chicago, was the action taken as regards the production and buying of feature pictures.

Because of the decision to go ahead with production and the fact that many pictures are to be purchased in the open market, the directors realized that ample funds should be available for this purpose. For this reason, the decision to have every franchise holder pay for at least three pictures in advance was put into effect.

Following the lead of many of the directors themselves who have paid for as many as ten pictures in advance, United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., franchise holders from territories all over the country, have been most hearty in their response to the action by the Board of Directors. During the past week it has developed that not only directors, but many franchise holders as well, are paying for from three to ten pictures in advance.

Through the action of the United Board of Directors and the way that action is being backed up by all franchise holders, it will mean that United, during the coming months, will purchase or produce and release for exhibitors, feature motion pictures of the highest possible value.

J. Warren Kerrigan, the star of the Robert Brunton production, "The Dream Cheater," a story by Honore de Balzac, which is being released by W. W. Critics Praise Miss Daw

Reviewers and Exhibitors Like Actress’ Work in “River’s End”

MARGORIE DAW, who makes her debut for Marshall Neilan in "The River’s End," following a career as leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks, has achieved another triumph of her career in motion pictures with her characterization of Mary Josephine in James Oliver Curwood's story, according to reports obtained at the New York office of the Neilian organization.

When the picture received its initial public showing in New York at the Strand the newspaper critics were strong in their praise over Miss Daw's work in "The River's End." The opinion that this was her best portrayal in pictures was practically unanimous. These reviews were duplicated all over the country, where the film has already been shown.

The usual interest disclosed in this little actress on the part of brother and sister professionals, it is pointed out, was particularly evidenced by the many telegrams and messages she received from prominent motion picture stars and producers, congratulating her on her achievement.

Miss Daw has been loaned to Maurice Tourneur by Marshall Neilan for one production, after which she will prepare for her European trip with the Neilian organization. She will next be seen in the second independent Neilian picture for First National release, opposite Matt Moore. This film is scheduled for May release and the title, which has been kept a secret for some time, is said to offer exceptional exploitation possibilities.

J. D. Williams Visits Ray

First National Official Extends Welcome to Star at Coast Studio

In order to extend a personal welcome to Charles Ray, the latest addition to the ranks of First National stars, General Manager J. D. Williams paid a special visit to the big Los Angeles studios where the actor is at work on the first picture in which Arthur S. Kane is presenting him.

At the completion of his contract with Thomas Ince, Mr. Ray began to make pictures for release by the First National organization, and the visit of Mr. Williams to the star's own studios on the West coast represents the official welcome of Mr. Ray into the First National fold.

General Manager Williams, following his survey of the situation in the Ray studio, gave out the statement that in his opinion Charles Ray was slated to break all records for newcomers to the First National releasing organization. Such is the impression gained by Mr. Williams in his conferences with exhibitors along his route that the First National official stands sponsor for the prophecy that the industry will see one of the most unusual and sweeping successes from the independent films.

Mr. Williams expressed great admiration for the splendid body of officials and co-workers with whom Mr. Ray has surrounded himself. With the star's old associates, Jerome Storm, director and Chester Lyons, camera man, to watch the technical end of picture production, and with Mr. Richard Wills, the capable General Manager, supervising the destinies of the local organization, the First National executives prophesied great things coming from this aggregation of talents.

Among others in the gathering at the Ray studios with General Manager Williams was Sol Lesser, the well known independent distributor, and H. A. Browne, of the Walter Daw Company of London.

Bright Prospects for Pathé

The reported signing of practically every house listed as a "Pathé serial regular" for the entire fifteen episodes of "Trained by Three," the new offering co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mano, which is to begin its run on April 4th, is pointed to by the Pathé serial expert as a surefire success. Another success has been predicted by that concern.

New Star's Vehicle Announced

HAVING taken a needed vacation, Wanda Hawley, the new Realartist will start work immediately on her first production as a star. "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome K. Jerome, has been selected for her as the most suitable vehicle to bring out her talent in light comedy roles. "Miss Hobbs" is considered by some critics to be one of the best examples of modern comedies. It was originally produced at the famous Arrowhead Hot Springs. It was recently purchased as a screen rights for the stage, and was produced in London, England, by the English production, the cast included Herbert Waring, Evelyn Millar, Susie Vaughan, Allan Antonsen and Coogan.

The play had a run of more than a year in New York City and has a record of numerous other revivals in various countries and a number of successes in producing "Miss Hobbs" on this continent. Miss Hawley was considered by Realart officials as a most fortunate circumstance.

Miss Hawley has recently returned from a two weeks' vacation and will start work on "Miss Hobbs" without delay. She was tired when she left the mountains, having played almost continuously for eight months as a leading woman in various Players-Lasky productions.

On her return she reported that she had thoroughly rested and was ready for the responsibilities of stardom. Her vacation was a varied one. She spent a few days in the mountains at Forrestdale, and then went to Del Monte, a famous golf rendezvous. Miss Hawley is an ardent golfer and enjoyed the relaxation of the game thoroughly. She topped her vacation period off with a visit to the famous Arrowhead Hot Springs. She was one of the last persons to hit the woods before it was turned over to the Government, which has recently purchased the place as a national park.

Since becoming a star Miss Hawley has been much in demand by interviewers and photographers. So many writers have called upon the beautiful blonde favorite within the last few days that Miss Hawley is said to consider applying President Wilson for a special afternoon as "call." Since Miss Hawley's absence on vacation he was busy going over the script, holding period for delays and putting it in the best possible shape to guarantee Miss Hawley's success in her initial bow to the public as a star.

Blackton Release via Pathe

"The Blood-Barrier" is Special Feature on List for April 11th

As the special feature of a varied list of releases for the week of April 11th, Pathe offers J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The Blood Barrier," in which Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon have the leading roles. "The Blood Barrier" is said to be one of the most "actionful" productions Pathe has issued in some time. It relates the struggle of an American boy to preserve a secret which at this time is actually forming an important cog in international trade affairs.

The story is the work of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was written in a vigorous style, possessing all the elements of love, romance, and adventure which he pictured so keenly in his writings. "The Blood Barrier" is a production which offers a wide latitude for clever exploitation, and to assist the exhibitor in putting over this unique feature, Pathe lists the following accessories: one sheet; two sheets; twenty-four sheet; set of colored lobby photos; 22 by 28, colored; 22 by 28; black and white; an announcement; title; and set of black and white. In addition to this, is the campaign book, which marks another superb effort on the part of the Pathe Exploitation Department, to give the showman material that will really assist him in selling his attraction to the public.

"The Blood Barrier" is fifth in the list of Pathe-Blackton features, most notable of which are "My Husband's Other Wife," and "Respectable by Proxy," each of which has proved a big winner. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, who are co-starred in "The Blood Barrier" are rated amongst the most popular luminaries of the screen. Their work in previous Blackton features has thus stamped them.

STATE RIGHTS EXPORT

New Serial Sales Reported

Louis Burston Says His Faith in "The Hawk's Trail" Is Vindicated

Thirsts and Laughs in "His Pajama Girl"

The inauguration of the five-reel comedy vogue which will be instituted by Chaplin, Sennett, Lehman and the other makers of comedies will find a forerunner in the C. B. Price offering "Bille" Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl," it is stated.

While Miss Rhodes has graduated from the short subject comedy class, it was in the caliber of production that she built her big and original following. Now with her return in the lighter sort of entertainment in feature length, it is expected that many new friends who found her very much to their liking in the lighter productions will give their stamp of approval to this new venture.

The offering of this long length comedy on the state right market is recognized as a radical departure in this field. While "His Pajama Girl" also abounds in several thrilling situations, they are to be brought out in such a manner as to intensify the comedy situations which follow.

"Want More Short-Subjects"

FOLLOWING his attendance at the independent convention at Chicago last week, Jack Cohn, producer of "Hall Room Boys Comedies" and other short subjects for the independent market, is more firmly convinced than ever that independent methods of booking and covering territories compose a more profitable and convenient means of obtaining pictures than any other, it is stated.

The exchange man and exhibitor I met when in Chicago, said Mr. Cohn, told me that while there were plenty of features to be had, there was a shortage of short subjects for the independent buyer. All independent exchange men are interested in the development of the short subject just at this time, since this end of the business is just as important as the production of the larger features.

The characteristics which mark the distribution of feature products to the independent market hold true in the distribution of the short subjects, such as comedies, scenes and similar pictures. There is just as much overhead expense, saving, just as little detail, and just as much real value in good pictures produced especially for the independent market as there is in the production of big features for the same market.

"Our own brand, the "Hall Room Boys Comedies," has been distributed through independent exchange ever since its production was started. Exchange men told me that this was one reason for their great success, and it came to me that the ease with which exhibitors and exchange men found them profitable was the lack of expense involved in handling them, both at their end and at our end."

In his announcement, Mr. Cohn urged the adherence by all producers and exchange men of the principles which apply in the production of the heaviest subject. He declared that the independent exchange was just as exacting in the matter of material as was the regular producer, and for that reason it was a duty as well as a safeguard for nothing but real pictures to be turned loose on the independent market.

The independent producer, he said, "is slowly but surely ascending to a place in the sun, and to keep it there is the duty of every producer of this type of picture. Today marks the beginning of a new era in the production of all types of picture for this field. Everyone connected with the independent market is eager to place that end of the industry upon a level with any other, and this will come about in the near future just as sure as the sun rises in the east."

Mr. Cohn, every producer, every exchange man, and every exhibitor who favors the independent method, must bear in mind that the eyes of the whole industry are turned our way, hold himself clear from sharp practices, cheap methods and bad pictures. Keep the product good, and keep the public as your friend.

Mr. Cohn concluded by stating that every producer of independent pictures during the next year or two would realize a good profit, which would be shared with the buyers of his product. He added, however, that the independent producer, in many cases, was entitled to much more sales money than was coming his way just at this time.

Fine Cast in "Democracy"

Apex of Theme is Reinforced by Capable Cast That Interprets It

Although the theme of "Democracy—The Vision Restored," is too potent a thought of interest in this cinema epie by Lee Lyburger, great care was exercised, it is stated, in casting the characters. Director William Nigh took into consideration the players' adaptability to the roles and their acting ability, rather than any star laurels they might have possessed.

William Nigh, himself, plays the role of Dr. David Shimer, the high ideals, the representative of Democracy. Those who recall his powerful portrayal of a somewhat similar character in Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," know well his capabilities as a dramatic actor.

Leslie Austen, who is well known for his performances on both the stage and screen, is cast as David's brother, Jonathan, an actor, J. H. Gilmore, a veteran of the American stage, essays the role of Henry Fortune, the Money Manger, Maurice Powers, a radiant "find" of Director Nigh's for whom he predicts a great future, plays the wonderfully sympathetic role of Mary, a blind girl. Albert Devore is seen as Mary's grandfather, known as the "Old Shop-herd." Halbert W. Brown, who impersonated Ambassador Gerard in "My Four Years in Germany," appears as the Doctor and Elisha De Wolfe, formerly of the Griffith play, enacts the role of The Woman. In the part of Fortune's valet, we find Charles W. Sutton, a member of the original Edison Stock Company.

In addition, Rayon Raymond, Burt Gudgelon, Walter De Leon, E. Pollock, Franklyn Hanna and hundreds of other players appear in this photodrama by Lee Francis Lyburger.
Inter-Ocean Reports Sales

Unnamed Buyer Acquires Foreign Rights to Thirty-two Pictures

CONTRACTS closed last week by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, convey the territorial rights to thirty-two American productions for physical distribution throughout the Dutch East Indies, Straits Settlements, India, Burma and Ceylon. The list of pictures embraces twenty-seven Black Diamond Comedies until recently distributed in America by the Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and five independent feature attractions which have proved their right to be termed "box-office" attractions.

The buyer of these films is desirous of withholding his name from the trade paper columns for obvious reasons, announces Inter-Ocean. He plans to inaugurate a vast sales campaign, and not until he has perfected the contract details of this campaign, does he want any information concerning his acquisition to appear in print or otherwise be mentioned in trade circles. It is understood, however, that the buyer is one of the largest distributors of motion pictures in the territory above-mentioned.

Plan New "Tarzan" Serial

National Film to Make "The Son of Tarzan," Starring Jack Hoxie

The last of Edgar Rice Burroughs' books of his Tarzan series—The Son of Tarzan—will be filmed as a serial by the National Film Corporation of America. It was this firm that screened "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan" several years ago. These are still being exhibited in original form.

Jack Hoxie, who became one of the best known serial stars through his work in the "Lightening Bryce" serial, also made by the National, will occupy the center of the screen in "The Son of Tarzan." He will be supported by Lucille Ricks and a large cast of principals. According to the studio, this is the first time an Edgar Rice Burroughs novel of the man-monkey has ever been attempted in serial form.

Preliminary arrangements for a nation-wide exploitation campaign have been made by J. Bernstein, National's production manager, who is in the East for that purpose. L. V. Jefferson has already reduced the original version of "The Son of Tarzan" to ten episodes. April first will see Jack Hoxie and his company deep in the first episode, according to studio advice.

According to Capt. Harry M. Rubey, this serial will be one of the most costly and stupendous productions ever made by the National. An island in the South Pacific has been secured for the entire production, the natives of which will be pressed into service from time to time, it is stated.

The Pioneer Film Company is presenting Shelton Lewis in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

New Film Has Good Plot

National Film Makes Claims for "Parted Curtains," Latest Feature

"PARTED CURTAIN," the latest feature production announced by the National Film Corporation of America, is said to have an unusually strong plot as the basis for the picture. Bertram Bracken, who directed this production, claims it is the strongest theme he has dealt with in all his experience. Bracken was responsible for the direction of "East Lynne," "Sporting Blood," "The Boomerang," "The Long Arm of Mysterious," and other photodramas.

Henry H. Walthall, who stars in "Parted Curtains," has even surpassed his splendid work in "Confession," National's last big production, according to company officials. In "Parted Curtains," he plays the role of a social outcast who has spent seven years in prison for expropriation for the crime of another.

Walthall has an excellent supporting cast, including Mary Alden, who was featured in "Common Clay," and "The Unpardonable Sin," and William H. Clifford, who was the Canadian in "Confession." Margaret Landis, Edward Cecil, Ann Davis, Charles Wheelock, and Richard Morris complete the cast.

Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the National Film Corporation, has announced that "Parted Curtains" will be sold on the state rights market and that it will be ready for release very shortly. George H. Davis, who is now at Joe Brandt's office is negotiating for the sale of territory. Further announcements are promised.

Kremer Reissue Sells Fast

Several Blocks of Territory Are Sold on "Skinner's Dress Suit"

THE New York headquarters of Victor Kremer Feature Films, Inc., reported this week that the announcement of the acquisition of "Skinner's Dress Suit" had brought an extraordinary amount of inquiries from state right buyers from coast to coast. The popularity of this Bryant Washburn comedy drama is evidenced by the fact that several prominent buyers have already contracted for blocks of territory. The Kremer offices say that "Skinner's Dress Suit" has aroused greater interest on the part of state right distributors than any other reissue ever handled by this organization.

New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., the Kremer exchange, which will distribute "Skinner's Dress Suit" for New York and Northern New Jersey, has already secured several first runs in the larger theatres in this section. Mr. H. Simmons, manager of the exchange, is confident, from the bookings already received, that the Washburn film will break all records for reissues in the matter of rentals and first runs.

A novel advertising necessary in the form of a dress suit is being supplied to exhibitors as a cut-out for lobby display. This cut-out stands five feet in height and carries on the expance of shirt front a reproduction of one of the scenes from the play. This is but one of several advertising novelties which will be furnished to assist the buyer and exhibitor in exploiting Skinner's Dress Suit.

Monte Carlo Interior in "Blind Love"

Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucey Cotton, which was booked over the Lowes Circuit last week, shows an exact replica of the main gambling hall of Monte Carlo. Dignity Marks Burston
Descriptive Matter

The "something new" feature is an absence of the "hurrah sham-bang bally-ho" slogans, from the slide scenes and descriptive matter. So far, exhibitors and buyers of the Baggot production everywhere are reported to acclaim the refined and deliberate substance of the advertising material.

tion. The play was adapted from the Harold McGrath story of the same name by Magie E. Shor, who directed, and the direction was in charge of Edward Jose. The film is to be said to have some wonderful camera effects worked out by Rene Guissart.
Unique Gown Is Stolen From Fox Studios

An unusual costume, which was worn by Miss Vida Allen in a Sunday serial, was stolen recently from the Fox studios in Hollywood, California. The dress consisted almost entirely of real heads, and was in reality a novel bathing suit.

This costume was one of the seventy-five gowns which were purchased by Fox for the leading ladies in the Sunshine operas recently completed under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth. They were designed by Miss Margaret Whistler, of the Fox studios, and are said to be exceedingly striking in pattern. Including the head alone about $7,500 was required for the costumes.

Talmadge Sisters Lead in "Fan" Contest

A popularly voting contest for classifying the world's most popular motion picture star is now being conducted by the Minneapolis Journal. At the present count, Norma Talmadge is several thousand votes ahead. Her sister, Constance Talmadge, stands a very good chance of coming in second. The winner will receive in addition to the regular prize, a full page write up in the Minneapolis Journal, and if Miss Talmadge wins, it is suggested by the Talmadges that exhibitors can make this full page to considerable advantage as a lobby display.

Hall Back After Three Weeks "On Location"

Thurston Hall, who is playing the title role in Lewis Selander's screen version of Willard Mack's "The Prince of Fines" returned to New York this week from the White Mountains of New Hampshire after three weeks spent "on location" under the direction of Burton George.

Mary Pickford Entertains Los Angeles Orphans See "Pollyanna" and Meet Star at Theatre

TOUCHED by the pathetic story of a little boy who died in his own room, Miss Pickford staged a real treat for Los Angeles orphans by making a personal appearance and showing them "Pollyanna." Miss Pickford told the orphans that she had had a similar experience. A letter from the orphan child, giving no address, was post-marked Los Angeles, and Miss Pickford knew that she would be able to accomplish a real purpose, arranged with the management of the Orphans' Auditorium to entertain the orphans children of Los Angeles at a special matinee, with a production of "Pollyanna," the United Artists' production. The orphan child, writing his letter in Indian ink, and without signatures, was the real "Pollyanna" of the play and told the story that Miss Pickford knew he had written her, and would like to see the picture. This story was telegraphed to the management of the Orphans' Auditorium and it was arranged for the children of Los Angeles to see the picture at a special matinee. The program was a success and the children were thrilled with Miss Pickford's appearance.

Indianapolis Theatres Visited by Robbers

Losses of nearly $3,000 were sustained by five Indianapolis playhouses last week through a series of bold robberies. The Auditorium at Corydon was lost most heavily. The robbers gained entrance to the theatre through the alley door, pulled the safe in the basement and then set off a charge. They escaped with $1,500.

Four neighborhood houses in Indianapolis were visited by vandals. From the North Star, owned by A. C. Zaring, they carried away the entire projection equipment, valued at $800. They took lenses and other valuable parts from F. W. Neal, home, the Alcazar and the Garrick.

George Melford Leaves for Mountain Locale

With a complete equipment, a great number of extras and the entire cast for his special production, "The Transition of a Savage," George Melford has departed for the high Sierras in quest of snow scenes, which will form an important part of the picture. In the cast are Madeleine Carroll, Robert McRae, Willard Mack, Sills, Elliott Dexter, Winter Hall, Ann Forest, and a number of others. Mr. Melford will remain for at least two weeks in the mountains.

Gentlemen:

Having used continuously, two (2) Motiograph DeLuxe Projecting Machines for more than a year, we wish other Exhibitors to benefit by our experience.

Previous to using the DeLuxe Machines, we had two other well-known Manufacturers' Machines, which were used in a period of four years, but not until we have had the DeLuxe model has a projecting machine been so perfected that our screen has never been dark through any fault of the machine.

Regardless of speed, fast or slow, we have a picture on the screen as steady as a marble statue, light through shutter which cannot be improved on, and entirely flickerless. The breaking of old film never clogs in machine, but passes through without interrupting picture, and the double automatic fire-shutter is perfection for safety and prevention of fire.

The adjustment for lamp-house is highly recommended. In fact, the whole machine is far above our expectations.

As for service, the Enterprise Optical Company is prompt, energetic and reliable, no delay in exchange of machine parts, or correspondence, and can say they do fully guarantee all parts of machines by replacing with new parts.

These two machines, which have run eleven hours every day for more than a year, have not yet cost us a cent for repairs.

Hoping the above information will be not only a money saver, but a money maker for all other Exhibitors, we are

Sincerely yours,

FOX & KEATING,
ORPHEUM THEATRE.

DOLPH ST.  CHICAGO, ILL.
Oakland, California, Claims Largest Theatre in West

T HE largest theatre west of Chicago is in Oakland, California, a city whose last census amounts to a quarter of a million population. It has 3,600 seats about equally divided between orchestra and balcony and these have proven themselves inadequate to accommodate the patronage of the East Bay section despite the fact that there is the usual competition at almost every corner within the city limits, as well as nearly fifty neighborhood houses. But Turner & Dahnken, under whose management the house is operated, saw the possibilities of a mammoth modern theatre, installed 100% program including a twenty-five piece orchestra and the experiment has proved so successful that the scoffer to shame as well as one of the neighborhood operators out of the running entirely.

Eugene L. Perry, under whose personal direction the house has been made a reliable success was formerly general manager of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, and prior to that was connected with Misses Shubert as general Southern representative. The prices that Mr. Perry has schooled the Oakland theatre to fetch, range from 25 cents to double bill is offered containing four attractions on every program, one vaudeville act, a prologue, an operetta, a musical concert consisting of 3 or 4 numbers and a new weekly. Suffice it to say that the theatre, through gigantic in size and facilities of water closet, has been proven to be too small to accommodate the crowds that flock admittance.

The estimated cost three years ago slightly exceeded $250,000. It was built for the Moffitt estate, the owners, by Cunningham and Polito, architects whose main offices are in San Francisco. The theatre is a class A building of solid concrete and steel. The only wood it contains is in the office door. Outside dimensions are 100 ft. by 175 ft. inside dimensions exclusive of stage are 85 ft. by 153 ft. Three wire system used throughout. The floors throughout the building are covered with interlocking rubber tiling which absorbs the noise of the countless thousands of feet.

The projection room is in the rear of the orchestra enabling a straight throw to the screen. Two mirroroid fibre screens are used, one in the stage front when the stage crew is preparing a prologue setting or for a vaudeville act, though the screen used the greater part of the time is stacked away in the rear of the stage. Two projectors and all of the modern equipment and accessories have been provided for. There are also two spot light machines and stereopticon as well as a baby spot stationed in this projecting room. The dimensions of this room are 20 ft. by 9 ft. wide and 12 ft. high. The throw to the rear sheet measures 100 ft. Seventy-five amperes are used with excellent results.

About ninety people are employed at the Oakland T & D Theatre including the orchestra. It really takes this number to operate the house properly. This is especially due to the crowds that are forced to handle.

The decorations inside are rich but dignified throughout, the color scheme being buff, colonial blue, ivory white and gold.

There is not a step in the entire house, not a stairway, every elevation is approached by a series of ramps or gradual inclines.

Stained glass windows illuminated from the back have been installed recently, one on the left of the stage portraying the woman of ancient times, Joan of Arc, the one on the right showing the woman of modern times, the Red Cross nurse. This idea in itself has gained a world of publicity for Turner & Dahnken, for the patrons recognize the fact that although the installation of these costly effects were superfluous from a box office standpoint, the spirit of progress displayed by that company was rare and most pleasing.

The theatre has a side of 125 ft. in height, 175 ft. in length with sensitiveness, but telling decorations as can be seen from the accompanying photographs. A decided novelty is obtained by ten large steam pots in which are inserted various colored lamps. At night the effect of steam coming through these ornamental pots or baskets with colored lights shining up onto the floating vapors is a most beautiful one and has caused much comment.

The employees have several sets of uniforms and costumes which are changed weekly for relief to the eyes of the attending multitude.

A point that is valuable to remember in connection with this theatre is, that it was built in a neighborhood that was around the corner from the main thoroughfares and street car lines. The know-it-alls proclaimed Turner & Dahnken most idiotic for the selection of this site for such a large undertaking, especially when theatres were operating on the main corners in Oakland. But as Mr. Dahnken and Mr. Perry figured it out they have a seating capacity, we can afford to put in the biggest shows and the best attractions obtainable. By such offerings they will find our around-the-corner location and they will make their favorite rendez-vous." And, in fact, this has happened in Oakland, for T & D Theatre, mammoth as it is, especially for a city of the size of Oakland, has proven itself too small.

As soon as this statement came to news that Mr. Dahnken has just erected for a 5,000 seat theatre in San Francisco, which, by the way, is "just around the corner" from Market St., the gentleman is the thoroughfare. But in closing we hope that Fred Dahnken knows what he is doing, knows how to do it and, that he gets results.

Builds Theatre for Employees

W HEN the DuPont Company of Wilmington, Delaware, agreed to erect a city of 950 bungalows for the General Motors Company, Flint, Michigan, within a year, the problem of satisfying an army of 3,500 men had to be considered. "Mechanical" constituted the solution. Immediately after the camp and quarters were completed, a deal for a 5,000 seat theatre was made, which was to be erected. The best possible facilities were booked. Regularly employed members of the company operated the theatre. No admissions were charged. And every one of the employees were privileged to enjoy it. For, by agreement, each man was given 10 hours in the pleasant atmosphere of the theatre, the films of travel, drama and comedy were screened there. This theatre eliminated the necessity for any other form of amusement. A very pleasant scrutiny of the records shows that employees were not prevented from spending surplus money on city amusements and consequently they were fresh for the next week.

The idea of the theatre was conceived by Allan J. Saville, the resident engineer. He realized the necessity for something unusual.

From Talking Machines to Talking Pictures and Now to Exporting

Is the Story of Eugene Kaufmann, Exporter of Accessories

ACK in 1896 or thereabouts when Thomas A. Edison was taking his first fling in motion pictures there came to work for him a young man who was cut out to be a salesman. That man was Eugene Kaufmann, now manager of the Accessory Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Soon after going to work for Edison, Kaufmann was sent out through the country as the Electrical Wizard’s special representative. He had no definite route to travel. Wherever he was needed or wherever he perceived an opportunity for further sales there he went. And his line, too, was one of considerable variety. He handled the Edison motors, X-ray apparatus, talking machines and other electrical devices. One of the first X-ray equipments to be installed in a hospital was placed in a Southern institution by Mr. Kaufmann.

During those times when he happened to be in East Orange after a trip through the States he was accustomed to spend the days carrying out experiments of his own. Although not originally a skilled mechanic, this constant dabbling in the art finally made one of him. His connection with the industrial life of America was at a time when several important inventions were passing through their periods of improvement. One of these was the talking machine. Naturally, as Kaufmann traveled over the country demonstrating the phonographs he became vitally interested in its possibilities and also realized its drawbacks. The latter he sought to overcome. His periods at the workshop gave him the opportunity to carry out some ideas of his own, and this he did. From out of this work there evolved a number of important improvements which are being used today.

But, as with many other far-seeing men, Kaufmann did not believe that the motion picture with its silent appeal was the ultimate in cinematography. Accordingly, his interest was turned toward the evolution of “talking pictures.” What his thoughts were can best be given in his own words:

“When I first realized the possibilities of talking pictures, I made a thorough analysis of the schemes that have been used and those that had failed and I came to the conclusion that the first necessity was a device to insure perfect synchronism between picture and voice. I also realized that such a device must be one that could be understood and operated by the usual operator. Unless these two points were gained there was no use in going ahead further. So I experimented and experimented until finally I hit on an idea that worked.

I took the machine and with two men who had been my helpers during the development of the invention, secured a booking at the Tremont Temple in Boston. There we set up the machine and ran it for two weeks. It worked perfectly all the time. We ran two performances a day and the sound was always exactly in synchronism with the picture.

After that we signed up for a run at several other large theatres between Boston and Chicago, and in every place proved to be the greatest novelty of the times.

But our greatest trouble and the thing that caused me to give up the exhibition of the “talking pictures” was the lack of a library of films and records. Without a constant change of subjects there was no attraction. People would not come more than once or twice to see and hear the same subjects.

When he left the exhibiting game Mr. Kaufmann took up the business of importing. He travelled all through the European countries in order to get a comprehensive view of the people and their customs. This knowledge has stood him in good stead in his present connection.

In 1914, when Paul Cromelin took over the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, he remembered Eugene Kaufmann and sent for him to assume charge of the Accessory Department. On account of the latter’s intimate contact with the countries with which his firm dealt, Mr. Kaufmann is enabled to select goods that will have the greatest appeal to the buyers and users in those countries.

Mr. Kaufmann’s business creed is one that is built up and made valuable only by sticking close to a policy and that policy is, “Make the customer feel that when he buys something from us it cannot help but be satisfactory.” And although he has been installed in his office for a short while the effect of adhering to this policy is already being noticed. The word has gone abroad that the Inter-Ocean Corporation does not agree to handle a device or accessory until it has assured itself that the article will come up to their standard. And Eugene Kaufmann intends that his department in its dealings with “every country in the world” will continue to live up to this reputation.

Big Chicago Theatres Will Have Typhoon Systems

The Typhoon Fan Company of New York and Chicago have recently closed contracts for the entire cooling and ventilating of two of Chicago’s largest and most beautiful new theatres—the Paucaea and the Stratford. Both of these theatres were designed by Chicago’s foremost architect, Walter W. Ahlschlager.

A detailed account of the installation of the Typhoon system in these theatres will be published in this magazine very shortly.

It is not surprising that the Typhoon Company have been able to secure the contracts for cooling and ventilating for these enormous theatres, as during the past few years the Typhoon equipment has been installed in a great many of the largest and finest theatres throughout the country.

The Typhoon Company this year are showing a great deal of activity owing to the fact that ventilation has become one of the most important items in theatre construction.

A new branch office of the Typhoon Company has been opened in Philadelphia, corner Thirteenth and Vine streets, where Jack Brown, a well known and experienced motion picture expert, has been put in charge. Mr. Brown reports that he has already closed in his territory several very important contracts for the Typhoon System, and before the arrival of the hot weather he fully expects to close many of his present prospects.
Views of Truss Construction Used in Newark Rialto
A novel scheme has been used in the design of the structural steel for the Rialto theatre now under construction at Newark, N. J. This design was worked out because of the unusual width of the theatre and because it was wished to avoid all columns.

As finally erected the system employs a cantilever construction with trusses running diagonally across the corners of the building as the fulcrum. The ends of the cantilever were counterbalanced by the weight of the upper portion of the walls. This served two purposes: first, it shortens to a minimum the spans of any one member of the steel; and second, it makes as much weight as possible off the foundations of the side walls. Just how this is worked out and arranged is clearly shown in the illustrations. The upper view on page 3334 gives an excellent idea of the arrangement of the diagonal trusses and the members leading from fulcrum to side wall.

The designers have also been able by this scheme to reduce the heights of the walls to a minimum and increasing the slope of the roof to a maximum, therefore avoiding any accumulation of weight, such as snow, etc., on the roof, also giving a perfect drainage system to the roof.

The theatre is of the latest type with the rear portion of the auditorium raised to give the effect of a balcony, and which portion is easily accessible from the middle of the auditorium. At no places are the steps higher than 9", and when walking up them one hardly notices that he goes up to a height which at the rear end of the balcony is nearly 16' above the auditorium.

The plastering and decorations and other interior features are novel and unique, especially the ceiling, no portion of which is a straight line, but all in beautiful curves and highly ornamental. The ventilation is of the most modern type; at one end of the building air is blown in through the bottom (mushroom system) while at the other end of the building it is exhausted by means of a series of exhaust fans. There are a number of features in the theatre for the comfort of the patrons which have been incorporated from long experience in the needs of such features in theatres. There is no regular stage provided but the theatre is built so, and provisions have been made that at any time it becomes necessary to have one, it can be built without any unnecessary expense. The setting is all made of ornamental plaster and marble, and is to a certain degree permanent.

The theatre has been designed by Mr. Thos. W. Lamb, and is built by the Jardin Company, Inc., of 507 Fifth Avenue, New York city. The structural features of the theatre have been designed by the contractors, who are also engineers.
Installation of Double Orchestra Turns Theatre from Failure into Success

Bingham and Cohen Inaugurate Idea That Is Now Being Taken Up by Many Houses

ONE of the most interesting stories in the theatrical history of Indianapolis is the story of the Colonial theatre and the almost superhuman efforts of Edmund H. Bingham and Harry E. Cohen, the owners, to "put it over." For 102 weeks these two men held on to a losing proposition until they had plunged so deep that they determined to "hold on to the last," although the "holding on" might mean financial ruin for them.

As is characteristic of many businesses, an idea, backed by an intensive advertising campaign, saved them from financial ruin and put the Colonial theatre on a paying basis for the first time since it had been built. And this idea, which was largely responsible for the success of the Colonial, is now winning a reputation for both Bingham and Cohen throughout the United States.

In 1916 these two men took over the Colonial determined to make it a high class theatre. The fact that some nine or ten individuals or firms had been unsuccessful in similar attempts did not deter them, nor did the fact that the house had been dark for more than a year stop them.

Extensive repairs were made and the house thrown open to the public as a vaudeville theatre. And it was then that the start was made on a 102 weeks' losing proposition which nearly ended in financial ruin for both, after almost a good-sized fortune had been spent.

In vain did these two men look for an "audience." But "audiences" could not be found at the Colonial during those times. And so it continued for 102 weeks, until the end of the one hundredth and third week a net profit of 50 cents was made. But that 50 cents looked like a fortune to Ed Bingham and Harry Cohen. They realized, or devoutly hoped, that that was the beginning of what they called "the ray of light." And it proved to be.

Both men had invested every cent they were worth or could borrow. In the words of Mr. Bingham they "couldn't quit because we knew that quitting would mean ruin for us, and at the same time we would have been an injustice to our friends when even the slightest possible chance remained to make the theatre a success."

One day, while a widely-known band was playing in the theatre, the two showmen conceived the idea that it would be a good plan to have two orchestras, in boxes on opposite sides, so that the music would be continuous. The two showmen saw how restless the audience became when the band was playing there at that time stopped for an intermission. So the owners decided to obtain two novelty orchestras, men who could not only play every kind of instrument but who could sing as well.

Boxes were torn out on both sides of the theatre and elevated. The walls were attractively decorated and two "singing orchestras" obtained. These orchestras have since been known as the American Harmonists and the Liberty Quartet.

Since that time officials of many of the leading motion picture producing companies have visited the Colonial and commended on the unique arrangement. These men realized that Bingham and Cohen originated the idea which is now being followed by many motion picture theatres over the country.

San Gabriel's Mission Style Theatre

In the little city of San Gabriel, California, situated near Los Angeles, there is a small plaster-finished motion-picture theatre where the residents are entertained three nights a week. The house has a seating capacity of 300, and is generally well patronized. In a small tile-covered booth nearby are dispensed soft drinks and candies. The San Gabriel theatre is located but a few rods from the historic old Franciscan mission from which the town takes its name and just across from which has been produced for a number of years John S. McGroarty's famous "mission Play."

Monsoon Cooling System, Inc.
Room 772, 70 West 45th St., New York
General Electric Control Devices for Motion Picture Projection

A MOTION picture theatre is a store with just one kind of merchandise to sell—a GOOD PICTURE.

The comestible seats, beautiful decorations and harmonious music are but the show window display to lure the public to buy.

It is therefore, reasonable to expect that every theatre manager is interested in any device to improve the quality of this picture, and will listen with interest to any suggestion as to the way and means of obtaining better results in this line presentation.

The screen, projection machine, film and lamp are all important factors in producing these results, and skilled designers have given their best efforts to perfecting the various devices.

The light source is of prime importance and it is generally agreed that the electric light is the most nearly perfect source of screen illumination and is universally used, wherever available. Great progress has recently been made in adapting the incandescent lamp to this service, but so far its application has been limited to the smaller theatres.

For this reason the arc lamp is required in the majority of cases and suitable apparatus is required to assure a satisfactory light under all conditions. The subject of lamp houses, carbons, projection lenses and condensers will not be discussed here, and we shall confine ourselves to the consideration of the various devices for adapting the conveniently available sources of electricity to the particular requirements of the electric arc.

There are two kinds of electric current produced commercially—the direct current and the alternating current. The direct current is usually found in the downtown districts of our larger cities—110 or 220 volts, 2-wire; 220 volts, 3-wire (as Edison 3-wire, as it is usually called) and 500 volts, 2-wire or 3-wire. By Edison or three wire is meant a circuit or 3-wires with, say, 110 volts between the middle (or neutral) and either outside wire and 220 volts between the two outside wires. This may be 500 volts across the outside wires and 250 between the outside and neutral wires.

In the case of the alternating current we have not only the various voltages of 110, 220, 440, 500 volts, but in addition the current may be single, two or three phase and 60, 25 or 40 cycles.

These voltages are too high for the operation of the arc lamp which requires only 30 to 60 volts at the arc, and therefore some intermediate device is required to reduce this voltage to the proper value for the operation of the arc lamp. In many cities, however, (and this is particularly true of the outlying districts) direct current is not available, and it is necessary not only to reduce the voltage available to that required by the arc lamp, but in addition it is also necessary to transform the alternating current to direct current, before an arc light can be secured satisfactory for projection purposes.

In the early days of the motion picture the source of supply—the other one to the projection machine. A means of a switch handle projecting through the top casing, operating the arc current through a considerable range is possible.

At no time in the adjustment of this switch is the current to the lamp interrupted and, therefore, lamp flicker is eliminated.

WILL NOT BURN OUT

The compensar complies with the standards of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Because of its design characteristics it cannot METHOD OF OPERATION

On open circuit this machine generates a voltage of approximately 180 volts. The first arc is struck in the usual manner, the second lamp being short circuited by means of the switch. When ready to change over to the second lamp the carbons are closed together until they touch. The short circuiting switch is then opened and the carbons gradually separated, the machine voltage automatically increasing to take care of the added resistance of the arc maintaining the current practically constant. To shut off the first lamp the carbons are gradually brought together until they touch and the short circuiting switch closed. Machine voltage will automatically decrease as the first lamp carbons are brought together and the current will remain constant.

EQUIPMENT SUPPLIED

The complete equipment as covered by the catalog number includes the motor generator panel and two short circuiting switches. The steel panels supplied are arranged for conduit wiring and have mounted in the panel a 6" diameter field rheostat and on the face a 3" diameter, special scale type DM ammeter. The small panel for 2-35 ampere lamps alternately has an ammeter for the operating scale of the panel for the 50 ampere a 65 ampere scale and the 70 ampere on this a 100 ampere scale respectively. On the two larger sizes the ammeter is connected to the circuit through a shunt.

With each outfit is supplied two short circuiting switches; one for each lamp. These are single pole knife switches with sheet metal covers all ready to be mounted on the picture machine along with the lamp disconnecting and motor drive switches. They short circuit the arc, that is out so that while one picture is being projected the other lamp is extinguished.

This device is designed with low current densities, and the best grade of steel is used in its construction, insuring minimum loss and high efficiency. Because of these features, the cost of operation is less than that obtained with any other scheme which has been suggested for this purpose.

TYPE A COMPENSAR

The Type A compensar is a transformer device by means of which it is possible to connect an alternating current arc projection machine directly to any alternating current source of supply, and obtain results which are comparable to those of the direct current arc.

This device consists of a transformer core and coils, rigidly supported in a cast iron frame, making a construction which is both substantial and convenient of operation.

EASE OF OPERATION

Four cable leads are brought through to top casing. Two of these are connected to the source of supply—the other one to the projection machine. A means of a switch handle projecting through the top casing, operating the arc current through a considerable range is possible.

The Uses and Abuses of Portable Projectors

By RENWOOD. C. R. WOODS

The possibilities of the portable projector prophesied a few years ago are now fast becoming a reality. The time is unlimited and as time and experience progress, new and herefore unthought of opportunities will present themselves. For the good of the trade and to the public in general, it is time an understanding be reached for the benefit of both.

1. The projector is to say there is little in the way of portable and semi-portable motion picture projectors that have not been given due consideration and studied to enable him to determine the advantages and disadvantages of the projector, and the correct method of operating it.

They are all of the three fundamentals of projection, namely, the mechanism for intermittent and general passage of film; lens system and the light source. The object of this article is to point out clearly and fairly before the public the essentials of good portable projection under the multiplicity of unfavorable conditions which are bound to arise in this type of picture exhibiting. Another point worth to be impressed is the fact that few portable projectors are practical and "fool-proof," for it takes thought and some experience to operate on in a proficient manner.

But it is best to make plans. Various machines in two classes: fireproof or slow-burning film; and the standard gauge, inflammable film type. These two classes of machines have their respective advantages. First determine the variety of subjects you wish to exhibit.
If for instance it is to show commercial use with a special museum, a film to exhibit a certain artistic property or to be viewed by audiences without a projector. It is not inferred that only special subjects can be used on narrow gauge machines for a fair sized library is at disposal already. It is also probably in saying that this type of equipment may be set up anywhere in the country and will pass the different fire authorities over the country.

Let us next consider projection of standard size films of the ordinary stock. To the layman this should be a matter of considerable thought. In the first place the fire danger is increased, but to balance this the variety of subjects is increased markedly. Another point that is essential is that the operator must be right with his machine every second both mind and body. A careful inspection about every minute to insure proper passage of film through machine and that the film upake device is not making up the film as fast as the safety of all concerned it is essential that the

Gentlemen:

We take pleasure in advising you that over 95% of all projectors used in all studios and film laboratories in and around Los Angeles are Powers Cameragraphs.

In almost every case other machines have been carefully tried out with the result that the respective studios have standardized on your projector.

We are subscribing our affidavit certifying the correctness of these several statements. We are also sending under separate cover letters from fifteen of the more important organizations which show beyond question that we have made no extravagant claims for the popularity of the Powers Cameragraph.

With best wishes for continued Powers success, we remain,

Yours very truly,

Should Have Better Inspectors

J. J. Keough, Williamsport, Pa.: Here of late I have taken a big interest in your Motion Picture News, especially the part where the thing is to better the conditions of projection and the different suggestions from operators, etc., regarding the improvement on the Simplex Machine. I am myself doing out something which will be the biggest factor to all projectionists if I am successful with it. I would like you to print it in your book:

To All Brother Projectionists:

To fight against the film exchanges and compel them to employ some one who understands the danger of bad patching, especially making of patches without cleaning off the emulsion— I think it a shame to see some of the work, especially from the exchanges in Philadelphia. I believe they got school children for makers of patches and inspecting the film; there is no use trying to make any improvements on the machine or in the booth as long as the film exchanges continue to make such patches. Also a patch should be made with at least one and one-half hole overlap, not cutting the film 1/32 or 1/16 from the framing line. You cannot expect a piece of thread to hold the same weight as rope. Out of all the exchanges in Philadelphia, to only three can I give credit for their good work, Fox, Peerless and Republic. Famous Players publish on the front page of your book asking operators to be careful in making patches, etc., but while their exchange sends films with such patches as mentioned, the projectionists can not do all.

Of course, I do not want to knock the Famous Players. Their film is in good shape, mostly. Only here of late I have found a few patches without the emulsion cleaned off. Not until those troubles are done away with will projection become perfect. Inspectors come into the booth and raise Cain with the operators. The owner of the house must spend all his money doing this and that, yet the film exchanges can send film out any old way and if there is a fire why it was due to a film operator. Let the exchanges employ licensed operators to patch and inspect their film and have the inspectors watch them as they do the booths and you will not read of so many fires. In short time if I am successful with my outfit I will give you something to publish which will be one of the biggest improvements ever put in a booth.

Reports New Daylight Screen

When Robert Andersen of the Universal Company recently returned from his vacation abroad, he brought with him the story of a new German invention which, if developed, may revolutionize the film industry.

By means of the discovery of a new compound which absorbs light, German cinema scientists now assert that they can show photographies in broad daylight. The Germans use their new compound in making moving picture screens.

The first broad attempt to capitalize the new discovery is in the formation of a company to install miniature moving picture machines in private homes. German families, it is promised, will soon be able to see the latest features while eating dinner or pursuing other household activities. The home movie machine will take its place beside the piano and the phonograph.

As an adjunct of the new company's activities, it is planned that the new home machine will be a combination projection machine and camera. Events in the home can then be photographed for future generations. The greatest good of this novel project, it is said, will be the doing away with the family album.

The new screen compound is called Petragaggan. It is cast in big flexible sheets and looks something like leather. Its make-up is zealously guarded as a secret. It also is expected to supplant present day billboards, its makers say, since it can show moving pictures on the house tops in day light.

Andersen has returned to Universal City carrying with him a long term contract to direct pictures as well as to act in them. He is now at work on his first production, which he says will bristle with new ideas in directorial art. His ultimate object is to produce a picture with no subtitles.

are having a good success with our equipment and consider it far superior to the arc light for our work.

In addition to our private plant, we now have 115 volt A.C. in our theatre. We should like to be able to connect up to the 115 volt line in case our private plant breaks down or connect to it in case we find it cheaper than the private plant. The Watkinson Lamp Co. are putting out a 1,000 watt 110 to 125 volt lamp which corresponds with the 30 volt lamp we are now using. Would this lamp give us satisfaction?

Also what is the cost of an automatic regulator suitable for our needs and where can we write to get information concerning them?

Reply: There is no reason why you should not get excellent results with the Marsh equipment, as all the factors are in your favor. A 9 x 12 picture is about the limit for the Marsh under the present stage of development.

Probably the best way to connect up the a.c. 115 volt service for use as an emergency is by means of one of the automatic regulators being manufactured. These regulators are a combination transformer and regulator and when once set and adjusted should maintain the voltage at exactly 30.

We understand that the lamp companies are experimenting on a 110 volt projection lamp, but that it has not been placed on the market. There is a 110 volt arc regulation lamp that has been used to a certain extent in projection work but it is rather doubtful if you could use it. Better get a device that you can use with a regulator at 30 volts. You will get better results.

We cannot quote costs on the regulators. Write to the Rittelde Co., 35 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, and to the Argus Lamp and Appliance Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

Has Double Dissolving Device for Sale

A few weeks ago we published a letter from R. V. Frew, in which he asked for the name of a manufacturer making a double dissolving device. We have received a statement from Mr. D. E. Kepler of the Arc Amusement Co., of Crawfordville, Indiana, to the effect that he makes a device for this purpose. Will Frew and any others interested get in touch with this man?

A 1920 Model Automatic Register

JUST as the best and best known automobiles are “first” in adding improvements to their models each year, so the automatic ticket selling and cash register company, constantly improves the automatic register.

Exhibitors demand one thing above all others of a ticket selling machine, and that is that it should give consistent day-in and day-out service and not get out of order.

Realizing this, the automatic ticket selling and cash register company subjects its models to a five-year continual running test by operating a machine continuously day and night by electricity, which, of course, is a much harder test than daily usage in a motion picture theatre box office.

The company does not simply claim that their machine will stand every working test, they actually put their machine to a harder working test in their factory than it meets in five years of service in a theatre box office.

Automatic Register users are satisfied users, because the device not only gives them all the advantages that its makers claim it will in the way of rapid ticket selling service and cash protection, but because it also makes good in every way on the claims that the company makes on the service the machine will give.

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

The moving picture industry is the only industry dominated geographically by the question of light. While in ordinary artificial lighting 5 and 10 foot-candles is good illumination, yet on the moving picture stage at least a hundred times this should be used. This means a stage illumination of 500 to 1000 foot-candles as a minimum.

II. Daylight

The larger the number of days of good clear sunshine, the lower is the cost of motion picture production, because of the saving of time of high salaried artists. But little has been done as yet to use artificial light in conjunction with outdoor scenes for which daylight is ideal except for the interior scenes of the photograph by dark, cloudy days. (In England some use of the arc lamps has even been made for outdoor scenes) even on consecutive clear days there may be a large variation in actinic light as shown in Fig. 2 (see page 128, Sheppard’s Photo-Chemistry).

For interior scenes daylight must be diffused to avoid outdoor appearances caused by direct shadows from the sunlight. This diffusion is secured by using prism glass in the roof and sides of the studios. If the studio work for interior scenes is done outdoors then awnings of light sheeting or muslin are used to secure proper diffusion and this is sometimes done in studios with glass roofs especially if clear glass has been used. A serious objection to daylight in such studies is the hot-house effect, especially in summer. As these glass houses receive continuously one to two horse power of solar energy per square yard of projected area normal to the light, the heating effect is many times greater than with good artificial light alone, because the full amount of artificial light is used intermittently and seldom for more than a total of an hour a day. The artificial light (used generally for side illumination) with daylight should be given by the light of the greatest photographic power in proportion to the energy liberated in the studio.

For this reason flame arcs are commonly used with daylight. In the winter daylight is rather poor after penetrating the glass and screening and so dependence is then largely placed on the artificial light. This seasonal variation and hourly variation of sunlight and skylight is shown in Fig. 3 taken from Eber’s Handbuch der Photographie. Again the changing direction of sunlight has been a serious objection and the studio, known as the Black Maria, of the Edison Company was arranged on wheels so that it could be moved to face the light.

Finally there is one class of interior scenes for which daylight in any form is 'Shooting' the wild men with a UNIVERSAL

In a climate of intense heat, averaging 130 degrees, traveling in whale boats and through trackless forests, Martin Johnson, the noted explorer, carried the Universal Camera to which he refers in this letter.

With this camera he made 25,000 feet of perfect film, and it came through this endurance test as sound and perfect as the day it left our factory.

When you see Johnson's wonderful pictures of the savage South Sea Islanders, you will have demonstrated to you the kind of film the Universal makes. This is the camera used exclusively by explorers, travelers, the United States Army and educational film makers.

Write for illustrated booklet on the Universal. It tells why the Universal will one day be your camera.

entirely unsatisfactory. This is in night scenes, where sharp shadows and brightly illuminated parts must come in the same picture. Again all motion picture work in actual interiors such as subways, mines, caves, hotels, theatres, churches, etc., must be done with artificial light. And of these the closest to daylight photographically is the light of the white flame high amperage are lamps which will next be considered.

111 White Light from the Flame Arc

3.1 Spectrum.

The white flame high amperage arc gives a light which is remarkably close to daylight in both color and photographic values. Like daylight the spectrum is not entirely continuous, but the effect of being practically continuous is obtained by the enormous number of light giving lines in every part of the spectrum, including the ultra-violet which with the white flame arc is very similar to that given by sun-light.

In Fig. 5 is shown in the outer parts of the spectrum of a white flame are (25 ampere) in the region photographically important for the common materials. The pure carbon are for the same region is shown by the middle spectrum which has marked gaps between the cyanogen bands (the cyanogen bands are due to the reaction of carbon and nitrogen at high temperatures). This duplication of daylight is so good and the intensity of light is so great that this light is being used by large clothing concerns as a reliable substitute for daylight in making dye fading tests. In fifty hours of testing with the flame are, dyes are faded to the same degree as by about three weeks of ordinary daylight in June in Cleveland. The white flame are is also used for color matching.

3.2 Psychological Value of Color of Light.

It is a part of the highest management of motion picture producers to give actors and actresses a background of reality and not of ghostly unreality. "The living interpreter must have the living scene to do his best." And so it is now recognized by motion picture producers that pleasant scenes need pleasant light in order to get the best out of the artists, as witness the choice of noon daylight, of choice of artificial light. A blue or blue green light is especially good for very sad scenes, such as death bed scenes. Mr. Edward L. Simons, (Trans. 1. E. S. 6. p. 295, Jan., 1911), at a time even before the use of flame arcs, pointed out the effect of blue green light on the actors by saying, "but without the arc lamp it would be pretty hard to go through a real love scene, because everybody would look sick!" Hence the value of the red content of the white light is of great importance to motion picture productions (although photographically of no value for ordinary purposes), it is of value in giving the artist a suitable environment for best artistic expression. Much of the modern film is sensitized to long wave lengths and then the red and yellow light are important.

3-C Relation of Color to "Make-Up" and Film Sensitivity.

In make-up the motion picture artist soon learns that red still photograph black because the ordinary film is not sensitive to red light. For this reason the make-up of a moving picture artist should not have rouge on the cheeks (and it is best to avoid having gold-filled teeth). On the other hand an excessive amount of white clothing should be avoided as this may give rise to halation which results in a blur. Hence yellow, gray and other colors of clothes are used. This halation needs to be avoided carefully with the lights having low latitude on the photograph plate. It is interesting to note that the light of the white flame are shows a very wide latitude on films. This means the picture will show parts highly lighted and dimly lighted with clear definition.

In regard to film sensitivity the ordinary motion picture film has a maximum sensitivity in the violet with considerable sensitivity in the blue and ultra violet and much less in the green and yellow and no sensitiveness in the red. Some motion picture laboratories are making orthochromatic films fairly sensitive to yellow light. For panchromatic photography and color photography, of course, all parts of the light are used. Because of the use of yellow screen with these, special flame carbons can be used not only to give more light, but such light, that a screen of better transparency can be used. This, of course, is very important because color photography film calls for a great deal more light for motion picture work than ordinary films. For motion picture production the yellow flame carbons with special screen have been found very good. Calcium fluoride is used and gives a screen for red and green bands with very little spectrum yellow.

This interesting and valuable paper on "White Light for Motion Picture Photography," is but one of the features that are to appear in the Equipment Section of Motion Picture News. It will pay you to watch for them.

Here With Colored Raw Stock

Mr. Leopold Sutton, special representative of the Siemens, Company of America, has arrived in this country to demonstrate the products of his firm. Raw stock containing the desired tint is one of the specialties of this concern and it is Mr. Sutton's intention to give practical demonstrations of the possible uses of this film. Screen Intensities Analyzed

Mr. L. H. Porter, chairman of the committee on papers, of the S.M.P.E., announces a forthcoming paper on the subject of "Tests of Screen Illumination from Motion Picture Projectors" by W. F. Little, of the Electrical Testing Laboratories, New York.

Some of the points touched upon by the paper are: the light intensity of the screen by measurements taken at 14 different points, representing 16 equal areas on the screen surface.

The measurement of light intensities taken at a larger number of test locations, each test location being a screen. This method makes possible the comparison of brightness changes throughout the field.

A verification of both methods by a single measurement.

A verification of the light flux upon the screens using the one-point method and the standard lamps of known light output. Measurements showing the reproducibility of this method.

An Easy and Effective Way of Increasing the Durability of Motion Picture Film

A Communication From the Research Department of the Eastman Kodak Company

This difficulty sometimes experienced in projecting new film, frequently resulting in unevenness and premature breakdown, may be largely avoided by the application of a thin coating of wax along the perforations. Machines that do this work rapidly and inexpensively are available at small cost.

In the making of the light sensitive emulsion of motion picture film one of the chief ingredients is gelatine, a gelatinous substance which readily absorbs from and gives off moisture to the air. In freshly developed film, the gelatine contains a considerably higher percentage of moisture than seasoned film, and when in this condition is easily affected by heat, tending to render it soft and tacky, particularly in moist atmosphere.

As used in motion picture film, the first point at which the gelatine comes in contact with unusual temperature is at the aperture gate of the projection machine, where the light from the arc is concentrated, producing heat to a degree which softens the gelatine and causes it to collect on the tension springs or shoes where it rapidly dries and forms a film-like deposit.

As the film passes through the projector, the hardened deposit of gelatine continues to accumulate and offer further resistance which produces deep scratches along the perforations, with added possibility as the resistance increases, of the teeth of the intermittent sprocket tearing and changing the perforations, sometimes to an extent where injury to the print is irreparable.

Careful waxing produces, under the action of heat, a smooth and polished surface on the gelatine along the perforations; provides against the liability of strain in the first projection of new prints; materially benefits successive runs, and greatly prolongs the commercial life of the prints.

In view of the benefits to be derived, and of the comparative simplicity with which waxing can be accomplished, the advisability of its use will be readily understood.

New Method of Title Making

After many months of experimentation Ernest Stern reports the perfection of a new method of making titles. Any type face may be used with the certainty of obtaining negatives as perfect as desired. Illustrated backgrounds may also be used in conjunction with the lettering.

Among samples recently received from Mr. Stern is a direct positive illustrated title which he claims as a new accomplishment. He says: "This latter is intended for foreign titles and will allow you to present your foreign prints with the same dignified titles as are used in American copies and does away with the cost of a negative."

Newman Catalog Out

The Newman Manufacturing Co., has recently issued a catalog describing and illustrating their extensive line of motion picture theatre supplies and equipment. The catalogue consists of over 60 pages well printed and arranged. After looking through the pages the reader is astonished at the completeness of the stock and is made to realize that the modern theatre supply house can in reality "equip the theatre from sidewalk to screen and from basement to roof." Nothing would be gained by enumerating the articles displayed. It is sufficient to say that if a manager wishes anything at all for his theatre he can get it at Newmans.

Foreign Music in America

The motion picture theatre of today can justly be considered the greatest competitor to the legitimate stage. Developments in the past five years have made it impossible to prove that music plays a great part in developing the art of the moving picture. But, today American music publishing business was in its infancy, foreign music played an important part in music centers. And today, America can boast of such famous standard orchestral libraries as that of Carl Fischer, G. Schirmer, Belwin, Inc., Walter Jacobs, Sam Fox, Oliver Ditson, Boston Musical Co., Cindy Bettony, M. Witmark, and many others. The editions of these American publishers combined, represent the greatest variety of practical material available in America as a part of the world. Practical musical literature, that's what America possesses. We may not be first in quantity, but we can boast of practical quality.

Most foreign publications are bully, symphony orchestras, without any piano accompaniment parts, or they are of the typical salon orchestra type for string quartets, with flute and clarinet, and in very few instances, for piano. In spite of all this, we can still find a great many musicians hunting for foreign publications. And I have evidence that many foreign publications mentioned on a musical cue sheet. Why all this waste of energy. I don't intend to criticize these music cues from the standpoint of their musical value but I do say that they are impractical for very few music houses in America handling foreign music in insufficient quantities to supply the demands of musicians receiving such music cues which in every instance cause unnecessary delays and inconveniences, because, firstly, foreign publications are too excessive in price and secondly, are in most instances, not obtainable.

Why not resort solely to American music? To say knowledge there can be no better than what is played on the screen, which can not be appropriated by music published in America. By American composers I don't mean compositions written solely by American composers. I mean works written by such men as Liszt, Schiapps, Massenet, Gies, Krusko, Tschakow, Paderewsky, Wagner, Strauss and thousands of others. The works by the above-mentioned artists are world known and represent the finest musical perfection of every angle. Nevertheless, I earnestly suggest that musicians in America don't use the foreign publications by the above masters. But, I do suggest that they only use such compositions which have been reprinted in American publications. Besides, you can be sure of a composition that is well arranged and composed with the point in view to serve American orchestra combinations.

HERE IT IS AGAIN

C. H. STARKMAN, EDMUND, OKLA.

You will find herein application blank filled out for admission into the N. A. M. L. For some time I have been a member in spirit but did not produce the stickles, also, the do-it-and-stick-'em-on plan began working and as a result, this letter, I have taken the News for over a year and I don't see how any up-to-date projectionist or manager can stay up-to-date without it.

Don't you think some common sense judgment should be used in our "Small Town" vs "City Man" debate? Our fellow projectionist, Mr. Stone of Hanover, Ohio, through his statements in the February 14th number of N. A. M. News showed partiality and his ability for imaginative story writing, but as to facts, he was somewhat short.

The Small Towers or any other set of non-de-gumps, who allow conditions to exist as described by Mr. Stone (in all due respect to him) are just as negligent in getting film. The manager of such a place usually gets pictures as old as his machine. If we get anything under one year old it hasn't as yet reached the "supposed-to-be-operator" and his brethren.

The fact is, that practically new film shows sign of punch marks and rough usage. Some say it is that some "City man" on account of his theatre using vaudeville as a specialty and pictures as a "fill in," has to burrow his film through, so that the vaudeville may start on time. Might it not be that some are so heavy laden with "Spot Light" cues and the like that they haven't time to properly fix the projector's cues in their minds and resort to more harsh means? Let's hope not, but yet the "Small Town" man has time to get his cues down pat and a manager who has no acrobats, freaks, magicians or other dancers to rush the "side line" so that the matinee will be over in time for dinner or supper according to the locality or for the set time that the vaudeville begins.

We fellows who show courtesy to the fellows should call off our forces from one another and stick between the managers and call reporters who really do the polishing and splitting, be it Jay or Dude from the "Small Town" or "Big Town."

Reply — First run film has often been found to be well punched-marked, thus there is no reason to blame all the trouble on the man in the small town who never sees film that is less than ten days old. In fact the seat of the trouble is the operator who has no interest in his work nor any feelings for the projectionist who runs the show.

This type of show is being run in many parts of the country.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Kissed in a Harem"

(Street Comedy—One Reel)

A LIGHT comedy which goes merrily on its way because it is built upon an amusing idea is "Kissed in a Harem," the latest release from the Gayety camp. Permits a man to run off of a ship and to escape his danger, disguise himself as a member of the Harem Chorus, and if you have the basis of a workable comedy, here one finds Billy Fletcher, the chief funmaker, in bed with Omar Cayenne, Joe for flirtin' with his beautiful wives. Of course the wild Turk is duly insulted and gives chase. But what does Billy do? Why, he dresses as a woman and joins the wives of the visitor from Salt Lake City. (Harem is the correct word when traveling in Turkey with a flock of women.) It happens that Omar and the figure from Utah meet in the upper chambers, and both are so taken up with each other's wives that they indulge in a free-for-all trade. Thus Billy finds himself in Omar's room again. And he registers cunning by refusing to take off his veil. This so excites the Turk that he charges the other wives out and makes our comedian his favorite. When he finally recognizes Billy, he is hanging over the edge of a skylight. Quite an idea for a one reeler and worked out with plenty of humor by Craig Hutchinson. —Lawrence Reed

Mutt and Jeff Comedies

(Two One Reelers—Fox)

MUTT and Jeff continue to go through their usual antics in the two forthcoming Fox releases, "The Price of a Good Sneeze" and "The Chemist." The former excels. It presents our two friends as the proprietors of a ladies' aesthetic forcing house. Jeff does the teaching and Mutt entertains the pupils. The little fellow draws with a lot of laughs in this "Isadora Duncan," and as he is only drawn with a pen, the pupils won't object to his exaggerated "nature assume." The reel ends when Jeff's wife takes to a lesson and learns her husband's occupation. —The Chemist" is not so original. Jeff drinks a concession which gives him unusual strength and proceeds to beat up Mutt for the remainder of the reel. However bits of the super-exaggerated action presents some good laughing matter. —Matthew Taylor

"The Song of the Paddle"

(One Reel Bruce Scene—Released by Educational)

WHILE there is quite a sameness to this offering being a trip in a canoe down a river from one place to another. This film promises to be rather shallow to its mouth, yet quite a variety of scenic bank ground is provided and there is also an element of human interest in the two men and their canoe as it runs rapidly and dances here and there on the swift flowing water threatening to dump its occupants in the river many times.

The reel has been nicely tinted, and one scene is never held long enough to become tiresome. We call the offering quite a bit above the average scenic release. —J. S. Dickerson

"Such Is Life "Mong Dogs"

(13th Mayer Travelogue)

H Y MAYER'S entry to the ranks of producers has not been heralded with the usual blaze of trumpet when such events take place but the product which he is sponsoring, a combination of cartoon, news weekly, scenic and educational subjects are cleverly designed and interesting releases entitled to recognition and praise.

This reel is especially good. It takes a lot of dogs for its "love idea," and then Mayer draws cartoons of various types of the so-called human race which when they fade out on the screen to pictures of the canines have a striking resemblance to the "pups.

The titles much excellent. There is, of course, no plot, nor any attempt to connect the various strips together into a story. For that reason a "review" is absolutely impossible. Take our word for it, the series so far has been good. —J. S. Dickerson

"Three Christie Comedies"

("Pants and Petticoats"—"Eta-Bite-A-Pic"—"Going, Going, Gone")

Bobby Vernon is the star in a two reel Christie Special reviewed under the title of "Petticoats and Pants." The story of this offering concerns a college cut-up who is sent down on the farm in the hope that he will mend his ways. Here he meets, along with two pals, a couple of chorus girls who take him for a "rube." Later Bobby still posing as a sod buster invades the store the show dawns are working and manages to create a surprising amount of disturbance. The comedy starts with rather well but soon degenerates into a lot of chase stuff, interspersed with views of the Christie chasing girls doing a dancing act in the cabaret with not many real laughs apparent, although it will undoubtedly hold the interest of those who enjoy slap stick and is not offensive or suggestive at any time. Bobby Vernon plays his role with characteristic pep and succeeds as well as the rather pointless business provided for him will allow. The picture is elaborate for a comedy, the attention to detail being very commendable. —C. E. Dickerson

"Youthful Folly"

(Selznick)

OLIVE THOMAS, the actress who plays the heroine in "Folly," her latest production, the story was written by the Selznick star. The story is a rather new angle on the plot, but the incidents offered do not have enough dramatic material to arouse an audience to any extent.

The story begins with a young man left on a country farm where a young and beautiful young woman is confined. The story is based on a collection of short stories, "Folly," and is a novel with the same title. The story is told by the heroine as she relates her life to a young man who has been sent to teach her English. —J. S. Dickerson

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor) we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments received, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 29, 1916.

Screen Acting in Its Highest Form Presented Here

An assertion often made that the masterpieces of fiction are unmade, that the great writers and painters are misunderstood or disregarded. A body blow to this fallacy is the dramatization of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore. As long as the works of this author and other great writers of the past remain to be drawn upon there is no reason why producers should depend entirely upon the written word. As the great playwrights of the stored up the potentiality of their drama. The spectacle is the discovery of the dual personality, in which lies brought out that every soul has its good and evil nature, is given wonderful vitality here — thanks to painstaking direction and the truly inspired acting of John Barrymore. There is no reason to go into detail concerning the story, since most every one is familiar with it. Sulloway's Dr. Jekyll, a scientist, experiments with the two forces in his nature and transforms himself from a benevolent figure into the most depraved wretch imaginable. And vice versa. His evil side triumphs, bringing with it the inexorable climax of death. It is the consummate skill of the star which lifts this picture above any thought of this balance the elements of emotional and psychological detail. We say without fear of contradiction that his is one of the greatest performances of a dual personality ever shown on the screen. He makes the terrible Hyde so repellent that it is positively fascinating. By means of "clever" does this awful character seem to be in a state of induced, but subtle, to suggest that the benefit of the younger pictures is to be seen in the humanization of the strange and fascinating story. As many readers are doubtless familiar with the film, it would be repetitious to go into detail, but suffice it to say for the benefit of the younger audiences that this picture concerns a physician, who, by the aid of a compound he has discovered, is able to transform himself at will into the character of a deprived murderous wretch when, in certain moods, he is brought to lust. The story has created a profound impression in the literary world and did much to establish a vogue for the author and make his fame worldwide. For the purposes of giving the soul of romance figures conspicuously and this feature is exactly commingled with the dramatic situations. Mr. Barrymore's portrayal of the physician-lover in the memory as one of the most outstanding characters in all time. Others who are of course at one remove to the author are Martha Mansfield, Brandon Hurst, Ceci Clavely and George Stevens. John Barrymore's artistic direction has given the story a wonderful atmosphere aside from emphasizing its powerful dramatic strokes.

CATCH LINES

He wanted to yield to all that the film offered but he must not unravel the story. John Barrymore in his greatest triumph. "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," a screen version of Robert Louis Stevenson's powerful story and play.

"SEX"

I. PARKER READ-HODKINSON

Powerful Theme, Clever Acting and Rich Production

The story that is going up is "SEX," which is brought to the screen as the picture was written. "SEX" is a powerful theme, its volume of truth, its sound moral, its well-developed characters are expressed through clever acting. The perfect continuity and presentation of the action that is as sure as the tide. That is what "SEX" is. The production is by Myrtle Siedman, the subject should merit (and will if we're not mistaken) the highest praise.

Mr. Stevenson exposes a new twist in the eternal triangle and one that is true to life. It is remarkably simple, which is perhaps the reason that it appears so genuine. Using the idea of a chorus girl's philosophy to get all there is out of life, even from the inevitable acts of love and marriage, the film is not only entertaining but has been recognized as the best production in this genre in any season. The film, with its powerful theme, has been highly praised. It is truly a masterpiece and has been recognized as a great achievement in the film industry.

And Fred Niblo's direction is in perfect keeping with the story. There is not a scene that is not a scene in the story. The incidents flow like the current of a stream, and the story is carried on to its conclusion as the story demands. The picture has been announced with lavish expenditure, a fact noticeable in the roof garden scenes and those that constitute the mad orgy in the actress' home. Certain details here are overdone, but not enough so that the film is carried out entirely in good taste. But the film is such a powerful one that it is not only entertaining but has been recognized as a great achievement in the film industry. It is truly a masterpiece and has been recognized as a great achievement in the film industry.

“JACK STRAW”  (Paramount-Arcaft)

Obvious Light Comedy Has Amusing Moments

HERE is an exceptionally thin but quite amusing light comedy, this screen version of W. Somerset Maugham’s whimsical play of the same name. Skilled as he is at writing dialogue and investing his characters with a patina of personality, it behooves Mr. Maugham not to ask if he might not have lacked inspiration when conceiving “Jack Straw.” If the original was a gem of its kind then the adaptation is proof that physical action and subtitles cannot take the place of pointed dialogue. But obviousness aside and the fact that it is hopelessly old-fashioned, the picture furnishes a fair quota of interesting moments. William De Mille is clever enough director to have seen to that. It is the “business” which he has injected which keeps it going and overcomes the weakness of the plot. It is a slight thing at best, presenting the ancient formula of an Archduke (a change from a Prince or a Count) traveling coincident in America and assuming the disguise of an Irishman to be near the woman he loves. The fun is derived in watching him pose in his true colors for the sake of humiliating a smugly ambitious dowager who believes he is a genuine fellow. The Archduke is merely another name for the disguise that is usually presented.

Mr. De Mille’s “business” sturdily holds the picture together. And this treatment is rendered necessary, of course, by the fact the story itself is not of sufficient weight to carry it along. The result is the secondary characterization that is thrown to the back of the picture, and high points. The Archduke, played by Charles Ogle and Sylvia Ashton with sure comedy strokes which keep one’s interest at attention. Credit must be given the director for steering clear of burlesque. He stopped just short of that line. As the title role calls for repressive acting Mr. Warwick is a good selection. He isn’t the same Warwick of old, free Perhaps, the story is lost in his work. Doubtless he will strike his stride when the effects of the war are overcome. Length, 5 reels. Lawrence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Robert Warwick, the Paramount-Arcaft star, who appeared successfully in “Secret Service,” in “Mizzoura,” and “The Tree of Knowledge,” will be seen at his best performances in his latest release, the film titled “Jack Straw,” a screen version of W. Somerset Maugham’s light comedy of the same name. Now running at the English on England’s abroad, Mr. Warwick, being a romantic actor, has a subject here which is ideally suited to his personality and talents—it being a whimsical love story. The star plays the part of the hoop skirt wearing hero to be near the girl he loves. He impersonates an Archduke, then, when apparently exposed as a fraud, turns out to be a genuine fellow.

The Ambassador of Pomerania arrives and learns that he is the long missing one of the nation’s heroes. This is the trick played upon him, but when she is furnished proof of the pseudo-iceman’s identity she gladly announces her devotion. The playing is faultless. The picture is a breezy portrait of the title role, assisted by a cast that contains such clever players as Carrell Combs, J. M. Dumont, Charles Ogle and Sylvia Ashton.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever think when the ice-man comes around to your door that he may have a blue blooded ancestor? Perhaps he is a Duke or Count who has taken up his occupation to hide his identity. You never know. Speaking of the iceman, Robert Warwick, the Paramount-Arcaft romantic actor, appears in such disguise in his latest picture, “Jack Straw.” This offering is an adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham’s celebrated light comedy of the same name which met with popular success on the English and American stage. We have talked to you that he plays the part of an iceman in it up to you to guess the rest. He may be a baker’s son who has run away, he may be working his way through college; he may be an Archduke in disguise. You can find out what he is when you come to the next... “Jack Straw” is a pleasing romantic comedy which we are sure will highly interest you.

SUGGESTIONS

Take time Robert Warwick gets into his dramatic roles and appears in some of the most dapper of lighting. So it would be well to announce the fact that this star presents himself as a light comedian, such as “Secret Service.” It is in Robert Warwick that the “Tree of Knowledge” By doing so your patrons will be reminded of the excellent caliber of his plays. Perhaps they will be interested in reading a pleasing romantic comedy which permits him to score his personality and talent to the highest advantage. Play it up humorously and take care to explain the situations and close lines and catch lines. You can make up some clever rhymes around the title and your artist can paint a likeness of the iceman in a most unusual way. Please favor the audience with the information that he has a number of popular successes playing at present on the stage. Mention the director. By doing so your fans will be assisted by a clever product.

“OLD LADY 31”  (Metro)

Tears and Laughter in Excellently Produced Comedy-Drama

With picturization of Rachel Crothers’s stage success, with Emma Dunn, who starred in the play on Broadway, in the star role, falls at the heart strings and knocks at the funny bone through six roles. Emma Dunn, in the original, is the center piece of acting. This is responsible for most of the power of emotion, and Henry Harmon in a characterization well equal to the star’s gives us our laughs. And Director John Ince deserves the credit for the perfect detail and the sentimentally fine tuned supporting cast especially the “girls” in the old ladies home.

With the exception of omitting the romance of the boy and girl, the picture resembles the play. Mr. Ince, however, has been able to enhance upon the incidents in the old ladies home, where the well selected burlesque poor Ahe with their feminine thoughtful, custom petticoat. The picture opens at a high emotional pitch when the old couple are faced to leave their homestead. If the six reels were all like the first Emma Dunn would have your whole audience wringing out their handkerchiefs. From then on the emotion descends until it is in a tone comedy when Ahe becomes the thirty-first “bank” in the old ladies home.

Why the two young characters are introduced is hard to see, as their romance is entirely neglected. The dream of the woman-ester and the happiness the two young people will be pained to the bales of the old ladies home. The character of Ahe may be thought by some to be slightly overdrawn, but she plays her frivolous part very well. And the rest of the cast is up to the high standard set by the old ladies.

The only thing to regret is that the plot is not strong enough to give the story sufficient support. The producer has done a good job of it, and his efforts are rewarded up to this type of picture, and will not lose the pretty becomes and the rapid fire action, you can’t lose on this. Length, 6 reels. Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Another appealing stage play has found its way to the screen in “Old Lady 31,” the successful stage play, which will open at this theater on —. There are only two young people in the entire cast, and all the rest are inmates of the old ladies’ home. But there is not one moment when you will not be laughing or crying—Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon will see to that. Both of these players appeared in the original stage production.

SUGGESTIONS

Better than any stunt is the cast, author and story of this production. The play made a great hit in the theater, and Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon appeared in the original stage production. The play is by Rachel Crothers and John Ince will be pleased with the reading and acting. As a matter of fact, it does not add to the suspense of the appealing scenes which the picture offers. Maxwell Karner and John Ince will be pleased with the selection of actors. The story ends on the old couple resigning to their home after some apparently worthless minute stock has proved to be of some value.

Emma Dunn is one of the most appealing “mother” actresses on the stage today, and her work in this picture is such that the production will be eventually rated as one of the classics of the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Perhaps, after all, the old people are the most interesting! At least they prove so in “Old Lady 31,” the successful stage play, which will open at this theater on —. There are only two young people in the entire cast, and all the rest are inmates of the old ladies’ home. But there is not one moment when you will not be laughing or crying—Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon will see to that. Both of these players appeared in the original stage production.

Role Hardly Fits the Japanese Star

Essue Hayakawa essays a new role in this picture, appearing as a Spanish Matador, instead of a Japanese. The picture is a heavy melodrama of bull-fighters and bandits of Seville. The story is an average one built up around a suggestive theme, and the star hardly satisfies in his Spanish role, although the accuracy of his form and the star, together with his excellent supporting cast, get the utmost out of the many gripping situations.

Essue Hayakawa, the noted Oriental actor, is the star of the new picture, "The Brand of Lopez," a Robertson-Cole production. Mr. Hayakawa essays a new kind of role in this feature, playing the part of a Spanish matador. The Spanish atmosphere is faithfully represented and the whole production is one that filled with vivid melodrama and swift action.

When the dancing girl, a beauty, takes chemise to her body for death. Then he flies to the hills and becomes the leader of a robber band. The child is taken from him, however, and once more he roams the hills.

The picture is one that is different, and will remain long in the memory. There is a wealth of melodrama here, and the success of the story is due to the excellent supporting cast, get the utmost out of the many gripping situations.

"THE BRAND OF LOPEZ"

Society Melodrama Too Heavy for General Entertainment

'THE TATTLERS" starring Madeline Traverse, seems to us saturated with the heroine tears. This is not a typical melodrama of modern society, dealing with the timely question of divorce, in a story that gives the Fox emotional star nothing else to do but "cackle." There are few light spots in the picture and the subtitles are especially over-weighted. The story comes perilously near to ending unhappily, but after murder and suicide the hero marries and all ends well. Nobody will mislead an emotional story, and the plot is a natural tragedy, but, fearing the great majority of "happy ending" fans, has last outrage at the last moment and resolved the situation.

The story is that of a middle-aged woman, who is slandered by gossiping tongues. Madeline Traverse plays the part of this well-to-do American mother. She divorces her husband, who has a weakness for drink and a cella besides, and goes with another man, who promises to marry her, but doesn't. Her son's romance is about to be shattered because of his wronged mother, and the broken-hearted girl, then wakens up to find that she dreamed it all and that her first husband is pruning to be kept out of the cellar.

It is doubtful if such a character as the heroine will awaken sympathy. The star's efforts to attain this emotion are too little pains and over-stated, etc. The cast is not above the average, and one or two little improbabilities and poor details may escape notice. On the whole the cast and direction are not quite big enough to put across a story that is crammed to excess with tears, sighs and screams of anguish. Length, 5 reels.

"MOLLY AND I"

Fox

Shirley Mason Pleases in Entertaining Light Comedy

A lively, as a chocolate wafer, and just as pleasing is "Molly and I," the new Fox production starring Shirley Mason. There is hardly a serious moment in the entire four reels. The star, daring, chaste and vivacious throughout, will make a thorough of heart the director, which helped considerably by getting the most out of some good comedy situations.

The story is not unique, but it affords Miss Mason some fine opportunities to impress her delightful personality upon the audience, "Molly," to gain an inheritance, marries a mystery author, and when he recovers his sight, keeps her identity a secret and tries to win her way into his heart. She impersonates a little Alsatian orphan and employs herself as his housekeeper. pretending not to speak or understand English, the star hence puts over the best spots in the picture, but the director must have the credit.

There is little doubt but that the story is not five reel material. It is padded in the earlier reels, but its padding is pleasantly done. Some subjects are on the slapstick comedy style, and as the picture is not a farce, they appear a little out of place. The star is well supported, especially by Albert Roscoe. There are no big exterior or interiors, but the photography is good.

In general the picture is a wholesome, clean, light comedy, which your patron may enjoy as a suave piece from head to emotional drama. They will be entertained for five reels, and will probably forget all about it, when they remember the little star, who has been given a part that suits her perfectly. Length, 5 reels. — Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most delightful little stars of the screen, Shirley Mason, will be seen at the theatre on Thursday evening in her latest Fox production, "Molly and I." In her last picture, "Her Elephant Man," Miss Mason had the part of a little circus girl. In "Molly and I" she is an ordinary little stenographer, who impersonates a little French maiden to win her way into the heart of the man she loves.

Shirley Brown, or "Molly," as she is nicknamed, is so inherit $10,000 a month. When she returns with the sizable sum, she accepts it as her husband. When she marries the man, she cannot speak nor understand English and there is no end of the complications that ensue. When the man recovers his sight, he tries to win her way into his heart, but "Molly" finally wins him, and after a misunderstanding that threatens to separate the two, the husband and wife are united.

The picture does not pretend to be highly dramatic, but it is a wholesome little comedy that is sure to please.

PROGRAM READER

If you want a little rest from emotional stress, who "quote" with blinking eyelashes, and dainty villain who do their villainy with the help of many cigarettes, then your place is right here in this theatre on Thursday evening. You will see the most delightful little star, Shirley Mason, in a comedy-drama that harmonizes perfectly with this springtime air. We guarantee you no murder, thrashings, or heavy "drama" to make you feel that maybe life isn't worth while. But you will see reveal of one splendid comedy situation on top of the other, and you will see the prettiest, most vivacious little screen star in what is probably the best picture she has ever done.

SUGGESTIONS

You cannot waste your time in any spectacular way or from the story angle. The best bet is the star, who is going to please in this picture. If you have no opinion on HER ELEPHANT MAN or any of the other earlier pictures of the star, mention this fact. Also show as many angles of the star as you can, but avoid the close-up clues, if possible. She looks better in a full-length view. Several close-up clues could be profitably employed dealing with the situation of a girl who marries a blind man. Boost it for what is in an entertaining light comedy, that is bound to entertain.

CATCH LINES

He wanted to "fire" his little housekeeper, but she couldn't understand English, so she came back. All this and a lot more.

Olive Dunmoom married a blind man, so how could he know when he regained his sight that she was a little housekeeper? Nothing morbid. Nothing depressing. Just a clean, irresistible comedy with Shirley Mason. 30 pounds of pep, personality, and pretentiousness in the leading role.

"HIS FIVE FOOT HEIGHTNESS"
(Universal)

Will Get by Except as to Logic

This starts out with Edith Roberts a Texas "Peg o' My Heart" and breezes along as a very entertaining bit of film until they begin doing things with the "papers" after which there is not much to commend until the very tag of the feature when an unexpected twist marries the heroine off to the ranch foreman instead of the English chivalry.

The story is about a Texas girl who falls to a fortune and a title, but before she is fully accepted either by family or the society is revealed to be an impostor by a crooked lawyer who has stolen her father's "papers" and with a dancing ball "dance" she appears in England claiming the estate and title for the, chasity, girl. There is also a counterplot in the person of a soldier who was swindled by Edith out of her Texas ranch. Both plans of course fail.

Most of the English characters resemble those of the famed "Peg" and are rather interesting. Miss Roberts is a very captivating "Lady Ellen" both in cowboy togs and as the lady. She enacts the role with a simplicity that is good and that goes a long way in bringing the picture up from the mediocre class.

So far as the production goes if an audience will overlook the disregard the producers have evidenced to plausibility in completing the plot, this will get over in fine shape. We are afraid, however, that the exciting with the holes in the logic of the thing and that it will suffer in their opinion for that reason.

A very good cast enacts every role and the technical part of the feature is extra good. Some wonderful scenic backgrounds have been secured and there are two or three good camera tricks in different makes which register as new with us. — Length, 5 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE — STORY

"Her Five Foot Heightness" is the title of a new Universal picture starring Edith Roberts which has been given a 1-day engagement at the -— theater beginning —

"Her Five Foot Heightness" plays the role of a Texas girl who, after growing to womanhood finds that she has inherited a title and a fortune. The star appears equally as advantage as the "lady" in Old England. She rides a horse like Bill Hare and wears her own gown as "mammas" and Mr. Duma, send her off on her ranch as a 'cowgirl' who rumps and talks with the cow ponchers on her ranch and has a "woman's" and with a million结合, and her way of a two lovers, one the illustrious son of an old family, the other her own "boy friend" and very nestling niece. Make a lot of the other. We call it an ex-gone good.

In support of the star are such well known people as Katherine Kirkham, Virginia Field, Leonard Clifton and Harold Miller. Some of the most beautiful scenic backgrounds of any picture have been secured in which to match the various sequences.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as the story of a cow girl who thinks she wants to be an English "lady" but finds that her life suits her better. Give Edith Roberts all the boosts you can since she is the picture is worthy of it. Don't dwell much on the plot nor explain the "twist" at the tag. Premise a picture which with the English accent. The acting of Edith Roberts and the advertising. Use plenty of stills, as the picture has a wide range of action and some effective new advertising which will hold the spectator completely fascinated from the beginning to the conclusion, which will hold the spectator completely fascinated from the beginning to the conclusion.
THE BLOOD BARRIER
(Blackton-Pathe)

Action and Suspense Will Hold

THE two elements involved in "The Blood Barrier" that, in our opinion, will do most to recommend the production to its future audiences are action and suspense. The story itself becomes involved in the course of its development. The hero, at the opening, is pitted against the immediate jealousy of a criminal investigator. The heroine is browed by suspicious women, who seem to work from an air of secret malice of state. In overcoming the opposition set up in these two hostile forces, the heroine is thrown into the bed of skins of a complicated story. The acting leaves something to be desired in the way of a wholesome, natural interpretation of the principal characters; and the complications, however, and some instances of stealing perimeters, action helps to keep the interest aroused; and suspensions, injected into the action at various intervals, serve to sustain the interest throughout. The heroine rushes into the courtroom towards the end to submit the problem that has started her heart from the electric wires. "Old stuff," you say. Certainly, but the "old stuff" is given a departure twist because the existence is submitted more deeply as the heroine, on trial, instead of freeing him from the clutches of the "Law." This element of the "unexpeted" is in evidence at various points in the action also. It reinforces the interest, originally stymied by the original and suspended interiors, long shots of attractive setting, humorous touches in the action and subtitles and sensually good photography are also to be found in "The Blood Barrier." Length: 6 reels. E. F. Apple.

THE CAST
Sylvia Breamer
Robert Gordon
William D. Hunt
Eddy Duan
Lola Deal
Margaret Clarke
Gus Alexander

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon will be seen in "The Blood Barrier," which comes to the New Theatre on — and of the coming week. It is produced and directed by J. Stuart Blackton. Beautiful natural settings and handsomely appointed residential apartment and office interiors will add to the interest of the action which takes place within the firm's, from the beginning to end. Major Trevor is in possession of a secret formula of a great value to the government. He sends his beautiful wife to the shore to destroy the hero of the plot. His rival in love, Eugenie Sibrat, is a criminal investigator, commissioned by the villain to capture the man they desire. But nearly every effort to capture the man they desire is made by his friends to destroy the hero of the plot. All the evidence points to Trevor as the murderer. Only one is left to prove that he is not a murderer, and to prove it is enough. A man is the leader of the conspirators and who is the leader of the conspirators is the one who last leaves the house. The formula is discovered and the court with the evidence, is the instrument of revenge against the criminal. Sylvia Breamer is the star of this feature, and she is supported by a cast of recognized names. Beautiful natural settings, handsomely appointed residential apartments, and humorous touches in the action add to the appeal of the story and impress the public with the talent of the cast that interprets it.

SUGGESTIONS

"Stop to play your cell in the display is the tale of a tense campaign under the caption of "What is a blood barrier?" or what is a blood barrier?" which is an excellent and amusing introduction to the campaign-book which Palte has compiled in "The Blood Barrier." It has some useful recommendations and devotes some space to a follow-up tense campaign.

CATCH LINES

He had backed his way through barbed-wire barriers on the Hindenburg line and a blood barrier brought him to a halt. See how at the — on — of this week.

Blood runs deeper than water. See how high a barrier it can raise. Come to the — on — of this week.

THE HARVEST MOON
(Gibraltar-Hilton)

Star Makes Play Entertaining

IT is the adaptation of Augustus Thomas' play that is to blame for the fact that "The Harvest Moon" does not please as well as it might.

The opening reels do not even attempt to get over the reasons for some of the action, and to that reason the whole story seems to be built upon an impossible premise. He re-employs, as his star, does much to overcome the story, for besides being easy to look upon, she is well directed in the emotive scenes. There are some good society scenes in the picture as well as some fine theatrical interiors.

The story opens in a farm-house in Normandy, where an unknown woman dies, leaving a baby girl. A table brings her divorced husband from America, and he takes the child away. We are lured into a number two searching for his wife, who has fled from him because he failed to register her marriage in France, and she is not recognized as his wife. As he is a noble character we cannot see why he caused her all this misery. And we can see why another two, during their eighteen years' search for his wife, does not suspect number one of the kidnapping act and slays for him.

The greater part of the story is laid in America where the daughter is brought up by her supposed father, and the same is supposed aunt. Her real father, now a learned French dramatist, finds her at last, but does not reveal his identity because he is "so happy." Happy despite the stern lady who always was and always will be his rival.

The point of the story is the power of suggestion, and how the suggestion of evil influences a noble soul. The cast supports the star well, with a particularly George A. Leesey. There is plenty of beautiful moonlight to make Miss Kenyon more beautiful. Good acting sets, and photography provide adequate entertainment. Length: 6 reels. M. T. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

One of the most beautiful stars on the screen to-day will be seen at the "The Harvest Moon," which comes to the New Theatre on — and of the coming week. The play is from the pen of Augustus Thomas, one of the authorities of the drama in America, and likewise of the legitimate theatre, and Mr. Thomas has written a theme with which he is well known, for "The Harvest Moon." He is a friend of his with his successful and struggling authors and actresses. Dora Kenyon plays the part of the attractive American girl whose ambition is the stage. She is brought up by the man she supposes to be her father, and his wife, and is instrumental in bringing her and her younger sister together.

Besides some beautiful scenes in a French farm-house, where the story opens, there are some exquisite scenes of the interior of a theatre in New York during the rehearsal of a new play.

PROGRAM READER

Dora Kenyon, who appears at this theatre on — in "The Harvest Moon," is considered by some to be the most beautiful actress on the silver screen today. She will not compare, but it is an undeniable fact that she is beautiful, and besides her beauty, she has unusual historic ability. The play is a study of the leading playwright in America, Augustus Thomas. There are scenes in France and scenes in America, and scenes in which the plot is one of emotion and human interest. The story carries a wholesome point of view of the good, and it is not a novel, and the producers do not go on with their plot to preach a lesson. A notable cast supports the star.

SUGGESTIONS

From the title of this picture you can get some good lobby decoration in the form of bright orange and sunflowers. The Harvest Moon — the time for love and lovers — printed upon them. Throwaways in this form would also be attractive at the window. And Augustus Thomas is such a well-known man that he has many friends who will be at the opening. A possible advertisement for the play — "There is a full moon to-night—an ideal time to see The Harvest Moon" — could be used in the lobby. The tag line might be used in the campaign use the slogan—'What is the ideal time for love-making?' The answer will be at the — theatre on —

CATCH LINES

Half moon, full moon, quarter moon, but never such a moon for lovers as the "Harvest moon time."

A CECIL B. DEMILLE PRODUCTION

By William DeMille
PRESENTED BY JESSE L. LASKY

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

A story that echoes in the corridors of the heart.
A production that amazes with its splendor.
IN "The Cost" the beating heart of America is laid bare by a master hand. You are carried on the wings of an absorbing story from the quiet of the Middle West to the turmoil of the city. You plunge into the maelstrom of Wall street, into the shams of society. You see the struggles, the victories and the failures of living human beings.
Houdini holds the world's record for underwater endurance. That's why the underwater scenes in "Terror Island" mark the supreme height of melodramatic thrill and accomplishment.
IN "TERROR ISLAND," the most thrilling melodrama ever made, you will see feats of daring never before accomplished by man.

Houdini has been the biggest drawing card vaudeville ever had. He outdoes himself in this production.

The feats he has done the world over in vaudeville are child's play compared to those he does in this.

Here's Another "The Witching Hour"
A Great, Sweet,
Here is a big play made into a sincere and beautiful motion picture. It is frankly a directly-told story of the human heart—the heart of a girl; the heart of a father; the heart of a lover.

You remember—all exhibitors do—"The Witching Hour." You remember the basic theme as embodied in the title "As A Man Thinks." Here it is again as the basis of another play by the same celebrated author: that the human mind and many minds working together can make a good woman bad.

This is a big story of a beautiful girl tormented by those around her who "remembered her mother."

"The Harvest Moon" has a meaning that is developed in the story. It is the wonderful moment of maturity. It is the moon of the lovers of all ages; the moon of romance and achievement.

Frankly, none of us can imagine what a wonderful story Augustus Thomas has developed or how beautifully Doris Kenyon acts it. Nor can you imagine how deftly and tenderly J. Scarle Dawley has directed it. You must see the picture to do so.

Prints of "The Harvest Moon" have been shipped to all Hodkinson managers and now await you.
"The Harvest Moon" is more than a star, a story and a director. It is a human voice, it is many real, gripping, touching human emotions caught and transferred to celluloid. It is a group of well-chosen actors forgetting that they are actors while they grip you as very human beings.

Pre-releases of "The Harvest Moon" can be had for April 25. This first Gibraltar production has been five months in the making. No one has hurried or shirked. Perhaps that is the reason for the strength and the beauty of the screen version of this famous play.

"King Spruce" is a story of the Big Outdoors. Full of the smell of the forests. Thrilling with the excitement of breaking a huge log-jam; smoky with the thrills of a vast forest fire. Aquiver with the leaping blood of battle. And never ignoring a tender, clean love story.

That equitable WANDA HAWLEY contract: Atlanta was “Influenced by our declining to ask series purchase at outset.”

SOUTHERN ENTERPRISES, INC.
ATLANTA, GA

April 3rd, 1920.

Mr. J. S. Woody,
General Manager,
Realart Pictures Corp.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Woody,

We are mighty pleased to advise you that we have booked your first starring vehicle featuring WANDA HAWLEY in "MISS HOBBS"—covering our entire circuit of theatres to the extent of the maximum run for any picture we play.

Perhaps you will be interested in knowing that we did not adhere to our policy of requiring a preview in contracting for this feature (though it is seldom we make such an exception), because of our confidence in REALART and the knowledge of MISS HAWLEY'S ability and the popularity which she enjoys in our houses through her recent portrayals in Dr. Moyo and other productions. It hardly seemed essential in this instance. We might add that our judgment was further influenced by your policy of declining to ask for signed contract for the series of HAWLEY pictures at the outset.

Indeed, we welcome and acknowledge the opportunity which has been granted to us as former customers (designing up for the first presentation featuring MISS HAWLEY as a star, because she is precisely the sort of girl who so quickly gains the favor of the public and one who depicts her characters with surpassing skill. One of the film's finest.

For your information, we call your attention to the attached memorandum, which should show without doubt our faith in your judgment of the merits of MISS HAWLEY'S first attraction. Note that we have booked this for a week's run in our three key cities, while we have also given it dates of split weeks for eleven other of the most representative territories which function under the direction of the Southern Enterprises.

We will be pleased to advise you of the assured success which we shall enjoy with the featuring of this attractive little star.

Meanwhile.

Very truly yours,
Dan Michalove

OUR OPINION

The public has come to the point where they desire entertainment of a nature that is more applicable to the kind of lives they lead. They will find this to suit to in the majority of houses. The material is interesting, and has been pleasing to the majority of houses. It is much along the lines of the story of Geraldine Larson, Bessie Barriscale and her giving of a pleasant performance. She has been sustained with a supporting cast of the story and the staging of the play is pleasing and in keeping with the story.

STORY OF THE PLAY

An actor before Robert should believe that there was nothing in life worth while and find the joy in it when saws and scythes and other work was what they most desired. The story of Geraldine Larson, Bessie Barriscale and her giving of a pleasant performance.

BY THE EDITOR

YOU can't force a good man to stand still, can you? They just keep moving right ahead—even after you think they have reached the top. Don't they?

For some fellows the top rung of the ladder just seems to be a temporary breathing place while they look around for a taller ladder.

Which brings us to the point of mentioning that while it may not be the longest story in this week's News, the most interesting account to us is the recital of Arthur James' latest discovery of a taller ladder.

"Arthur Jimmy" is going into business for himself—and on the same big scale that he has been accustomed to placing other folks' business. Arthur will begin operations within a few weeks, getting off to a flying start with offices in New York, Washington, and Chicago. Independent advertising and publicity will assuredly be possible on a scale never before attempted.

Which only proves, as we said at the outset of this column of small talk, that a good man can't stand still even at the top. The handling of the big Fox national and trade campaigns seems close enough to the top to suit us—but there's always another step for a good man. Sold!!

We are almost ready to hint to you that Arthur will soon be ready to hint to you concerning some "Super-fug" accounts—to use film phraseology. For a little while his whispered news to us which indicates that the James organization will be wide-spread in scope, handling some of the choicest general publicity accounts in the country in addition to such picture propositions as may come up.

Proving, that in the case of a good man our wishes for good luck are hardly needed. But nevertheless, here they go.

To you—Jimmy!

The Ritchey Objective

To produce a motion picture poster vastly superior to any other on the market, is, and always has been, the main concern of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. To produce such a poster it has developed and built an organization so complete and finished in its every branch that its resultant work is as perfect as it is possible to make it. As an incidental result of these things the output of RITCHEY posters has risen to a tremendous volume. That has been an inevitable result, for there has always been a tremendously large demand for really great motion picture posters. The RITCHEY poster fulfils that demand.

It is based upon a sound knowledge of crowd psychology, and its message is voiced in a language that the general public speak and understand. It is a product of intensive and collective effort, and it is designed to sell seats that would otherwise remain unoccupied.

We sing the praise of the RITCHEY poster— but it sings the praise of the photoplay it advertises!

Watch the Germans!

INTERNATIONALIZATION of the film industry is only a vague term as yet.

In characteristic American fashion we are looking largely at the market within our shores and mostly upon the immediate present.

We wish to introduce here some facts not well known perhaps to the American trade; and then to ask the reader to look ahead two years and see if he does not agree with our conception that:

In 1922 the film industry will be thoroughly internationalized and the supremacy in the world field will be held either by the United States or Germany.

At that time Russia will be opened up, and there will be under way the development of as many theatres as this country now possesses. If Russia produces her own pictures, she will, like the United States, be able if necessary to subsist upon her own self-contained theatre field.

France will have added one thousand modern theatres; Great Britain at least 1500 new theatres; Japan several hundred (we are already advised of the formation of a large consolidation in Japan, one company controlling 400 houses, which houses are to be modernized at once); Spain, Italy, the Central States, Australia and the Far East will be in line with the remarkable theatre development arrived at here and withheld from Europe on account of the war.

This new world market will make heavy demands upon production. There will be room for many pictures from many countries. There will be sharp competition unless producer control develops upon a large scale. In the past the United States has supplied almost entirely its own theatres and at least 80% of the foreign market. What will we do in the future?

Let us see what Germany is doing.

Professor Dr. Leidig, of Berlin, the Government authority, says that Germany today has one hundred producing firms, three thousand theatres and a daily picture house attendance of one million people. We are told that there are at least 60 producers with a regular output.

These producers have, many of them, been producing during the war and with increased activity since the signing of the armistice.

Their combined output today includes about 15 features a week—considerably more than the present and reduced feature output of the United States. We might add, for the benefit of our foreign readers, that the reduction here is for the purpose of quality only.

Ufa, the leading concern in Germany, is a combination of ten producing firms, including such well-known trade names as Nordick, Union, Messter, May, Maxim, etc. Ufa has large resources, including the ownership of its exchanges; Ufa owns outright over one hundred and fifty theatres in Germany, Holland and Switzerland, and controls as many more. The Government owns a third of the stock of Ufa and when Germany believed she was winning the war this concern was made ready to serve as a powerful producer and distributor of propaganda films.

Considering this one firm alone whose size will compare favorably with any film organization in the world, it is well to remember that by all present indications Germany will have commercial control of Russia. If so, it is as probable that Ufa will control the Russian film market.

There are a number of other German producers of consequence, including Decla, which several weeks ago absorbed Bioscope and took over the famous Hagenbeck menagerie and garden at Hamburg.

THE most significant thing about German production today is the fact that it is deliberately guided by international standards. We have seen stills from a set of eight-reel superpictures recently made by the director, Joe May, who may be styled the Griffith of Germany. The sets would do credit to "Intolerance." Money has been lavished upon them. There is an utter absence throughout the provincial. These pictures were evidently made for a world market. They were produced by May at Wilmersdorf, where a large and costly film city has been built.

"Du Barry," another German superpicture, is acclaimed by the Italian press to be the most notable picture of the past five years.

"Veritas Vincit," by Lubitsch, another director of great ability and resources, is likened to "Intolerance" in scope and artistry.

The former price of production in Germany of only 30,000 marks per picture has been raised to 250,000 marks, and in the case of the new and very pretentious pictures to as much as 1,000,000 marks.

As for stars Germany has an imposing aggregation, including names famous in Central Europe like Genny.
Porten, Mia May, Poli Negri, Zella Moya, etc. Their beauty and talent—and there are many others—suggest that they are quite capable of achieving, perhaps exceeding, the international popularity of our own leading film stars.

All of the best German authors are creating directly for the picture. Through the film Authors' Society of Berlin some two thousand novels are now available for the screen. At the present time large editions of paper covered novels are issued simultaneously with the photoplays.

We give these few facts as evidence of our surmise that Germany is well under way, both as regards quantity and quality of production, to compete with this country in the near future. There has been no contact moreover as yet with our pictures, nor any inspection trips of our studios, nor have the German studios because of the exchange rate availed themselves of our recent advances in studio equipment.

And now for economy in production—a factor which in the near future will prove as decisive, in competition, as production resources.

Genny Porten, the highest priced star in Germany, receives just $7,000 a year. The highest priced cameraman gets $15 a day.

More important still, in the way of all around efficiency and economy, is the fact that studio work is hard and sincere. The studios open at eight o'clock in the morning and at critical stages in the development of the play the work goes on for twenty-four hours, with no rest period to follow.

We have no criticism to make of production in Los Angeles. There is too much of a cry of waste from lay people who know too little of picture making. The leading studios in this country today are expertly built, equipped and managed. Picture making is slow, be-
Films Illustrating British Industry Tour World

Exhibition Leaves England in Three Sections on Trip to Aid Trade

IN a special section of the weekly edition of the London Times of recent date, an account is given of the World Tour of Exhibition of British Industrial Films. This tour was organized for the purpose of promoting British industrial expansion and developing British export trade. A number of British chambers of commerce as well as a great many British firms are participating in the tour, which plans to visit the principal cities of western Europe, Canada, United States, Mexico, South America, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India, and Egypt.

The plan was first conceived in 1912 but with the outbreak of the war in the following year activities ceased entirely, although the Motion Picture Exhibition of British Industries, Ltd., had already been formed and a number of contracts signed. With the cessation of hostilities, the company recommenced its work, with a result that the tour was ready to start in January of this year.

It is expected that through the tour buyers abroad will observe demonstration that British industry is unimpaired, and that British factories can supply many of the world's needs, from ships to pins and needles.

The explanatory matter of the films is in four languages, viz., English, French, Spanish, and Portuguese. Free invitations to the exhibitions at the cities visited will be issued through the local chambers of commerce and other official organizations. A programme and timetable will accompany each invitation, so that the recipient may attend at the time the films which particularly interest him are being shown. Moreover, provisions are being made for inquiries being dealt with in a methodical manner.

Prior to proceeding overseas, exhibitions were given in important British centres, and the tremendous interest and enthusiasm which has been aroused augurs well for the success of the exhibitions abroad.

At Sheffield on January 16th, the municipal authorities combined with the Cutters' Company, the chamber of commerce, and leading manufacturers to give an enterprise a most successful "send-off"; while at Glasgow on January 23rd, under the auspices of the chamber of commerce, influential business men and their friends, even at the somewhat inconvenient hour of 11 a.m., crowded one of the finest and largest halls in the city. At Birmingham on the 29th inst., also under the auspices of the chamber of commerce, the applications for admission to the exhibition greatly exceeded the accommodation available.

Harry Crandall Chosen President of Associated

Harry M. Crandall of Washington, D.C., was elected president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., during the course of a meeting of the Board of Directors held this week at the offices of the organization. Mr. Crandall succeeds Messmore Kendall, whose resignation as president was accepted by the Board in view of the fact that extreme pressure of other business made it impossible for him to continue in an executive capacity.

Mr. Crandall's office as treasurer is to be filled by H. H. Welsch, who will now be secretary and treasurer, as well as a member of the Board of Directors.

A number of important negotiations were virtually closed during the two-day meeting.

Mr. Quiby stated that the changes in executive personnel would be a severe test of the organization. He is known as having been negotiating with many important individuals and factors in the industry during the past few weeks, and during his tour, the Associated Exhibitors are holding off from making definite announcements until they have lined up proper Associated Exhibitors enough to make the organization a leader among the "big fellows" from the moment the first gun is fired.

According to members of the Board of Directors, Mr. Kendall's resignation was accepted with regret. It is understood that Mr. Kendall stated that no matter what his personal wishes in the case might be, he felt that the affairs of the Capitol Theatre and affiliated business interests required so much of his time that he could not possibly do justice to the Capitol and to the Associated Exhibitors at the same time.

Mr. Kendall explained that, inasmuch as the Capitol Theatre Enterprise already is engaged in the production of pictures to a small extent and, undoubtedly, will go into production on a much larger scale soon, he felt that such activities would not be consistent with a continuation of his holding office in the Associated Exhibitors.

The tour is divided into three sections, the first of which is known as the Latin-American section. The advance agent and manager of this section will personally accompany it through South America. These men are British subjects who have lived in the Latin-American countries and who will be prepared to explain the films and answer all inquiries in the language of the country visited. The following itinerary through South America has been planned:

Mamaos, Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Rio Grande do Sul, Monte Video, Asuncion, Buenos Ayres, Rosario, Santiago, Valparaiso, La Paz, Lima, Guayaquil, Panama, Bogota, Caracas, Santa Cruz, Mexico City, Tampa.

The second section will leave for South Africa, India, New Zealand and Australia, Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, East London, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Salisbury, Perth, Adelaide, Melbourne, Auckland, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay and and Sambar are some of the cities which will be visited in these countries. The third section will remain in western Europe, Canada and the United States. In Europe, Paris, Geneva, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, will be shown the films and in Canada they will be exhibited in Halifax, St. John (N.B.), Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, and Vancouver. In this country it is planned to stop at Seattle, San Francisco, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, New York, Baltimore, New Orleans, and Galveston.

Besides the world tour, which is now under way, a second motion picture exhibition illustrating British manufactures is now being organized. This tour, however, will not leave the British Isles and will confine its activities to 200 cities and towns at home. A second world tour is also contemplated.

Among the prominent public bodies and British firms who are participating in the present tour are: the British Empire Theatre Committee, of Sheffield; the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce and Manufactures, Inc.; Arthur Balfour and Co., Ltd., of Sheffield; Sanderson Brothers and Newbold, Ltd., of Sheffield; B. bull, Mary Pickford in Pollianny,” at the Auditorium.

At another time, by large newspaper advertisements, Mr. Branhram announced that on Saturday, March 27, an airplane would start from Minneapolis and pass to the show at the Auditorium. The engine failed at the hour the flight was to be made, so Ruben and Finkelstein who had been carefully watching the activities of their opponent, secured a plane and sent into the air Miss Marie Gale, who took the part of “Pollianny” in the stage play at the Shubert Theatre. The advertisement in the Sunday papers the day after the flight carried the announcements by Ruben and Finkelstein that Marie Gale had made the spectacular flight and the advertisements added that everyone should make it a point to see the “Pollianny” stock production at the Shubert theatre.

Whether Minneapolis is to be benefited by the unprecedented competition is a much discussed subject among those who devote a good deal of time to moving pictures in this city. They point out that Finkelstein and Ruben are putting on extraordinary good pictures at their downtown theatres the same week the United Artists are opening their theatre. For instance, here is the Ruben and Finkelstein bill for the week beginning April 1: New Garrick, Norma Talmadge in “The Woman Gave,” first showing in Minneapolis; Strand, Charles Ray in “Mam’zelle Archy, Andy,” first showing in Minneapolis; New Lyric, Mary Miles Minter in “The Green Gables,” first showing; and on which thousands of dollars is being spent in advertising; New Astor, Mary Pickford in “The Jinks,” first showing in Minneapolis; New Unique, F. L. Sanborn’s “Desert Gold,” first showing in Minneapolis, and at the New Garden, as was previously mentioned, the two Pickford pictures both of which have been shown before here.

One reason why Mr. Branhram believes that success is assured is the fact that the Auditorium, being four blocks from the center of the downtown theatre district, provides ample space for the parking of cars while in the downtown sections, the streets are more or less congested and parking space is difficult to find. The Auditorium, in its presentation of such a large number of high class attractions in the past, has come to be patronized by the best class of the city, especially by people who use their cars to attend the symphony concerts and the recitals of well known musicians and singers of the country.

Advertising Totals Break All Records

The campaign of the two theatres for patronage during the Easter week advertising mediums, hitherto, unused, have been resorted to. St. Paul newspaper have been carrying large advertisements of the two competing exhibitors in Minneapolis and the interurban street cars operating between Minneapolis and St. Paul are carrying large cards attached to the windows of the cars. Both exhibitors are using a large number of “24” sheets for their billboard work all over the city. Minneapolis newspapers, the week preceding the opening of the Auditorium, never used such heavy advertising from theatre exhibitors in Minneapolis. The advertisements aggregated as many as several pages in a single issue.

Mr. Branhram, having a wide acquaintance among newspaper workers in Minneapolis, mailed out hundreds of invitations and passes to the editorial men and their families for admittance to the theatre during the opening week.

Some impartial moving picture men of the city, particularly those attached to the exchanges and therefore unbiased in their opinions as to what success the opposing factions will have, point out that the Auditorium will be closed to pictures Wednesday afternoon and evening, April 7, where.

Love-Making Gets on Exhibitors’ Nerves

There has been so much kissing and love-making at the theatres of Watertown, N. Y., that the proprietors are using slides asking the young people to refrain from the practice. The situation has at least been pointed to the press of northern New York to such an extent that it has been freely commented on in both the serious as well as the lighter vein.
A.M.P.A. and Cheese Club Celebrate April 1st
The combined membership of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and the Manhattan Cheese Club had a delightful April fool joke foisted on them Thursday noon at their luncheon at the Café Boulevard, when Doralina, world famous originator of the "hula," Larumia, shiver, and other dances, brought in her "gang" and offered the boys some entertainment. The entire affair was a complete surprise to everyone in the two clubs. The Cheese Club boys, composed of newspaper men and press agents, had been invited to have lunch with the Advertisers. N. T. Gruimmel had made a certain promise, which he kept, and then same. He sprung the tongue-on-the-gang when he introduced Doralina, who in turn introduced a friend of hers, and everybody's, gone but not forgotten, and brought back just for this party. His name is Walker.

Buffalo Managers Will Discontinue Office
At a meeting of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association in the Chamber of Commerce, Saturday afternoon, March 20, it was decided to discontinue the office in the Chamber of Commerce building and in the future put all the affairs of the association into the hands of the New York Reporting Agency of New York City. Under this arrangement the local exchange men will work in cooperation with New York and Albany. Warner Bates, who has been executive secretary, will no longer act in that capacity, but will continue as secretary of the Wholesale Merchants Association.

Boston Organist to Receive $10,000 Yearly
What is believed to be the largest salary contract ever offered a theatre organist has just been signed in Boston. The contacting parties were Nathan H. Gordon, proprietor of the great chain of Gordon houses, and Arthur Martell, an organist well known in music circles. The figures to which Mr. Gordon and Mr. Martell have alluded are $10,000 and under the terms the organist is engaged to play for the theatres of the Gordon circuit for the coming 10 years at an annual salary of $1,000.

Committee Enlarged by Two New Members
Previous to the departure of Adolph Zukor and William A. Brady for Europe, a meeting of the Americanization Committee of the motion picture industry of the United States was held, with Hon. Franklin K. Lane presiding. It was decided to enlarge the committee, and Hon. J. Ham-ton Moore, Mayor of Philadelphia, and
Col. Arthur Woods, of the Americanism Commission of the Legion of Honor, were invited to join the committee.

Bills Aimed at Deposits Before Assembly
TWO measures which if passed by the Assembly where little opposition is expected, will have a far-reaching effect on the motion picture industry in New York state, were passed by the State Senate on April 7. The first, if passed, will permit children between the ages of 10 and 16 to go unaccompanied to picture houses provided the theatre supplies a matron to care for them.

The second bill protects the exhibitor from the so-called cash deposit, providing that the person making the deposit and the person holding it, apart from all other funds.

Aimed at the same subject, an association known as the Contract Indemnity Association of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was formed on April 7. The body plans to guarantee contracts between members of the State League and producers. A. A. Pennyvessey of Rochester was chosen chairman. Many prominent exhibitors are on the executive committee.

Albany, April 7.—The financial re-gated by order of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, according to action taken here today, empowering the officers, from Sydney S.

Cohen, president, down, to do so. The assets and liabilities of these concerns will be inquired into as well as the methods by which they employ in doing business. Later on, and following the investigation a report will be made to each member of the State League, advising of the concerns which are financially responsible.

First National Convention Will Be Well Attended

Many Exhibitors to Turn Out for its Annual Meeting at Chicago

INDICATIONS that a score of representative theatre owners from practically every territory will attend the annual convention of members of First National Exhibras' Circuit to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 20, are evidenced through letters and telegrams, seeking additional details about the sub-franchising plan coincident with the work of the Associated First National Pictures organization.

It is toward the perfection of all details regarding the convention that the executive committee of First National and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, composed of members of the Circuit, are bent in every effort in a series of conferences new being held in New York City. Mapping out the proportionate method of sub-franchising the various districts is being accomplished by a large statistical staff, which has been at work for months under the directors of the executive committee, while the Exhibitors' Defense Committee is steadily formulating plans to put before the convention in April.

Prospects are that the convention will be by far the largest of any in the history of the organization. Every section of the United States will be represented by the motion picture interests of the respective territories, and it is likely that exhibitor sentiment throughout the country will manifest itself at this gathering. It is certain that the relative territorial situations in so far as motion pictures are concerned will be given the fullest discussion and it is far more certain that an index as to public attitude toward admission prices and the various types of productions will likewise be gained.

Question as to whether the convention will be confined to franchise holders has been ended with the positive announcement that the gathering will be conducted after the same fashion that characterized the meeting held in 1919 in New York at the Astor. Executives from every First National exchange will assemble for the general consideration of exchange problems. The striking results brought about by the meeting of the managers in 1919 is taken to be certain evidence that the newer and more important problems of exchange management existing today will be solved in a most gratifying manner.

Exhibitors making inquiries as to whether the convention was entirely in the interests of arriving at an equitable basis of sub-franchising the various territories have been informed that while this matter will doubtless loom up as one of the most salient features of the meeting, various other matters of vital import will necessarily play a big part in the convention.

Robertson-Cole in Another Realty Deal

RIGHT on the heels of last week's announcement that Robertson-Cole had closed plans for the erection of a twelve-story building in an "L" shape fronting on both Seventy Avenue and Forty-Eighth Streets, news of another deal broke in reality circles this week. The valuable corner parcel at Forty-Eighth Street and Seventy Avenue has not been round results. The work of building will boast of a third more space and square proportions instead of the "L" shape originally decided. With office space at a premium in New York and reality values finding unheard of levels, last week's announcement coupled with the news of this new deal caused considerable interest in New York film circles as evidence of the resources possessed by Robertson-Cole.

Probably the most significant feature of First National's plans pertaining to the convention is the fact that a department of statistics has been diligently at work determining percentage allotments for every independent theatre in the country. This work has been made for the new sub-franchising plan and upon it rests the basis for arriving at figures that not only insure the highest possible returns to exhibitors but at the same time apportion the quotas in such manner that comparative instances will show that overcharging is safeguarded and that each exhibitor will be made a proposition that best insures the interests of his particular theatre, although a uniform and general method of arriving at estimates has been accomplished.

This department has been at work for a period of weeks, and through its careful survey of every theatre in the United States the many intricacies that enter into the paying and imperturbable of various theatres' successes have been brought out with surprising results. The work of this bureau has necessitated intense effort in behalf of the cause of bringing to exhibitors what is declared to be one of the most equitable and helpful propositions ever evolved in the history of the industry. Authorities claim that this is the first time a general research of such scope and thoroughness has ever been attempted. To exhibitors, this compiled information which will be brought forth in concise form at the convention is perhaps the most unique manner that awaits full disclosure at the meeting.

In addition to the sub-franchising work, and the announcements of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, the question of First National's alliance with additional independent producers is also a proposition of great import. It is said that a number of new production propositions fostered by independent directors, stars and producers, submitted to members of First National, will be given a full bearing at the convention. These offers have come to the Circuit during the last four weeks, and it is almost a certainty that before a final announcement can be made members of the Circuit at the convention will discuss the various possibilities, after which the information will be made public.

The following First National franchise holders will either be present or represented at the convention:

The following exchange managers will be present with one or more of their salesmen:

Exhibitors Will Organize for Defense

Willard C. Patterson Sends Out Call to Meet Alleged Invasion by Organizing

CALLS for a meeting of every independent exhibitor in the country to be held in Chicago on April 26 are being sent out this week by Willard C. Patterson, president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, and manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion of Atlanta, Ga., for the organization of an Exhibitors' Defense League to evolve a national plan of action in defense of their individual interests against the activities of producing and distributing concerns that are buying, leasing or building theatres in various territories.

"According to advices from Atlanta, Mr. Patterson has sent letters and telegrams to hundreds of independent theatre owners throughout the country, outlining a general plan of action, which he proposes as a tentative basis for exhibition consideration of the most direct and practical solution of the situation. As the president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, which has three hundred and seventy-five exhibitor members, Mr. Patterson has been a prominent figure in Southern theatre operators' affairs, especially in directing that organization's offensive against representatives of producing and distributing companies, he declares, have sought to invade the theatre field as competitors of independent exhibitors.

"Theatre competition from producers," he says in a statement accompanying the announcement of his call for a national meeting of independent exhibitors in Chicago, "appears, from the developments since publication three weeks ago of my article, that it was time for a showdown between the independent exhibitor and the producer factions which, even now, are competing with them in a small way, conversely, and which have plans definitely made for very widespread and formidable opposition."

"Where are we at as independent exhibitors? How long will it be until big producing units whose pictures we are showing today as independents, step into our lobbies and announce that they have leased, bought or built a house across the street and that they need their own pictures for their own screens, and that we can go to the devil or anywhere else we please for a film service that will replace their productions on our individual and independently owned screens?"

"I am president of an organization with a membership of three hundred and seventy-five independent exhibitors, and this is exactly the condition and menace that confronts every one of them as something serious to be considered, discussed and settled, finally in the very near future. There is no longer any use in ignoring our eyes and saying that this producer-exhibitor competition can never amount to anything of consequence. It is that very attitude of passiveness by the independent exhibitors which is making possible the successful and uncontrolled carnivore-like activities of some of the distributor ships of every theatre community where present independent exhibitors operate at anything like a profit commensurate with their investments and abilities as shownmen."

"The three hundred and seventy-five independent exhibitors, who have chosen me as their president and leader, want to know why this producer-exhibitor idea is possible, and why the responsibility of every theatre community where present independent exhibitors operate at anything like a profit commensurate with their investments and abilities as shownmen, and we have a right to know the facts if this money or any part of it is being used by these producers and distributors to purchase theatre leases or the brick and mortar with which to build theatres and to operate in competition with us as independent exhibitors."

Censorship a Dead Issue in Portland

In February women of Portland, Oregon, were meeting daily, yes, even twice a day, in various clubs and organizations. And in all their resolutions, which were numerous and which collectively and individually found their way into the columns of each and every local paper, the motion picture industry was condemned as showing films harmful both from the moral and intellectual standpoint.

In March, scarcely one month later, a new form of censorship provided for in an ordinance drawn up by the motion picture managers themselves, had been adopted by the city council. The women of the city, under the various organizations belonging to the city federation of women clubs, comprising more than 200 associations, were using the motion picture houses for civic purposes.

Censorship became a vital issue in Portland with the showing of the film, "The Thirteenth Commandment." Two scenes, one of which Ethel Clayton is shown selling various pieces of lingerie and one of a "close-up," were ordered eliminated. The film was cut according to orders given by the secretary of the board of censors but because he believed the censor had not been impartial in making the elimination. At Raleigh, near the Columbia theatre in which the production was booked to show the following day, had the cuts made exactly as ordered and not as probably intended. The result was that in the close-up scene the public was left wondering what had happened, and believing perhaps the worst, whereas if more had been cut as the exhibitor would ordinarily have done of his own accord, the matter would have caused no great alarm to either manager or censor.

Retaliation was immediately obtained by the secretary of the board who issued a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Hill, branch manager for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in Portland. The warrant was issued because she found Mr. Hill had released the film without the signature of the censor board as the law required, a practice which during recent months had been entirely overlooked. Mr. Hill asked for trial by jury and after a long and tedious court session in which a score of prominent club women testified as to the immoral effect of "The Thirteenth Commandment" and other pictures, he was declared not guilty. A newspaper and screen advertising campaign was immediately devised by C. S. Jensen, of Jensen and Herberg thes (Continued on page 345)

Crandall Explains Americanization Work
Chairman of Exhibitors’ Branch Urges Co-operation in Campaign

HARRY N. CRANDALL of Washington, D. C., chairman of the exhibitors’ branch of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry has just returned from a trip which brought him as far west as California. He was in conference with various exhibitors in nearly all the larger cities of the country.

Mr. Crandall was very enthusiastic over the way that the exhibitors of the country are taking hold of the Americanization program of the motion picture industry and has set to work on a very elaborate plan in the hopes that every single exhibitor in the country will get behind the movement and will make it a success.

The following statement has been sent out by Mr. Crandall to exhibitors this week:

"I have just returned from a trip across the country and am proud of the way that the exhibitors of the country are responding to the appeal of our government in its fight against Bolshevists. I find that the exhibitors are solidly behind this movement and intend to make a success of it.

"However, there yet remains a great deal of work to be done and it is for this reason that I am writing to you today.

"Several months ago the United States government, through a joint Senate and House committee on education called upon the motion picture industry of this country to mobilize its forces and to fight the great spirit of unrest that was sweeping over the country. To have been selected for this important work was the result of the wonderful results that the industry obtained for the government during the war. We were called upon at that time and we proved to be 100 per cent Americans and I do not know of a single exhibitor in this country, and there are nearly 17,000, who did not prove to be a true American.

"We have now the first real opportunity to show to this country that we are a great force and that we can be united to fight the enemy. The producers have agreed to make fifty-two pictures and they will be produced at the rate of one a week. It is our duty to see that we show every single one of these pictures in our theatres. Already the various stars are at work competing against each other for the honors of having made the best picture. The directors are at work in the various studios throughout the country making these pictures which will be released through the various distributing companies.

"I want to impress upon you at this time that not a single cent of profit is to be made by anyone connected with the industry. Instead, I know that producers and distributors, for these thousands of their own dollars in order that this campaign shall be a success.

"I also want to impress upon the exhibitors the importance of using the trailers that have been made. They are now being sent out by the various distributing companies and should be used at the end of all big feature pictures."

"The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior, and chairman of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry spent much time preparing and writing these trailers himself. The trade papers of February 28th very kindly devoted much space and reproduced the quotations. If you have not already done so, will you not use these trailers made at once containing the subject matters of these trailers and show three or four at each performance. In my recent trip throughout the country I found that many exhibitors were doing this and were meeting with good results."

Saengers Credited With Publicity Stunt

WHAT is described as the greatest press-agent story ever put over in the South has been running daily in New Orleans for over a week, or more precisely, since the Federal Trade Commission instituted its investigation of the Saenger Amusement Company on charges of operating in restraint of trade. For three weeks, the New Orleans Daily States has been publishing on its front pages articles, some running over half-a-column or more onto an inside page, calling the Saenger organization to task for not bringing Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna" and Douglas Fairbanks in "When the Clouds Roll By" to New Orleans.

Answering these articles every day, E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager for Saengers, has been given front page space in the New Orleans Item, the only paper in New Orleans which receives advertising patronage of Saengers. Mr. Richards has led the States on and on through a winning path. Friday he showed them over the cliff with this announcement:

"And all the time I have had in my possession contracts for these pictures."

In a column box on the front page in all editions of the Item of last Friday, Mr. Richards said:

"I knew that when we decided it would be a sheer waste of money to advertise in the States with its limited circulation, that we would be attacked by that paper."

"I knew that I was to be made the victim of a frame-up so I framed back and put mine over. I wonder if the States remembers the rather indignant expression of its publisher Robert L. Ewing, to me when he said, 'You've got the guts of a government mule, Richards. Do you know what we can do to any amusement enterprise that does not meet our terms?'

"From that moment I began to plan.

"Do you remember when Kenneth McGaffey, who is a super city slicker, and likewise Mary Pickford's press agent, was in New Orleans last month he was interviewed at great length by the Daily States."

Incidentally, Mr. McGaffey was interviewed by the Motion Picture News correspondent and gave him the same interview in which he had given the Daily States and which was published in the March 27th issue of Motion Picture News. Kenneth is some actor himself," Mr. Richards continued in his front page story, "and when he talked for publicity he 'registered' indignation, wrath and everything because he apparently had been turned down by Saenger interests.

"And all the while McGaffey was putting on his little sketch we were using him. I knew the States would use the Federal Trade hearing in New Orleans as an excuse to vent its veins. So I fed our enemy with the United-Artists-to-rent-Tulane-theatre-story, and the hook and line were swallowed.

"We could have kept up the press agent stunt indefinitely if it had not finally dawned on the 'astute' mind of the States to query the United Artists, Pickford, Fairbanks, Chaplin and Griffith, regarding the appearance of the pictures here. Of course the answer received by the States was that the pictures were signed for by the Saengers," Mr. Richards concludes.

The States on the same day printed a telegram, dated that day (Friday), from the United Artists office in New York that the contract for the "Big Four," pictures had been signed that day (Friday). This was explained by Mr. Richards this way:

"Documents on file at the Saenger Amusement Company's office will show that we accepted the terms of the United Artists for the 'Big Four' pictures March 19. The telegram which the States printed, in which it is stated that we signed the contract Friday, merely refers to the running of the pictures and the dates. The pictures were ours the minute we accepted the terms three weeks ago. The States' fight was begun after we had obtained the pictures, and we are very grateful for that paper's free publicity."
Protest on Film Use of Marcus Loew's Name

A resolution was passed at a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York on April 6, to forward a request to Richard A. Rowland, President of Metro, to remove Marcus Loew's name from productions of that concern. The principal reason advanced was that Loew's name is invariably associated in the public's mind with the Sidewalk enterprises.

Election of officers was held with the following result: President, William Brandt; 1st Vice President, A. Landaq; 2nd Vice President, Charles Goldreyer; Secretary, H. Gainsboro; Treasurer, S. B. Bank; Sergeant-at-Arms, Al Harston. Finance Committee: Max Barr, Sol Saphier and Samuel Sonin. Board of Directors: David Pickler, S. W. Anderson, John Manheimer, Harry D. Robinson, Rudolph Sanders, David J. Hennessy, Charles Steiner and Louis Blumenthal.

Sunday Bill Up to Rhode Island Legislature

The bill presented in the State Legislature of Rhode Island, to legalize moving picture shows on Sunday, came out of the hands of the committee recently with a favorable report and recommendation that it be passed. It will be acted upon next Tuesday by the House of Representatives, which body it is believed will pass it. Some little question arises yet over the attitude the Senate will take toward the measure, although with the legislation passed during the past year, legalizing Sunday sports and opening up the Sabbath here, many believe it will pass the higher body.

Charity Basis for Sunday Picture Is Opposed

The ministers of Carthage, N. Y., a village of 5,000 inhabitants, have come out during the last few days as being opposed to a scheme that would result in the motion picture theatres of the village being allowed to operate on Sundays with the understanding that the receipts would be used for charitable and religious purposes. A resolution to that effect was recently adopted by the village board, but now the ministers, through their own association, say that they want none of it and furthermore that the whole plan is but a commercialization of the Sabbath.

Sampson Quits Position as Mayflower Officer

Announcement was made early this week by A. W. Sampson of his resignation as assistant treasurer of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Mr. Sampson is leaving Mayflower to re-enter the advertising field, in which he was engaged prior to the war.

Independent Producers to Form National Body

DURING the course of an interview with Joe Brandt of the National Film, it was ascertained by a representative of the "News" that the independent producers assembled in conference over the past week at the Hotel Astor had already taken steps to perfect a chartered organization of independent producers, which is to be national in scope. This phase of the work is entrusted to the hands of Harry Sherman, who is the chairman of the Formation Committee.

Mr. Brandt, who is chairman of the tentative organization, will leave for the Coast on April 20th for the purpose of discussing the proposed organization with those independent producers who have not been represented at the conference up to the present. When asked if the producers' organization was affiliated in any way with the recently organized Federated Film Exchanges, Mr. Brandt replied in the negative and added that the producers' association was to be a separate and entirely independent organization.

Censorship Dead Issue in Portland

Atres. Through the editorial columns of the daily newspapers Mr. Jensen stated the cause of the motion picture industry. He described the present system as a one woman regime, obviously unfair, and proposed a new method whereby the city appoint one person, the film men another and these two choose a third, making a board of three to set the question of censorship.

Slides stating this stand and asking the expression of the public on the question of censorship were run in each of the five Jensen and Von Herberg theatres. Several score replies were received and these the daily newspapers incorporated into news stories. Just one change was made in the original ordinance as submitted by Mr. Jensen to the city council. Club women appearing en masse at the meeting of the city council demanded that the third member of the new board as provided by the ordinance in question be appointed from one of their number. Their request was recognized by the city council, which agreed to choose from three names submitted the member of the board which the city has the authority to appoint. This person with the representative of the film men will then choose the third member of the new board.

By the middle of March when the ordinance was formally and finally adopted the question of censorship was a dead issue. Friendly relations have now been established between club leaders and managers who a month ago were intolerant. A spirit of understanding and cooperation now exists between the two with the mothers of children eager to look upon the modern cinema as a worthwhile, educational type of entertainment.

Referendum Probable on Maryland Sunday Bill

The Iverson Bill submitting the question of Sunday moving pictures in Baltimore to a referendum vote by the people of the city has been passed by the Maryland Senate in the late赶间. There is little doubt that Governor Ritchie will set his signature to the bill, thus giving the people a chance to vote on the matter which has been a matter of votes in November.

Exhibitors and others in back of the Iverson Bill are now certain that Sunday moving pictures in Baltimore will be an actuality before the end of 1920. The bill was defeated by the Senate on Friday night and the following day, the vote of Senator Sproesser, it reconsidered the matter. The vote was 14 to 10 in favor of it.

There is little doubt in the minds of exhibitors and others who were behind the bill, that the people will express their desire for Sunday movies by means of the ballot. That the majority of Baltimorians have long wanted a more liberal Sunday has been felt by many and realized by the reform factions which fought strongly against submitting such bills as Mr. Iverson's measure to the people.

The passage of the bill, however, came as a surprise because it was believed that the reformers were more strongly represented in the Legislature than the exhibitors.

Exhibitors of Baltimore who were favorable to the bill are elated at its passage.

"I have been satisfied all along that the public wants Sunday movies," said Charles E. Whitelast, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises which control the New, Parkway, Garden and New Century theatres. "This has been clearly demonstrated at all patriotic and charitable meetings held on Sundays at any theatres. I believe that the majority should rule. The reformers should be taught to confine their efforts to those people who require moral uplift."

George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome and who has been engaged for the last three years in fighting for a liberal Sunday, said:

"The referendum will remove all doubt as to what the majority of the public wants and whatever this decision is, it will be acceptable to the exhibitors. We merely wanted to put the thing legally up to the voters and have succeeded in doing so. The next move is up to them."

Directors' Ass'n to Hold Big Ball April 10th

The Ball of the Motion-Picture Directors' Association, to be held at the Hotel Biltmore on the evening of April 10th, promises to be one of the biggest social functions of the season in filmdom. An elaborate dancing and musical program is being arranged, and members of the entertainment committee give assurance of many surprises. From the advance sale of tickets, it promises to be a "big" night.
Arthur James Will Open Own Business Shortly

Arthur James, who successively directed the publicity and advertising for Mutual Film Corporation in the days of its greatest prominence, the Metro Pictures Corporation for four years during its growth from small beginnings to one of the big factors in the industry and for Fox Film Corporation since last July, will on April 17 begin business for himself. Mr. James will conduct a general advertising and publicity business, handling both personal and company accounts, giving especial attention to campaigns on big pictures.

He will have his headquarters in New York City and will have branch offices in Washington and Chicago. Mr. John Bowman will be in charge of the Chicago office in the Monadnock Bldg., and the Washington representative will be Theodore M. Knappen, with offices in the Southern Bldg. Carolyn Lowrey, formerly of the Morning Telegraph, will be attached to Mr. James' staff and will leave for California in two weeks in this connection.

Mr. James made the following announcement: "It has been my belief, after an experience of more than six years in publicity and advertising activities for motion pictures, that as a selling force it represented fifty per cent in business importance. I do not believe that publicity will make a poor picture a success, nor that an indifferent director or actor can be elevated to greatness solely by the same process, but I do believe that publicity will make a great picture greater and enable directors and stars to receive their true rewards both in fame and in money if they are well advised regarding their relationship to the public and to the exhibitor.

"I tendered my resignation to Fox Film Corporation with a sense of deep personal regret because of the fine spirit, which pervades the organization and because of the full and free opportunities given to me to be active in its behalf, and I cannot omit a word of the highest praise for the showmanship and the fine personal qualities of Mr. William Fox and Mr. W. R. Sheehan, the big figures in the great organization.

"I am glad to say that I begin business for myself with the cordial good wishes of my friends and with active accounts with which the public and the trade will shortly be made, I trust, very much acquainted. The National Council of Defense and the American Business Association will receive my immediate attention together with my motion picture clients. In each case I will give the campaigns my personal attention."

Mr. James has been identified with the active growth of the motion picture industry, having served as vice-president with the National Association and as the first president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

Bill to Amend Operators' License Law Proposed

A bill introduced in the New York State Assembly recently seeks to amend the general city law in connection with licenses granted to motion picture operators. The bill is now in the city's committee and with the adjournment only about two weeks distant, there is little likelihood that the bill will be reported out and passed.

Under its provisions, the mayor or the licensing authority of the city is given the power to appoint a board of examiners who will pass on the fitness of the applicant for an operator's license. One of the trio must be a motion picture operator, the second is to be an employer of motion picture operators, while the third will be a city employee.

In order to get a license, under the provisions of the bill, the applicant must not only pass a practical knowledge of moving picture projection apparatus, as well as the electrical connections, but he must know the optical system and the various safety and fire prevention devices of machines as well.

Chester Pictures Not for Independent Market

The statement recently published in the trade press to the effect that C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., is ready to furnish a travel release to the independent market, is branded as inaccurate by Raymond S. Harris, sales manager of the company.

The Chester name, so long sponsor for Chester Outing Pictures, will continue to be seen exclusively upon these pictures, he stated.

Largest Japanese Company Is Incorporated

Announcement is made by the International Motion Picture Company, Ltd., of Japan, of their recent incorporation with a capital of ten million yen. This is said to be the largest motion picture company registered on the island. Bunji Okada, a member of the house of peers, is president of the new organization, while the board of directors consists of many well known business men, among whom are Kisshiro Kobayashi and Shinnji Sekiyu, already associated with the motion picture industry, who will act as managing directors.

With the corporation is amalgamated the National Color Cinematograph Company, Ltd., Tokio, which controls more than 400 picture houses in Japan. "Our purpose," announces the company, "is to devote ourselves entirely to the progress of the industry, by building up the up-to-date theatres, and installing in them the best American projection machines, and showing the world's best productions only, to catch up with the American standard. We do not want to have the 'penny show,' but are desirous of attaining the top mark."

A representative of the company will be sent to this country in order that the International Motion Picture Company may be kept in close touch with American productions. Further details of the organization are expected with his arrival in New York.

C. S. Jensen Appointed to Portland Censor Board

C. S. Jensen, senior member of the motion picture firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, has been appointed by George Baker, mayor of Portland, Oregon, to represent the film interests on the new censor board. The board has been created at the request of the film men to replace a board controlled by one woman.

The new regime will have three members, one appointed from names selected by the local film men, another appointed by the city council and a third appointed by these two. Upon great agitation from the club women of the city, the council consented to choose its member from names selected by the club women. Mrs. Alexander Thompson, president of the city federation of women's clubs and a member of the last Oregon legislature, was appointed.

H. Fichtenberg to put on "Tick-Tack-Toe"

Herman Fichtenberg, one of the vice-presidents of the Saenger Amusement Corporation and a well-known figure in film circles, has entered the legitimate field with Arthur Klein. They will put on the musical comedy, "Tick-Tack-Toe," which has been reorganized. The comedy will open at Rockaway Beach in June.
What Does the Other Fellow Get?

A PRACTICAL statistical compilation affording exhibitors infinite opportunities to justify their respective admission prices and at the same time to compare personal responsibilities with those of several hundred showmen has just been completed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Covering a total of 238 theatres in eighteen states and twenty-one cities, this bit of practical research has brought out a number of general axioms, several theories that have held true under severe tests and the outstanding fact that only about five per cent of the first and second-run theatres seating 1,000 people or more have a smaller top-admission price than 25 cents for night performances.

Seeking further than surface reasons for the fact that the larger houses charge the highest of admission prices and generally are the most successful even in a proportionate way, First National's compilers find that usually a special feature attraction is responsible for the high scale of prices. A typical accounting for the fact cites the case of a Western theatre where a uniform 20-cent admission price had been charged. A feature was booked and prices were boosted to 35 cents. "Auction of Souls," pointed out the way to bigger receipts and profits. The management decided to keep the admission price at 35 cents for a two weeks' tryout. The idea was a success. Special features were booked and today the price is popular locally. If there is an exhibitor conclusion that can be drawn it is the fact that experience has shown that the most practicable method of raising the admission scale is to book a special feature, advance prices and through the use of succeeding features keep the price up to that scale.

A number of interesting exhibitor observations can be drawn from the table of statistics that follow below. For instance, contrary to the law of "larger theatre, larger admission prices," it was discovered that the Auditorium Theatre at Saginaw, Mich., seating 3,000 people—one hundred per cent more than any other theatre in the city—has a 10-15 cent admission scale, whereas eight second-run theatres in the same city seating between 150 and 300 people have a uniform admission price of 20 cents.

Another novel case may be cited concerning a problem at Pittsburgh, Pa. Here, three theatres, the William Penn, Garden and Alhambra, all seating between 1,000 and 1,200 have an admission scale that ranges from 17 to 22 cents. These theatres are second-run houses, whereas the Grand, Olympic and Liberty, all seating more than 2,000, have a scale that ranges from 25 to 35 cents.

It is interesting to note that only two out of twenty San Francisco theatres seat less than 1,000 people and that the top-admission-price goes no lower than 20 cents. The Central theatre of that city, with 400 seats, charges a general admission price of 25 cents. Prices here are a higher scale than elsewhere, regardless of what may be said about inexpensive living conditions in California. The Imperial, Strand, Kielto, California, Portola, Tivoli and others have a top price of 75 cents or more and a number of second-run houses have a scale, the top price of which is 50 cents.

Denver presents another interesting case to the exhibitor. In this city are twenty second-run houses charging an admission price of 10 cents. Seating capacity of these theatres ranges from 50 to 900 seats. The Thompson theatre here, with 1,100 seats charge night prices of 20 and 25 cents.

One of the several first-run houses with a seating capacity of 1,000 or less and charging an admission price of 20 cents for night performances is the Alhambra theatre at Indianapolis.

An odd condition exists at Springfield where three second-run theatres have a proportionately higher minimum admission scale than the first-run houses. The smallest admission price of the Phillips, Strand and Garden second-run houses is 17 cents while that of the Palace, Broadway and another theatre is 10 and 15 cents.

The statistics compiled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit follow in table form:

A novel exploitation idea is being employed this week at the Fox Audubon theatre, New York, when the entire lobby set used for the filming of "Les Miserables" was set up in the lobby and about the front of the theatre for the showing of the feature at house. The novel lobby display is attracting great crowds. One of the itinerant sidewalk orators who were to be found talking politics and the brotherhood of man in that vicinity took advantage Monday night of the crowds in front of the theatre and being somewhat informed on the story of Jean Valjean, used the opportunity to speak to the gospel of the poor, glorifying the epic and dramatic work of fiction in such extravagances of his limited speech that his hearers turned to the box office in numbers and bought seats. Finding his own audience diminished he took up a collection, bought a ticket himself and went inside to learn more about what he had been talking.

Real Circus Used for Exploitation Purposes

Des Moines has recently been treated to some excellent picture exploitation when the Royal theatre of that city played "Desert Gold."

The outstanding feature of the campaign was a circus parade each day of the film's showing at the Royal.

The cost of staging a circus pageant in ordinary circumstances would be prohibitive, but learning that the Yankee Robinson Circus was still in winter quarters in one of the suburbs, the Messrs. Van Dyke and Hill, communicated with the circus executives and obtained their co-operation, the arrangement giving the "big show" outfit over to the picture folk for three hours daily during the run.

The procession passed through the principal streets and then by daily diverse routes reached the Royal, where a pick-anonym band and a troupe of Tasmania troupers joined in rendering two songs.

In addition to the circus stunt the Royal management had a mule pack train, representing one of the big scenes, parading through the streets. The Messrs. Van Dyke and Hill also evoked interest in "Desert Gold" through bookshop cooperation, display windows in the department stores and big book stores being given over to promoting the sale of the novel all during the presentation.

"Doubles" Harold Lloyd With Great Results

"Bill" Williams, press representative for the Auditorium, at South Bend, Ind., is one of the boys who knows what a touch of local color will do in helping to put over a picture. Some time ago Williams "spotted" a "double" for Harold Lloyd in the audience of the theatre. The chap was a dead "ringer" for the screen comedian even to the shell-rimmed glasses affected by Lloyd in his pictures. Williams and the manager of the theatre, who was told of the striking resemblance, noted that he was seen at the Auditorium more often when a Lloyd comedy was being shown and from this fact the big idea was evolved.

Williams began very assiduously to cultivate the acquaintance of the stranger who looked like Lloyd, being a good publicity man and already having an idea in mind, an ulterior one to create a word of mouth advertising for "His Royal Slyness," which was scheduled for a showing at the Auditorium in the near future. The idea was suggested by the six-sheet poster for this comedy which shows Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis seated on the back of a donkey in grotesque costume and with Lloyd holding suspended from the end of the stick and just before the eyes of the donkey a wisp of hay. The "Double" was asked to pose as Lloyd and he readily accepted. The next difficulty was in securing a "ringer" for Mildred Davis. After a search of two days a young lady was located employed in a local restaurant who was a second Mildred Davis, from the shy smile to Miss Davis' demure manner. She was persuaded to do her bit with "Harold Lloyd" and all was set.

The donkey and both "Doubles" were rigged out as per the six-sheet, and permission of the Police Chief was obtained to allow frequent parades up and down the busiest streets during the better part of two days and nights preceding the opening play date at our house. Banners carried by small boys who strolled along behind the big show, carried the notice that the favorite comedian could be seen at the Auditorium March 1st, 2nd and 3rd in his latest comedy, "His Royal Slyness." This stunt created the greatest excitement every time it made its appearance on the downtown streets and the result was that the Auditorium packed 'em in for three days and nights.
Imperial, San Francisco Believes in Window Displays

“Nick” Ayer, director of publicity and advertising for the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, did not neglect the “tie-up” in his exploitation of “On With the Dance.” On this page is shown three of his co-operative window displays for this picture. The result of this sort of advertising is such that the Imperial never neglects an opportunity to obtain space in any window located in the business section.
ONE of the best things that could happen in this industry just now would be the establishment of a department of photoplay-writing in our leading institutions of learning," said Jules H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League and manager of the Victoria and Regent theatres, Buffalo, in the course of an interview with the Motion Picture News representative.

"I have found that the original story especially prepared for the screen is more in favor than adaptations of stage works," continued Mr. Michael. "If we look back over the biggest film successes of the past several months, we will observe that the stories written originally for the screen have been the real box office winners. The high prices demanded by owners of copyrights on stage plays when approached by film producers who wish to adapt them for the screen, are all out of proportion to their worth as screen material. I noticed recently that a well known director had paid close to $200,000 for the screen rights of an old-time stage production. When this comes along in its screen form, it will mean nothing to the average layman. He will only observe that its title is one that was very familiar in Grandma's day; the name of the director will mean nothing to him. The average patron's observation will be 'Old stuff!' If the same producer had offered some noted author the same amount to write an original story for the screen, it would have been much more reasonable.

"Many of the leading stars recognize the value of original stories in which to star and have as a consequence employed their own plot makers. John Emerson and Anita Loos started the ball rolling for Douglas Fairbanks and are keeping it going for the Thalberg sisters. Clara Kimball Young has found her greatest successes in original works, so have Charlie Chaplin, William S. Hart, Nazimova, Charles Ray and a host of others. The favor and popularity with which these productions meet are the best proof that they are on the right track.

"Surely this industry has grown big enough to attract its own story makers. We should not be forced to depend on rehashing stage material for film consumption. The world's imagination could never be equaled by any stage play. Neither could hundreds of other famous screen classics produced in the past few years.

"Columbia University has taken a step in the right direction by installing a scenario department and Thomas H. Ince Capitol Opera is "Hansel and Gretel"" the Capitol theatre opera this week is "Hansel and Gretel," the Ethelbert Humperdinck composition founded on the Grimm fairy tale of "Babes in the Wood."

The version the Capitol company is singing is in three acts and three scenes and is the original and requires the services of a chorus only in the very last few minutes of the presentation.

"In this fact it does not appeal to the writer to be an exceptional bill for stock purposes, since we have observed greater interest by the Capitol audiences in the ensemble numbers than for the solo or duet conditions.

"The policy of presenting opera with a picture program seems to be meeting with favor at this theatre, if we are to judge by attendance.

"The performance attended by the writer was capacity, which may be considered exceptional for a theatre seating 5,400 people.

"Artist Wenger has provided some very good sets for this opera, especially so in the act three exterior.

is to be commended for offering handsome prizes to students who write the best plots during their course of study. With such encouragement we shall soon get some real gents in screen literature.

"Leading producers should attempt to attract more of the noted authors to exclusive writing for the shadow stage. Maeterlinck is now studying the technique of the silent drama preparatory to writing an original theme for the screen. With George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Sir J. M. Barrie, John Fox, Jr., and countless others to follow in Maeterlinck's path, we already have Rex Beach devoting much of his time to screen authorship. So far the result of his film work has been most successful.

"A majority of the adaptations of stage plays mean nothing when they reach the screen. They may be successful 'on the boards,' but they seem to lack 'punch' when they arrive on the silver screen. Many of these stage plays adaptations of which we have been hearing so much about of late owe much of their success to the spoken words in the play. Arriving on the screen minus these oral outbursts the same plays fall down sadly in many cases. The plots are not sufficient, consequently elaborate padding is resorted to in an effort to elongate the tale into five or six reels. Even a great star is not enough to 'pull them over.'

"With the establishing of photoplay departments in colleges there would undoubtedly be a rush of students possessing real talent and a desire to learn the technique of scenario writing. Many young men and women are enthusiastic over such a profession, but they lack knowledge of the construction of successful film stories. Talent ability would undoubtedly be brought out in countless instances. Perhaps some of the leading scenario experts would be glad to accept positions in colleges, providing the compensation was a fair one. Here would be the producers' opportunity to endow the photoplay departments and possibly the exhibitors' leagues of the various states would also aid in the work.

"I believe that this subject is one of the most vital problems facing the motion picture industry, and one which will bear deep thought, investigation and encouragement."

Another Story Telling of St. Louis Presentations

WILLIAM GOLDMAN, director general of the chain of St. Louis theatres headed by King's and Pershing's, succeeding Louis K. Sidney, who has removed to Detroit in a similar capacity, is a firm believer in the efficiency of the lobby display as a means of attracting the public into the theatre.

Two of his latest creations were in connection with Douglas Fairbanks' "When the Clouds Roll By," which played the Pershing, and Clara Kimball Young's "Eyes of Youth," the attraction at the King. In each of these pictures Mr. Goldman selected something that would lend atmosphere and proceeded to get it over. When the Clouds Roll By" suggested rain, and a prologue was arranged depicting a storm. The gathering of the clouds, lightning, thunder, rain and then the passing of the storm was presented realistically. Mr. Goldman went to the extent of using real water, all of which was symbolic and entirely in keeping with the theme of the Fairbanks story.

The mysticism of crystal gazing suggests the Orient, and, as rain was used for the Fairbanks picture, incense was selected as the best agent for "Eyes of Youth." In this case there was a speaking part in the prologue. The curtain parted, showing a yogi seated on a throne before the crystal. He rises, salutats and appeals to the globe to reveal to him the secrets of the unknown. However, the incense is the vital bit of the sketch. It is replenished by a few attendants in costume and perpetuates every corner of the theatre, placing the man who comes in from the street in a mood which will enable him to appreciate "Eyes of Youth."
George Fisher, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., isn't kidding about the alleged domestic difficulties in the Chaplin family. From his standpoint it is most timely, for the front page news of trouble in the Chaplin home broke the week preceding his Sunday opening with "The Inferior Sex." The beautiful lobby of the Alhambra theatre was all dolled up with decorations referring to sex strife and what could be better than having strife right in the Chaplin's own home. Of course, no one wonders trouble to come to the famous comedian and his pretty wife, but since it must come—well, exhibitors aren't kidding over the extraordinary publicity.

The Alhambra press agent employed some unique teasers in his advertising campaign. One was a striking pose of Milton Sills in which he asks: "Who is the boss in your home?" The name of the play was not given until the Saturday ad, all other ads merely referring to the "picture" coming to the Alhambra. The Saturday ad had photographs of the star saying: "Keep a Man Guessing—that is the way to hold his love."

A unique lobby display included scales, bearing a cut-out figure of a man on one balance and a woman's figure on the other, were hung over the door, with the picture of lovely Mildred in the center. This scale, by an electrical arrangement, tipped gently first one way and then the other throughout the entire week the theatre was open. The doors beneath bore panels, with snappy phrases concerning the relative status of man and woman, the name of the play and the theatre, together with the date. The panels on the sides of the lobby were arranged with cut-out figures, almost life size. One side bore figures of men at work, the cobbler, tailor, munition maker, soldier, woodman and blacksmith. Above the panel was the inscription: "Which is the inferior sex? Ever since the stone age, man in his opinion has been the master, woman the slave. Is the fighter superior to the home maker? See Mildred Harris Chaplin in "The Inferior Sex" next week."

The corresponding panel on the other side bore women's figures, cut out from the headboard and looking decidedly lifelike, as they posed as typist, a woman at the washing, another rocking a cradle, and another sweeping the floor.

A few feet of reel advertising the play bore the same tip-sitting scales, with the reading matter advertising the tense situations in the play.
Making a Bid for “Word of Mouth” Advertising

Aiming his exploitation at a source that would engender the maximum amount of word-of-mouth publicity, George Fisher, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, arranged with his exploitation editor, Eddie Weisfeld, to publicize the title of his attraction.

The scenes which Mr. Fisher devised were likenesses of the thought suggested by “The River’s End.” The pictures which were conceived were more like miniature stage settings than lobby designs. In a previous issue of the showing of “The River’s End,” a motion picture bit of scenery that suggested a woodland retreat was worked out with the aid of birch bark, rough shaggy bark and bits of natural wood, together with branches of pine and fir. Using paper mache rocks that bore every resemblance to the real thing, an unusual bit of beauty that depicted a small waterfall was arranged. The paper mache rocks were covered with real branches of fir and pine. A small, rustic bridge built halfway down the “mountain side” served to complete the illusion. The word matter used with this display was designed by bits of wood that gave a rustic effect.

As an appropriate stage setting, Mr. Fisher designed a combination of real trees and shrubs surrounding a pool of clear sparkling water that well minimized the river’s end. At one end of this scene a tiny waterfall was seen. A small spotlight thrown on this waterfall gave a splendid effect to the entire setting. The shrubs and ferns about the pool of water were of the various shades of green one might find in a natural bit of scenery. One tree at either side showed the pink blossoms of a wild crab-apple species.

Washington Post Printing Great “Movie” Section

If the Service Bureau was to give space to commendatory articles on all of the good photoplay sections which newspapers, especially the Sunday editions are now editing, it would mean the elimination of too many exploitation stories and it is for this reason that we are choir in praise in this connection under ordinary circumstances.

However, the pages of the Washington Post (Sunday edition) for the past few weeks are of such unusual merit when it comes to the department titled in this publication as “The Screen” that we take this occasion to offer congratulations to the paper and its photoplay editor. Also to Washington exhibitors who are enjoying the service rendered by this department in aiding them in “putting over the show.”

A week in that the Post is doing all that it can to promote the motion picture industry in Washington and the success of its efforts is extremely praiseworthy.

Easter Vocal Novelty Staged at Rivoli

The Rivoli theatre, New York, is staging a musical novelty in honor of Easter this week which merits description.

The title is “Easter Dawn” and the number is arranged in four scenes, each provided with a special stage setting.

The first scene is of a pantomime and putting act by three girls. In which the trumpet of dawn is used. There is no music for this number except the orchestral accompaniment. Scenes two and three are very similar to one, all the performers and the stage settings being in harmony.

The fourth scene is a vocal rendition of appropriate music for the week and the stage setting is suggestive of the church also. Garbed in their gowns the Rivoli chorus is group on stairs rising to an apex surrounding a white chiffon figure of a woman holding a white dove.

On each side of the stage attendants display Easter lilies and these flowers are also used as decorations along with painted balustrade which hides the feet of the performers. The backing for this scene is black and white plumed cloth marked on all sides. The number is termed a fantasy for chorus, ballet and orchestra and the choreography is arranged by Miss Dixie Wilson. The Rivoli chorus of excellent voices in the last scene succeeds in making this number exceptional entertainment.

and each one of them is originated with the idea of furnishing a real cause for effort that will be interesting to children of school age.

She has found that children are the best carriers of advertising that exist and therefore she caters chiefly to children, knowing that their parents and other adult relatives are bound to be interested in anything that captivates the mind and activity of the school pupils. Each contest is based so closely upon productions at the theatre that none of the effect of the advertising is lost.

Special exploitation is acquired by Miss Ward simply by enlarging the scope of the contest she decides upon, or else running more than one. On a recent showing of Chaplin in “Shoulder Arms” she originated two contests, one confined exclusively to boys. In one contest she offered a prize to the boy who could make himself up into the best imitation of the screen comedian. She had all the entries, after the premiere night, put up and made-up, parade through the business streets of the city before the awards were made. In order to interest girls, also, she offered a second list of prizes for the best cartoon of Chaplin.

Miss Ward does not neglect the advantage of lobby displays because of her interests in contests. For the same showing of “Shoulder Arms” she had the frames in the lobby, as well as a special show case, filled with trophies brought back by Richmond boys who were near the battle during the fighting. On the opening day a large cut-out symbolic figure of “Shoulder Arms” was also displayed in the lobby.

Stunt Contests Get Children at Richmond, Ky.

“Stunt” contests based upon ideas to get school children interested in winning prizes has been used to build up a most successful patronage by Miss Alice Ward, manager of the Grand theatre, at Richmond, Ky. She uses contests on practically every feature shown in the house.

Mitchell Has “Morgue” All His Own

Keeping files of photographs of motion picture actors and actresses has proved to be most lucrative as an exhibitor hobby for W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens Theatre, at Kalamazoo, one of the string of Butterfield houses in Michigan. The fact that he has on file photographs of practically every star of the past ten years has listed him as a valuable acquaintance with every publisher in the city. The consequence is that the Majestic Gardens ranks high in the list of Michigan houses as a receiver of free publicity notices.

Almost continually present day stars or stars of the past do something which sends a story about them into every newspaper office in the country. It is not often that these stories happen just at the time when they can be used to the best advantage by an exhibitor, but usually the newspapers want a picture to run with the story, and are obligated to the exhibitor who they know can and will supply them. The result is that they are always willing to do favors for this exhibitor in the publicity line.

Mitchell has cut himself in a position of being listed with every newspaper as a source for photos of practically any star that ever gained fame. Recently this fact resulted in an added advantage.

The Kalamazoo Saturday Night was started as a publication for the weekly review of happenings in the Michigan City. The editors had decided upon artistic photographs of prominent people as cover designs, and naturally went to newspaper offices to inquire as to where such photographs could be procured. Mitchell was mentioned by almost every office and the result was that the backers of the new weekly sought him. The first issue was to come out the Saturday evening prior to a week’s run of “Two Weeks,” at the Majestic Gardens. Mitchell selected one of his photographs of Constance Talmadge, the star, and offered it to them for publication if an announcement was carried. They accepted.

The following week he supplied them with the photograph of another star and then the third week, and now he is practically the cover editor of the weekly, deciding what photograph to run and writing the captions printed under it. Needless to say the photographs of Saturday Night is usually the star of the production to be run the following week at the Majestic Gardens.

Lobby Displays in the Smaller Towns Are Practicable

(Left) From the "show me" city of Missouri comes a photo of the lobby display which W. E. Sturgis, advertising manager of the Hippodrome theatre, designed and built for his engagement of "In Old Kentucky." While not expensive the display is attractive and should appeal to every manager as a model of its kind.

(Below) Putting atmosphere into a lobby at small cost was the achievement of Manager H. G. Plath of the Crescent theatre, Temple, Texas, for his showing of "Heart of the Hills." The ticket booth was made into a log cabin and a real tree was placed in the lobby. Note in the cut the life-like cut-out of Mary and her donkey.
Chicago Presentation Pronounced Unusually Artistic

Logan Square Engagement for Nazimova Feature Scores in Windy City

THE presentation of the Nazimova feature, “Stronger Than Death,” at the Logan Square Theatre, Chicago, recently, was regarded as one of the most artistic ever seen in the Windy City and the result was capacity crowds for a solid week.

The introduction started with an overture, “The Egyptian Ballet,” and as the music drew to an end the curtain parted, disclosing a temple with large rows of marble pillars and a broad flight of steps leading down to the stage. On either side of the steps, incense burners glowed, wafting their perfume over the entire house.

On the steps of the temple was posed a dancer, Devi Dassi, a pupil of Ruth St. Denis, draped in veils with glittering headband and ornaments. As the spotlight enveloped her in light she came down the steps and danced the Temple Dance, a beautiful interpretation of the dance of love which Nazimova, in the picture, dances to attract the man she loves.

The dance completed, once again the dancer stood posed on the temple steps, and immediately the picture was flashed upon the screen showing a street scene in India. A special orchestration was also prepared to help create the proper atmosphere.

Attractive and artistic lobby displays and exploitation also aided Manager W. E. Wentshener in putting this picture over in a big way.

The entire presentation and exploitation was planned by the new service just inaugurated by Willis & Eckels, of Chicago, which is in charge of Sara Mason, an artistic theatre director of great ability, who received her training under S. L. Rothapfel.

Willis & Eckels plan to make this department national in scope and have obtained the backing and cooperation of the producers.

Special stage settings will be built and held ready for the use of theatres preceding the release date of important productions; arrangements made for impressive lobby displays; special musical settings made ready and plans for exploitation drawn up, so that theatre owners may, through Willis & Eckels, obtain a new service which will assure them of first class presentation.
Children of Richmond Find Big Appeal in "Pollyanna"

There were great times for both kiddies and grownups when "Pollyanna" played the Isis theatre, Richmond, Va. On this page is a view of the theatre and one of the crowds which came to see the picture.
Frisco Houses Pool Interests for "Kentucky"

Rival Theatres Get Results from a Partnership Exploitation Campaign

THE old saying that originated when Cy Perkins enlisted Larry Hopkins' aid at the village grocery counter to figure up Cy's monthly buttermilk bill, that "two heads are better one," was applied to the motion picture business and exploitation in San Francisco recently.

The saying was adapted to read "two houses are better than one," and the two houses were the Tivoli and Strand theatres. The exploitation was started buzzing when the managements of these two theatres pooled their exploitation brains in order to put over "In Old Kentucky." The Tivoli and Strand, although technically what might be well termed rival theatres, opened and closed the production at the same time. They booked it simultaneously for a week. They combined their advertising. They utilized the same billboards. The only thing these two houses did not do was to pool the profits. Yet both of them secured a handsome return on the week's business.

To really fathom this phenomenal success, it is necessary to understand San Francisco's theatrical district. The downtown district is scattered over a distance of five long blocks. At one end are two theatres under the same management, which also controls a theatre at the opposite end. They catch them coming and going. Also if there be a holdout crowd at one end of the district where the races is to play one week engagements, the house next door is benefited, for amusement seekers will naturally look for the nearest theatre. The business at their third house is steadier, for it is devoted to pictures running two weeks and longer.

Between these two poles are located the Tivoli and Strand, but a single city block separating them. Hence it must be seen that when there was a holdout crowd at both houses every night in the week there must have been a tremendous interest created that caused people to want to see "In Old Kentucky" and to make them willing to stand in line for the privilege.

Perhaps the most striking exploitation device that entered into the campaign was a sheet representing everything that Kentucky was noted for except a distillery. The old log cabin, the colonel with his long, white mustache and goatee in proper Roman style, the negro jazz band, palms and ferms. A southern packet fence surrounded the wagon alongside of which a girl jockey sat gracefully upon a dashing race horse. And while the negro band played its wildest jazz, the old colonel spat tobacco on the pavement, the flat dressed, shinnied and the girl jockey tried her best not to fall off the horse.

The unusual feature, however, which entered into the exploitation of "In Old Kentucky" was the float and Pickaniny Band which held forth on the streets of San Francisco for the entire week. The float was designed by Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre.

The getting-together of the two theatres is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the management and ownership of the two houses are in no way allied, and although the showing of "In Old Kentucky" they were by virtue of their proximity keen competitors.

The forward looking men at the helm of the Tivoli and Strand saw that combination is stronger than antagonism and pooled their interest to put over one of the striking successes of the year.

Richmond Theatre and Paper Co-operate

Colonial Theatre and News Leader Combine Forces for "Pollyanna"

JAKE WELLS, prominent southern exhibitor, and his house manager for Mr. Wells' Colonial theatre at Richmond, Va., Harry Bernstein, set the entire city of Richmond agog talking, writing and going to picture shows by the manner in which they put over their exploitation campaign on "Pollyanna."

"It was a production that primarily interested the children," he said, "so it was to the children that I made my first appeal. I knew that if I got the children started, the grown-ups would come along, and I certainly hit the bull's eye this time. I had them lined up outside of the theatre for hours, and it was capacity business during the entire run of the engagement."

His first appeal in his campaign was to the school children through the News Leader, the leading newspaper of the city. Through them he offered four cash prizes, $10 for the best comment on "Pollyanna" as a production; $7.50 for the best story about Mary Pickford; $5.00 for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

Hundreds of people entered the contest and submitted contributions with the result that the following prizes were awarded by the judging committee composed of Henry S. Hutzler, T. Elwood Tragle and J. H. Binford, assistant superintendent of schools:

First prize, $10.00, to Lelia Graham Hobson, nine years old, for the best comment on the picture.

Second prize, $7.50, to Martha Leutia Woodson, thirteen years old, for the best story about Mary Pickford.

Third prize, $5.00, to Frances Allen, thirteen years old, for the best "glad" thought.

Fourth prize, $2.50, to Mary Phillips, twelve years old, for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

The newspapers responded admirably to all of the exploitation and first-page double and triple-column stories were the result. When the children came in droves from the schools in the afternoons, in some cases the teacher bringing her entire student body, the papers commented on it with headlines like this: "Living lines of children took turns waiting outside to get a chance to enjoy 'Pollyanna.'"
Rival Theatres Pool Exploitation and Mutually Benefit

The rival theatres, Strand and Tivoli of San Francisco, pooled their exploitation on "In Old Kentucky." Both houses ran the same feature day and date. For detail of the exploitation campaign see opposite page.

Bennett Deodorizes Atmosphere of “Whiskey Row”

Why Fair Damsels of Salt Lake City Shunned State Street’s Picture Houses

DEODORIZING the nickel beer atmosphere that since the days of prohibition has put a dark brown tinge in the officd months of many fair cities with the million dollar perfume of motion pictures is a possibility that is now far from remote, thanks to the enterprise of W. H. Bennett, advertising manager of the Strand and Gem theatres, Salt Lake City. An old saying, “Lips that touch liquor shall never touch mirth,” was evidently altered to fit a local superstition, with the result that the saying might read, “A picture show on whiskey row shall never lure me from the primrose path.”

This was exactly the trouble in Salt Lake City. The fair damsels of that town, and those that sought the favorite of the fair damsels, had an idea that State street was a wild place. Maybe this belief had small foundation. It is a fact that before the late Barleycorn sang his “Swain Song” the papers used to tell of the thrills awaiting women and children and almost anybody else who cared to visit State street. It might be best to state at this point that the reason we are devoting so much to State street and its trouble is because the Gem and Strand theatres are located thereupon.

As a matter of fact, State street was different from all other streets only in one feature, and this feature rested in the fact that it seemed every third store in the block was a saloon.

Being intoxicated in Salt Lake City meant but one thing—State street.

When Mr. Bennett took over the advertising management of the Strand and Gem theatres he encountered a strange proposition. Attractions from popular stars that should have drawn large audiences of women and children didn’t come up to expectations. It seemed as though a mute understanding among the girls was sizing the situation up after this fashion:

The picture shows on State street were very nice, but State street wasn’t so nice as it might be.

And yet, less than a hundred yards away was Main street, its pavements almost as raw as a result of the high-heeled tread of Salt Lake’s weaker sex. It was time, Mr. Bennett thought, to launch a little missionary work in behalf of the abused State street.

With the true instincts of showmanship, Mr. Bennett selected a most propitious time for the testing of his idea. When the Strand had booked “Heart of the Hills” he found a good chance to hit home with the bell ringing statement that brought out the sophistication of the local attitude towards the Strand. “Don’t let prejudice keep you away from State street, the Gem and the Strand,” was the line he used.

Mr. Bennett’s expectations were realized. His candid way of dealing with the situation has resulted in building up a clientele of the most fashionable of Salt Lake society. Country club talk and comment on society columns in the Salt Lake morning newspapers are a regular part of the Strand’s and Gem’s lobby chatter. And whatever slight intuition might be that the nickel beer odor still pervades State street is fully dispelled by the announcement that French bon-bons and the uneartening sweetness of marbeled hair are now State street slogans instead of the old time stein-for-a-jinny idea.

Trim Ankle Gets Everybody’s Attention

Hammond Gives Atlanta Public Something New in Window Display

A TRIM ankle has never failed to attract attention, so upon this human frailty Frank Hammond, Publicity Director for the S. A. Lynch theatres, Atlanta, built his campaign for “Mary’s Ankle,” starring Douglas MacLean and Doris May, real honest-to-goodness human ankles were used, too. None of the camouflaged stuff for Mr. Hammond. When he displays he gives the public the real thing.

Two young ladies of considerable charm were engaged to participate in Mr. Hammond’s latest stunt, and it has been a long time since Atlanta has had such traffic congestion as Whitehall street experienced during the times the “Mary’s” were in one of the prominent shop windows. Time after time it was necessary for the police to clear the sidewalk so pedestrians could make their way along the street. Young men were attracted in large numbers, but it cannot be said that they were alone in front of the window. Old fellows with good taste and husbands with their wives hanging close to them were seen to linger for quite a time before Mr. Hammond’s attractive display.

The store picked by Mr. Hammond for his show makes a specialty of women’s shoes and hosewery and late reports from the manager of the store indicate that the theatre display helped a great deal in the special sales they put on during the week. It is safe to surmise that this store will be in line for similar advertising novelties that may be devised from time to time by the Rialto management.

It is believed that Mr. Hammond’s special stunts were responsible for the greatly increased business throughout the week.

The Rialto has never been keen to do advertising very far in advance of the showing of the picture, but during the week preceding the showing of “Mary’s Ankle,” they ran an entire campaign in each of the Atlanta papers. In addition to the space used seven days in advance they pushed up their advertising allotment for Sunday and ran sixty inches against their usual forty.

This form of advertising had never been attempted in Atlanta before the coming of Mr. Hammond to the Rialto and its true value had never been known.

“On With the Dance” and “Mary’s Ankle” have proved that a certain amount of “jazz” is necessary and it is believed that Atlanta will have the benefit of many novel stunts in the near future.

Huge Bill Board “Graces” Times Square District

A sign-board twelve feet high, running around three sides of one of the important buildings in the Times Square district of New York City, and plastered with one, three, six, and twenty four sheets is a current accomplishment in the presentation of “The Virgin of Stamboul.”

This unusual bit of Broadway advertising was made possible by alterations now going on in the old Rector’s cafe site, in the ground floor of the Mecca Building, Broadway and Forty-eighth street. When a twelve-foot fence was built around the building to mask the workmen and to protect pedestrians on the adjacent sidewalks, Universal quickly obtained bill-posting privileges for the entire fence space.
Cincinnati Theatre Features Serial on First Night

When the Boulevard theatre of Cincinnati opened its doors on March 21, "The Lost City" serial was the picture which received the giant's share of the exploitation campaign. On this page is shown the decorations and exploitation which the Boulevard management accorded the picture. No serial had ever been given such extensive billing in Cincinnati previously.
Extensive Campaign for "Beloved Cheater"

When the Locust theatre of West Philadelphia played "The Beloved Cheater" Abe Seligman, house manager, recognized the exploitation possibilities the feature possesses and went after the business with some unusual ideas.

A week before the opening date, thousands of the stock heralds furnished by the exchange were mailed to prospective patrons. The day before the opening this was followed by an original herald playing up the idea suggested by the producers' booklet.

The next step was the "love letter contest" which was conducted through and with the aid of the newspapers. The editors were coaxed in giving the contest some extra attention and a veritable stack of love letters were received. In selecting the members of the committee who were to decide on the merits of the letters, care was taken to obtain competent and impartial people and every endeavor made to impress the public that the entries would receive impartial consideration. From the style and manner of construction of the numberless letters received, the management of the Locust is convinced that the contest reached the "people."

The judges selected the appended letter as deserving of the first prize:

Dear Mr. Lew Cody:

I will now take a Brody, and write you the letter you ask.

I have never been bitten by "Love's germ,"—nor snubbed, but gladly I sit to this task.

Of writing you, tho' I'm a novice and green, I'd adore such a kiss as you gave.

That sweet Miss at the Locust theatre today on the screen.

I am very near twenty,—have known men a-plenty, but they're all of them Slow like your friend, and they never have lifted the veil that your gifted and wondrous love-making could rend!

Now don't think me "sappy"—I'm really quite happy, to know that such lovers live, And I don't mind confessin', I'd like such a lesson, as an artist like you, sir, could give.

You've forgotten it's Leap-Year, and that's why I don't fear, to be so ungenerously held? For the dear thought of missing, a lesson in kissing, with you teaching, leaves me quite cold!

I am red-haired and grey-eyed and very much envied by girl-friends because of the men.

But I'll shock them all gladly; I confess I'm yours madly! So it's "up to you," Lew; just say when.

Frankel Features Wearing of Green

"The Luck of the Irish" seems to have had a busy week during that in which March 17th was contained. Among the theatres which played this feature as St. Patrick's Day special was the Majestic theatre, of Columbus. Besides the ordinary methods of publicity and exploitation, a number of novelties were pulled that did much to popularize the engagement.

A private screen was held and all the Irish clubs and lodges were invited. Window cards cut in the form of a sham rock were distributed over the city. Green carnations with ribbons attached, on which was printed "Luck of the Irish" and the name of the theatre, were passed out to every patron. The lobby of the theatre was decorated with sham rocks on white lattice work, and made a very effective display.

All this expenditure of time and money in honor of the "wearing of the green" constituted a big week for "The Luck of the Irish" engagement, and R. G. Frankel, advertising manager, who had charge of the campaign, is smiling at a job well done. Also he is looking forward to another holiday or event that will give him something to work on in his successful efforts to bring the dollars into the Majestic box office.

Circus Stuff Wins for Pomeroy

Probably the most striking theatre front ever arranged in Ottawa, Ontario, was that used by Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Strand theatre, for "The Elephant Man," starring Shirley Mason, which was presented on March 25, 26 and 27. Fun-bark, tumbling, stuffed camel and elephant, large elephant cut-out, circus wagon, brass band musical effects and living clowns were used for the lobby display and the combination created real circus atmosphere. Upon entering the theatre, patrons discovered the "animal tent" where more exhibits were arranged. The animal stalls, plentifully decorated with painted barrels, hoops and fodder, were found in the foyer.

For the circus band music Manager Pomeroy used a small phonograph, which was operated on the roof of the small circus wagon, together with a bass drum. Lively band selections were played continuously, while one of the clowns beat upon the drum. Another clown operated a mechanical roaring engine, while a third caused the life-sized camel to swing its head from side to side impatiently.

The large mirrors in the foyer were painted in circus style, and they also bore cut-outs of the star. Clowns roamed up and down the aisles during intermissions and the orchestra did its best to add circus color to the proceedings. The newspaper advertisements were also highly appropriate.
Even New York Succumbs to the Window Display Tie-up

Even selfish, "go it alone" New York is seeing the mutual advantage in window display tie-ups for the exploitation of pictures. On this page is shown how two stores on Broadway co-operated with the Broadway Theatre, New York, in the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" playing at the Moss house last week. These tie-ups were only a portion of those which were effected with prominent stores.
Wausau Exhibitor Suggests That Producers Furnish Mats

Clyde Kone Tells Us What Is Needed to Properly Advertise Pictures

THE film distributing companies are overlooking the important possibilities of one item in the matter of advertising accessories that could be made a great help to the men in the small town exhibiting field.

That item is the distribution of mats, which are not sent out to the exhibitors generally because it is estimated that something like 80 per cent of the newspapers in the country are not able to use them, owing to lack of equipment.

But this obstacle can easily be overcome by educators the small town newspapers and the exhibitors themselves to the importance and economy in having machines to cut up these mats, and this educating should be done by the distributors and the trade papers.

The exhibitors have to depend on the press sheets and cuts to make up their own ads. The press sheets serve their purpose all right in this way, but it is a crime the way the average small town newspaper throws these type together in making up an ad. The result is that the picture gets a botchy looking display, just as well as the advertising of all the merchants in town.

On the other hand the film companies get some magnificent looking advertisements with beautiful art work in the national trade journals. Why couldn't the film companies have mats of these splendid ads just as they are and send them along to the exhibitors?

They say the small town exhibitor cannot use them. But that isn't so, for I have just proved that he can. I am a small town exhibitor, so called. Wausau is a city of 20,000 population, and the one daily newspaper in town had no machine for cutting up mats. This newspaper was no exception to the general run of small town newspapers when it comes to the proposition of making improvements. We have received little or no cooperation from it, and at one time as a result of a disagreement on the subject of advertising, I withdrew my advertising for a solid year, running a small house organ or program that kept the movie loving public informed on current attractions. This paper is so small and narrow-minded in its policy that if it runs a story concerning a certain physician in town it never gives him his proper title, calling him Mr. Smith instead of Dr. Smith, for otherwise, the editor reasons, it would be giving his practice some free advertising. Naturally I could not expect much from such people, so when I suggested that they install a mat cutting machine for the benefit of all advertisers they were horrified at the thought and refused point blank.

But this setback did not discourage me. I ordered my own mat cutting machine, and am now able to run the best looking ads in the paper.

Other exhibitors should not encounter as much trouble with their newspapers as I have, and I am confident if they got together with the other newspaper advertisers, they could induce their newspapers to see the advantage and economy in having mat cutting machines. It is a fact that while a country typesetter is working for an hour and a half or two hours on an ad a mat cutting machine could turn out fifty ads. And instead of having a bunch of junk type thrown together any old way, the newspaper would have a really neat looking lot of ads. If the exhibitor cannot win this much cooperation, then it would pay him to get his own machine for cutting mats, as I have done. He could get one of these machines for from $25 to $75, and it would be a mighty profitable investment. And as a result the small town exhibitor would have the only good looking ads in his paper! Wouldn't that be an objective well worth going after? I believe so and that is why I have bought my own mat cutting machine.

But the most important point of all is the need for cooperation between the exhibitor and the distributor. If the distributor will not furnish him with the mats, then the exhibitor's cutting machine is only a white elephant on his hands. I appeal to the film companies to furnish the use of mats of their best advertisements and encourage the exhibitors in the use of them. By doing so they will only help their own game along, for if their pictures receive better advertising in the exhibitors' newspapers they are certainly going to attract better business.

I think this is a subject that deserves the most serious consideration, owing to the immense possibilities in it. Just think of the advantage the motion picture industry would gain over other advertisers if their advertising stood out and scintillated above all advertising matter in the small town papers!

Something ought to be done to give both the exhibitors and the distributors a jolt to make them alive to their opportunities in this connection.

Of course, the small town papers can handle cuts, but cuts are an expensive proposition. They are easily lost and about half of them never come back when once they are sent out. A good mat with a picture in it is far more desirable to my way of thinking.

If exhibitors were supplied with mats and were equipped to handle them, there would be no need for the present lengthy press sheets that are gotten out. Of course, the press sheets would always be desirable anyway, but they would not be largely solved for the small town exhibitor by the universal use of mats, and he would no longer have to crack his brain planning advertising that nine times out of ten jumbled together in any old way by the printers. The press sheets would still serve with their suggestions for readers, exploitation schemes, etc. The mats could be used to very good advantage in getting out handmade as well as with newspaper advertising.

The average press sheet gotten out today could stand for a great deal of improvement. I think that Paramount gets out about the best. First National gets out a helpful press sheet. While all of them could bear improvement, none is without some good, and under existing conditions the exhibitor could not very well get along without them.

From time to time I have taken advantage of the press sheet suggestions for novel methods of exploitation and for preparing the folders for sale and giving them, but in too many instances these suggestions are not feasible for the small town exhibitor because they are either too costly or too impractical to put into operation with the facilities he has at hand. We need ideas on how to exploit our pictures to the best possible advantage, but these ideas should be reasonable first of all.
Two Exceptional Exploitation Displays For Your Lobby

For advertising the serial "The Lion Man" the Whitehouse Theatre at Milwaukee, Wis., built an "animal cage" over the box office and kept a "lion" therein. Here the "cage" was constructed and the "lion" is shown above.

Above is shown the acrrix who advertised "The Great Air Robbery" as described on the opposite page. Even in New York, where people are used to "freaks," the stunt of the young woman dressed and resembling Francis Billington attracted a lot of attention and was responsible for much extra business for the engagement.

Masked Girl in Automobile Gets Charleston's Attention

Auto Dealer and Showmen Work "Mystery Girl" Stunt for "Everywoman"

MANAGER T. L. KEARSE and House Manager Tom Morrow of the Strand, Charleston, W. Va., put on a big campaign behind "Everywoman," in cooperation with the exploitation men of the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It so happened that just the week before "Everywoman" opened, another exploitation campaign on a picture of similar title had been put on in Charleston. This made it necessary to devise new and unused means of exploiting the Paramount-Aircraft picture.

The flash of the campaign was a "masked girl" stunt. Securing the cooperation of the Hudson auto dealer in Charleston, Manager Morrow labeled the car "Everywoman's Car" and in the town placed a girl wearing a mask. The car wended its way through the principal streets. On the screen of the theatre, a slide was flashed: "A free ticket to the first ten persons who identify the masked girl in 'Everywoman's' Hudson car. She has lived in Charleston fifteen years."

The girl was an assistant cashier. The "lived in Charleston fifteen years" aroused curiosity and a desire to identify the girl. The stunt aroused a lot of attention.

Mr. Morrow, through his friendship with a laundry owner, succeeded in having wrapped into laundry packages hundreds of "Everywoman" heralds. A leading store also agreed to wrap heralds in all packages. Just about every other store in Charleston had some kind of a window display—eidercuts, especially painted cards with mortised "still" inserts or lithographs, and sometimes all three. The cards tied up with florists, dry goods stores, clothing stores, jewelers, drug stores, candy stores and furniture dealers.

The lobby of the theatre was decorated with cut-outs, the mysterious nobody setting high over the entrance on a balcony. Big newspaper space was used, augmented with special tie-up ads, used individually instead of in a page layout, because that stunt had been used the week before.

In the reading notices on the engagement, stress was laid on the "morality play" idea, making it appear as a special booking apropos of the Lenten season. In Charleston, the abstemious from moving going was emphasized by some of the churches during Lent.

Not overlooking any bets, Manager Morrow secured a way to get his message into the auto show which was being held in Charleston the week before "Everywoman" arrived. He "sold" the idea to the Hudson dealer to carry the "masked girl" stunt right into the auto show, and there she sat, surrounded with "Everywoman" lithographs and placards—right in the midst of the auto show crowds. The Hudson exhibit was the biggest crowd attractor of any, and the dealer was mightily pleased.

Aviatrix Great Success for "Air Robbery"

The Consolidated Amusement Company, which operates a large chain of theatres, recently took advantage of the average man's interest in pretty girls to exploit "The Great Air Robbery."

Mr. Mangini, manager of the Arena theatre, 41st Street and Eighth Avenue, New York city, the key theatre of the Consolidated circuit, searched until he found a pretty New Yorker resembling Miss Billington. She was outfitted in smart togs including leather aviatrix coat, headgear, goggles and everything else that goes to dress a flyer.

For eight days before the showing at the Arena theatre, which was the first of the Consolidated theatres to play the picture, the impersonator strolled the avenue. During the day, Mr. Mangini had her take her station principally in the theatre lobby or in the immediate neighborhood.

In the evening he would send her farther afield, always flanked by some sturdy protectors.

In an interview Mr. Mangini said: "It was a great success. Our actress passed hardly a person in crowded Eighth Avenue who did not turn to look or maybe stop altogether. Incidentally they passed some remark; groups discussed her among themselves and we built up more conversation about her and what she represented than probably any picture ever enjoyed before its showing."

"We had her give out little cards with catch sayings and the dates on which 'The Great Air Robbery' would play at the Arena. We avoided mentioning the name of the theatre, thus adding a bit of mystery. Of course, it was quickly evident that she was impersonating Miss Billington, but it was more interesting for the passers-by to work this out for themselves than to have us tell them."

"The number of persons who saw our actress during the week before we played the picture can hardly be estimated, but I should judge they ran into the tens of thousands. Eighth Avenue is always a crowded thoroughfare; we are right in the heart of the Forty-second street traffic and we had her in the parade constantly."

"The Arena theatre and the Consolidated have never done any of this sort of thing before; we have always kept to the so-called 'usual' sort of advertising. But after this believe we will do more of the usual kind of exploitation. It worked so well and it was so interesting while it lasted that I am going to try it again."

"Another thing: I notice that it helps business all the while. The 'stunt' is being worked, even though the picture that is being advertised is a week away."

"Critic Contest" Wins at Jackson, Mich.

The interesting contest devised by Harry R. Guest, Press and Service Representative of Goldwyn Pictures for the Detroit district, might be labeled by the name of either "The Great Film Inter-City." At any rate, his appeal was directly to the multitude of potential motion picture critics, urged to vote their opinion but normally without any outlet for that critical faculty.

Jackson, Mich., got a healthy installment of Goldwyn productions. Five Goldwyn features were played in thirteen days by the Majestic theatre. It was necessary not only to raise interest in the community, but to sustain it. With the cooperation of the Jackson News, a Photoplay Critic Contest was inaugurated. The public was urged to see as many of the Goldwyn pictures as possible, then to write a letter of one hundred words or less on any one of them, comparing it where possible with the other productions.

The contest closed soon after the completion of the extended Goldwyn engagement. The letters poured into the office of the Jackson News continually and in big volume. News items and paid advertising kept the public apprised of the contest's progress.

NEILAN'S NEXT IS ANNOUNCED

For the past month the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been running "Don't Ever Marry" in page advertisements in the trade papers. Considerable interest has been created around the trade as to why, what and how, and further information being available at the First National headquarters or exchanges.

And now the secret is out. "Don't Ever Marry" is the title of Marshall Neilan's second independent production to be released via First National, following "The River's End," the well-known screen hit of 1929.

This also accounts for the careful evasion of all mention as to title and details concerning Marshall Neilan's new film following "The River's End." From the publicity department of the Neilan organization there have been frequent hints as to the great "commercial possibilities" of the title, but that was all.

The second Neilan offering is an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's story which created great interest when it ran as a serial recently in the All Story Magazine. Every exploitation opportunity available in connection with this striking title was taken advantage of in what is conceded to be one of the most extensive and novel campaigns prepared for a motion picture. This campaign includes many unusual stunt suggestions for exhibitors together with newspaper and other tie-ups which will give the showman wide scope in handling this production.

"Don't Ever Marry" was adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax, whose work in connection with "The River's End" attracted great interest in and out of the trade. The story is one in which the heroine, played by Matt Moore, is a victim of circumstantial evidence. She, recently married to the girl of his choice, is claimed as husband by two other women, one of whom has an excellent reason for her false claim. In his efforts to explain his position in the many complicated situations that arise and at the same time retain the love of his wife and avoid a check with his false father, he is continually stepping from one predicament into another.

The picture is now finished and will receive its final treatment at the Roachester laboratory in the next week. It is said to be a fast moving comedy presenting throughout many typical Marshall Neilan touches of humor which have distinguished his pictures.

To get the desired background for the chief action of the plot, Mr. Neilan engaged one of the most exclusive locations in the world: the Dunlap Fairbanks studio in Hollywood where several large sets were erected.

The first of the Grievor Educational Weeklys produced by the Photography and direction are excellent, the various parts are filled by competent actors and the entire picture holds the interest of the audience.

The first part of the film is a presentation of the Indian Legend of how the Great Spirit first gave maize, or Indian Corn, to his children. The picture closely follows the legend as told in Longfellow's "Hiawatha." Director Ray Aitken, in charge of all Real Redkins to Deer Creek and Stoned Rock, a locality of primeval beauty and rich in Indian history, and the Aborigines showed dignity and ability at picture actors.

Following the legend of corn... coming to earth, the picture visualizes how man in the Twentieth Century can impress the spirit of nature into the tasteful foods millions of people throughout the world enjoy daily.

Star to Start Work Soon on New Christie Comedy at Hollywood

W. Scott Darling is now writing the continuity of Miss Havey's original story, while William Beaudine has been assigned to the direction. The story is a farce comedy, not unlike the comedy roles in which Miss Tincher first appeared on the screen in the D. W. Griffith company.

Earl Roden, Helen Darling, Jimmie Harrison and others of the Christie company of stock players will also appear in the new comedy. Of the twelve two-reel Christie Comedies produced last year, Miss Tincher appeared in six, these being "Sally's Blighted Career," "Rowdy Ann," "Mary Moves In," "Dangerous Nan McGrew," "Wild and Western," and "Go West—Young Woman."

E. S. Manheimer of Film Exchange Signs Star for Two 1920 Serials

E. S. MANHEIMER, one of the pioneers in the serial game, has recently signed up Ben Wilson, the screen star, to produce two serials for the current year. "In addition," said Mr. Manheimer, "I am fortunate enough to get Neva Gerber to play the leading female role, and let me say right now, this combination is unbeatable in the serial world. Just recall for a minute Ben Wilson's successes, such as the 'Voice on the Wire,' and you will see why I consider Wilson the biggest bet of the day."

"Why, although he only left for California several weeks ago, I received a wire from him today stating that he has already acquired one of the best serials on the market and that he is going right ahead. Even though I have been led to expect such rapid fire reports, you can be sure that this one was a real surprise. As for the outcome of Wilson's first serial, I am confident that it will be one of his best and there is every precedent to forecast this."

"Is that all I have in the serial line?" repeated Mr. Manheimer quizzically, in reply to a question put to him. "I have the foreign rights for some of the best serials on the market today. First, there is 'The Mystery Mind,' starring Robert Pauline, Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer and Peggy Shanor. Then there is 'The Fatal Sign,' featuring Harry Carter and Claire Anderson, which I have greedily sold for entire foreign rights excluding but several territories."

South Fetes Photoplay Stars

By Helen Moyer

"A UNIQUE event in the history of the screen was the trip to Knoxville and Atlanta by Marcus Loew and a collection of famous stars of the screen. The remarkable feature of the trip was the welcome given the stars by every city visited, indicating the enormous interest in film personalities in the part of the general public. One paper in Nashville stated the reception given the stars was greater than that given Pershing, Bryan, Wilson, or the regular soldier boys. "Looking back upon it, it seems like a dream; a week's succession of parades, brass bands, receptions, just purchased four-star country clubs and appearances at theatres, with very little of the usual whole lot of excitement and the greatest time of any of us has ever known in all our lives. We were startled, fought over, dined upon, and no foreign was ever was, and we enjoyed it all, every minute of it, and every bit of it. We were making film history, and showed the world that the stars were greater interest in the stars than in the great public officials. The reception given the stars in every city exceeded any welcome ever given anybody.

It would take several volumes to describe in detail, but a few touches here and there might be interesting. First the personnel of the participating parties. Let me say here that they're a wonderful cross section of film personalities separating on our return made all well, and we weren't ashamed of the picture. We gave six pictures, put them in a private car, rush them through the South at top speed for seven days, and something is bound to break, but not with the crowd. They didn't have a fight on the entire trip.

Marcus Loew headed the party. He was born to a ragged edge, and had to take a week off to recuperate from the excitement when he got back, but he certainly enjoyed it, and made everyone else enjoy it. Thus came Hollywood, the greatest of all dances of hats types, the toast of Broadway, but more than that, a wonderful girl. Then we had June LaBey, Reginald De Remer, with an $8,000 mink coat and two ear rings diamonds; Juliana Water with her smile and dimples; Claire Whitney, with a million dollars' worth of personality; Mildred Reardon, the baby of the party; Anne Lawler, notable for her wild-red hair and her disposition; Jack Clifford, former partner and husband of Evelyn Nesbit, who charmed with Miss Lawler; Taylor Holmes, the gentle man and great actor; Frank Saunders, Durandina's husband, and Harold Stern, a director of the Loew corporation.

"We were all more dead than alive when we stumbled into our rooms in Mr. Loew's private car on that last night, but we left behind us vivid memories of marvellous days and nights, which we can never forget, and splendid men and women who made up our party, and who altogether helped make it a visit and glorious success.

This gang would follow Mr. Loew to Zanzibar should he ever plan to open a theatre there. We're all looking forward to his next opening. Try to keep us away, that's all."

The Cincinnati Post, one of the most influential afternoon papers in Southern Ohio, has just opened a daily moving picture column. Frank Reistock, editor, and Ralph Chandle, advertising manager of the Post are staunch advocates of moving picture news as circulation and advertising builders. The new daily feature started off with a two-column cut and story on Violet Fleming in Everywoman and stories about "The Copperhead" and "April Folly."

George Beban Finishing Latest Production

Beban wrote the story of "One Man in a Million," starred in it, along with his son George Beban, Jr., and directed the action.

Company Buys Fourteen Farces

THERE Charles Ray Productions, Inc., has just purchased the rights of fourteen of the most famous of Charles Hoyt's dramatic works for adaptation to the screen. With a score of stage tickets, the acquisition of these well-known farce comedies gives the company possession of a wealth of screen material which, in its original form, constituted the most popular theatrical amusement of the last generation.

The deal which brings these famous dramatic pieces to the Charles Ray Productions was consummated a week in Los Angeles. The group of Hoyt plays includes: "A Black Monkey," "A Brass Monkey," "A Confused Woman," "A Day and a Night," "A Dog in the Manger," "A Hole in the Ground," "A Midnight Bell," "A Mite While Early," "A Rag Baby," "A Runaway Coll," "A Stranger in New York," "A Trip to Chautauqua," "A Texas Steer," "A Temperance Town." It is not known whether Mr. Ray will find any of these plays adaptable to his own personal use, but the new star-producer is considered to have put over a clever business coup by the acquisition of the fourteen Hoyt comedies for the Charles Ray Productions, Inc.

It does not require much thinking back on the part of adults of today to remember the starting vogue of which the farce comedies of Charles H. Hoyt had in this country from ten to twenty years ago. These stage pieces, which were unusually adapted to use by stock companies, were played extensively in all sections of the country and the name of Hoyt was as well known in the smaller cities of the nation as in the large cities.

Through all of this playwright's work ran a vein of genial warmth and of sparkling humor. They were popular in the simplest sense of that word, for their appeal was not to any one class of the population but to the millions. The Hoyt plays never failed to draw full houses, the reason being that they aimed at nothing more than to furnish an evening of fun, simple, innocent fun, and gave to the mass of the people what seems requisite to comfortable existence - an occasional sermon of afterthought for amusement.

Believing that these qualities in the Hoyt collection will be particularly welcome to the photoplay medium which appeals to a vast, conglomerate audience, the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., are contemplating the filming of the comedies. The unique situations, the true-life characters, and the bright humor of the Hoyt plays are expected to develop into a superior brand of screen farce.

The author, Charles H. Hoyt, began his career as a newspaper man in Vermont, and later became a well-known member of the Boston theater staff, handling several departmen in turn. As a dramatic critic, he was connected with theatrical weekly papers and with the Boston Post, handling several departmen in turn. As a dramatic critic, he was connected with theatrical weekly papers and with the Boston Post, handling several departmen in turn. He was a member of the American Theater Association, the American Federation of Dramatic Clubs, and the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. He has been a frequent contributor to many theatrical publications, and has contributed extensive articles and reviews to leading newspapers and magazines. His work has been characterized by a genuine love of the theater and a sound knowledge of its history and development.
"Man to Man" for Screen
Universal-Educational to Produce
Work of John Leitch for Screen

JOHN LEITCH, author of "Man to Man," a work which is declared to have been translated into seven languages and to have had twenty-three English editions, has written a scenario of his book in collaboration with Harry Levey of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's educational department. This scenario is to serve as the working basis for the picturization of Mr. Leitch's "Man to Man," the production of which is to be undertaken by the Universal-Educational forces. Mr. Harry Levey will direct the picture, and the author himself is scheduled to appear in the leading part.

The following statement has been issued, concerning the message that "Man to Man" has to offer as a means of bringing employers and their employees into earnest and pleasant cooperation:

"Under John Leitch's system of industrial democracy, now being picturized by Harry Levey, a plant is governed by a House of Representatives, a Senate and a Cabinet. The House has one representative for every 20 to 100 workers, the workers themselves electing their own representatives. The Senate is not elective; it includes minor executives, department heads, foremen, and others. According to the organization, the Cabinet is composed of the executive officers of the company, with the president as chairman. The House and Senate "pass" the laws. The Cabinet has the power of veto, but this power has rarely, if ever, been exercised. Questions of wages, of piece rates, of discharges, of grievances of any kind whatsoever, as well as ways and means of reducing costs, are handled by the House."

Speaking of the cost of the forthcoming production, which, it is estimated, will run into six figures, Mr. Leitch, who regards the screening of his work as an historic mark in the development of the motion-picture, is quoted as having declared: "If the picture costs $250,000 to complete I shall be pleased. If it costs twice that sum I shall be better pleased. The money is ready."

Universal Buys Stage Hit
"La La Lucille" Will Be Picturized as Second Five-Reel Comedy

"La, La, Lucille," the musical comedy by Fred Jackson, which made a hit on Broadway last season, has been bought for picturization by Universal and will be the second five-reel comedy turned out by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

The two comedians are just completing their first venture into five-reel comedy, "Everything but the Truth," from a magazine story by Edgar Franklin.

Universal is said to have paid a handsome price for right to "La, La, Lucille." It was announced that this is part of the plan to supply the popular fun-filers with the best stories that money can buy. It also may be taken as an indication that Carl Laemmle, who now is at Universal City, Cal., has seen the test film of "Everything but the Truth," and is highly pleased with the result of his experiment in letting Lyons and Moran tackle long comedies.

"La, La, Lucille" played at the Henry Miller theatre in New York for six months and, at the Criterion for several additional months. The principals in the cast were John E. Hassard, Janet Vele and Henry Clarke. One company of "La, La, Lucille" is now touring in the South and another company is expected to start on tour about the time the Universal picture will be released.

Metro Farce Under Way
Production of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" Begins at Hollywood

PRODUCTION of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a picturization of the successful stage farce by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, has been begun at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal. This special feature, with an all-star cast headed by Ruth Stonehouse and Eugene Pallette, will start a forthcoming Losco-Metro release and constitute another link in the company's chain of noted plays by noted authors.

In the selection of the cast for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," great care was exercised by Metro officials to obtain precisely the types necessary to portray the various roles. Toward this end the choice of Ruth Stonehouse for the role of Polly H-theway, the sly, society society society reporter who becomes a "wild woman," was considered ideal. This is the part created in the stage production by Florence Moore, when the comedy made its great hit in New York a few seasons back.

Others in the all-star cast of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" besides Mr. Pallette, who will contribute to its uproarious merriment as a screen entertainment, are Kathleen Kirkham, Charles R. West, Helene Sullivan, George Periolat, Dorothy Wallace and Henry Miller, a son of Henry Miller, the well-known stage star.

Tom Terriss, who is scheduled to direct a series of special productions for Vitagraph.

New Company to Film "Black Sheep"

The Ore-Col Film corporation, recently organized in Portland, Ore., with A. D. Frost, president, and O. D. Woodward, vice-president, have purchased the "Black Sheep" rights from Frank G. Payne. The continuity is being written by Mr. Arthur Maude.

The Ore-Col Film Corporation has secured the services of Director John B. O'Brien. Among the cast will be:

Holmes Edward Herbert, Alice Mann, Hugh Huntley, John Hopkins, Walter P. Lewis and Byron Russell.

The production is to be made in Denver, Colo., and work will start at once.

Record Set by "Jekyll and Hyde" Picture

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the Paramount-Artcraft super-special, in which John Barrymore is starred, set up during Holy Week at the Rivoli Theatre the most astonishing attendance record in the history of Broadway picture houses, according to figures made public by the Rialto-Rivoli management. The superintendent that with total paid admissions for the week of 60,646, the best previous week was broken by 3,000. Transferred to the Rialto, where it is now playing, it proceeded to shatter the records it had set up at the Rivoli and on Sunday exceeded 10,513 paid admissions, eclipsing the best previous performances in either house for a single day.

The famous novelist, Robert W. Chambers, and Marion Davies, the Cosmopolitan Productions star, talk over Miss Davies' latest feature, "April Folly."
Mrs. Chaplin Scores in First-Run Theatres

The success attending the showing of Mildred Harris Chaplin's Morena made the night a notable attraction. "The Interior Sex," in several of the first-run cities, seems to guarantee the effective getting over of this star, according to the producers.

In Milwaukee the newspaper critics were particularly Deputy of both the star and the picture and declared it was the best Mrs. Chaplin had yet made.

Radiosoul Opens Exchange in New York

The Radiosoul Films, Inc., has opened an exchange of its own at 26 West 46th Street, New York, for the purpose of distributing Henriksen's "A Man There Was." The organization is now working upon its second picture, called "The Eternal Feminine," again with Victor Seastrom in the direction and star, and which, when finished, will be released as a super-feature.

Novograph Establishes Executive Offices

The Novograph Film Corporation, producers of the "Analysis of Motion" pictures which appeared weekly in the Pathé Review, have found it necessary to establish executive and conference offices in 25 West 45th street, New York. They will take possession on May 1st.

J. S. Dawley to Direct Australian Drama

J. Searle Dawley, director of "The Harvest Moon," latest Gibralter picture from the drama of Augustus Thomas, has been returned to revise for release in Australia drama, "The Wallaby Hunt," which had a long run in Sydney and Melbourne last year.

"Uneasy Feet" Is Well Received in West

THE first Comediant production to be received by Special Pictures Corporation, "Uneasy Feet," was received with such applause by the audience, while playing at Goldwyn's California theatre, Los Angeles, that Manager Robert Poole was compelled to give a second showing of the film for the exhibitors.

The local press and the trade publications have given the picture favorable criticism. The Rialto, New York, has signed the comedy for a second week with an option on a third. In Portland, New York, is also giving the picture a second-week showing. Reports from twenty-two exchanges tell of heavy bookings on the second Comediant release, "I'ma Vamp," to be released April 4th.

Arsene Lupin Stories Bought

Robertson-Cole Will Re-Make Famous French Stories

Robertson-Cole, in one of the most important statements of the year, has announced the signing of a contract which obtains the complete screen rights to the Arsene Lupin detective stories, which were written by Maurice Leblanc, and which have been, with the cooperation of the most celebrated series of criminal studies and romances from a world standpoint. The Robertson-Cole contract will cover a period of years, and during this time the district screen will have the exclusive right to use all the stories from the collection.

Arsene Lupin, the character who has been pitted against Conan Doyle's famous character, Sherlock Holmes, whom he repeatedly bests in one of the most popular books of the Universal will be known as "Arsene Lupin vs Sherlock Holmes." The stories of the famous French detective of criminal studies, which have been printed in open print in various languages, and the productions, it is believed, will find an immediate audience with world civilizations.

The pictures, which will be based on the Arsene Lupin stories for distribution by Robertson-Cole, are not the first screen productions which have been made in this country. Paramount-Artert and Vitagraph have each made one picturized version. The present plan is to release a limited number each year, and to market them as "Specials." Work on the first production is to start shortly.

Robertson-Cole in contracts for the Arsene Lupin series of stories dealt directly with Joseph Menken, who controls the world rights. The first one of the stories which will be put on the screen is "813," one of the most dramatic and mysterious of the whole series of Arsene Lupin stories.

Robertson-Cole has under contract for appearance as the leading character of this story, Wdeforduc Nowell. This artist is said to fit more closely into the personal appearance and characteristics of the role of Arsene Lupin as it is described in the story than any other motion picture actor. He had a stage career in which he supported Blanche Bates, Anita Louise, and William Paverham, before going on the screen.

Arsene Lupin stories, as described in the Leblanc stories as having been first a noted criminal with whom the reader could not cope and later having medled his ways to become a government agent. His vast fund of information regarding the methods of criminals was of such help to the French government as to render him invaluable in the detection and arrest of criminals. Besides the book "Arsene Lupin vs Sherlock Holmes," four other volumes have been issued of these books. Each volume contains a great number of stories, furnishing in the aggregate an enormous wealth of material for the producer seeking a story of mystery.

Robertson-Cole is counting on the failure of the public which is world-wide, to be a tremendous factor in the distribution of this picture. However, no expense or time will be spared in making each picture an attraction which can stand on its own merits.

"Star Series" Plan Is Back

PREVIOUS to the release of the Big Twelve, "The Big Money Twelve" and the "S. D. T Twelve," Universal released its pictures under the "Star Series" plan. While the three series have been successful for exhibitors, there has been no assurance demanded for the assumption of the series sales plan, and Mr. Laemmle, president of Universal, has not only agreed to put the old plan back again, but extend it considerably.

The star series plan contemplates featuring the exceptional pictures pictured in rotation by six popular Universal stars. The first picture under this policy will be released the last week of July, and will be followed every week.

Mr. Laemmle was not only guided by the expressions of exhibitors, but the leading exchange managers of the organization were consulted. At conventions held in New York and Chicago two weeks ago, the unanimous opinion of exchange managers was to the effect that the star series plan was the most popular plan which enables any exhibitor to obtain high class Universal pictures suitable for his particular theatre and patrons.

The stars chosen for the series are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Mary Astor, William Colton, Leon Hoyt, Rhodes, and Lea Maron (co-starring) and one other star not yet named. Each of these stars will make eight pictures under the new plan.

"I believe," said Mr. Laemmle, discussing the star series plan, "that this plan will be able to give the best possible service to the maximum number of exhibitors under this plan. We have taken into consideration that some of our stars draw better than others in certain localities. An exhibitor now will be able to book pictures by the star he knows are popular with his patrons. He also will be certain of eight pictures by each of the stars he books. He will be insured against competition for an entire year.

"We are announcing this new series now so that our exhibitors will know that they can count on first-class Universal pictures with which to fill their theatres during the hot summer months.

"Every effort is being made to make the Star Series the best all-around film product turned out in the business. Particular attention is being paid to the selection of stories. We have had experts analyzing the kind of pictures in which our stars have made the greatest appeal to all sections of the country.

"These are the kinds of pictures our exhibitors want and those are the kinds of pictures we are giving them," added Mr. Laemmle. Already a number of popular magazine stories by well-known authors, sensitive stories of unusual merit, and the return to several successful plays have been obtained.

"Douglas S. D. O. Sty, known as one of the ablest fiction readers and writers in the magazine world, who at one time was the editor of The Century Magazine and later of The Cosmopolitan, has been engaged to occupy a prominent post in the Universal scenario department. He has just arrived at Universal City, the Universal west coast studios.

"These folders for the journalism of the trade has attained a staff of five able men, and who recently was the chief scenarist for the Vitagraph Company, also has been engaged at Los Angeles, to take charge of the scenarios for the Star Series.

Exhibitors All Praise "Forbidden Woman"

Equity Pictures secondo Clara Kimball Young production, "The Forbidden Woman," is carrying away all honors in cities in which it is shown by its remarkable securing and box office reports from exhibitors who have already shown the picture indicates Equity Pictures. "The Forbidden Woman," by comparison, is carrying new reports to issue in that it is even exceeding the demand of the exhibitors with "Eyes of Youth."
Exploitation Dept. is Enlarged

O N of the most important announcements made, following the recent sales convention of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Chicago, was that concerning the proposed expansion of the exploitation department. At the convention it was the consensus of opinion that new talent, as well as effective, that the exploitation men had more than justified their existence, so to speak, and that the force ought to be augmented so that every Famous Players-Lasky exchange in the country should have an exploitation representative.

Both President Adolph Zukor and Al Lichtenstein, general manager of distribution, were in agreement in praising the work accomplished by the department under the supervision of Chard Samuels, and Mr. Samuels was forthwith given authority to so enlarge the personnel and scope of the department so that every practically every town of importance in the country eventually would be able to avail itself of the services of an exploitation expert.

Since returning from Chicago,
Mr. Samuels and his assistants have largely occupied with the details of his department's expansion, and within the past few weeks nearly fifteen new men have received assignments to the various exchanges. In some cases older men, members of the original personnel of the department, have been given new assignments, the larger and more important centers, as a rule being placed in charge of the older men.

The list of appointees is now practically complete, the following being the present personnel of the force:

- A. G. Birch, Denver, Colo.;
- E. O. Child, New Orleans, La.;
- Frank A. Cassidy, Chicago, Ill.;
- Norman H. Dixon, Des Moines, Ia.;
- Oscar A. Doob, Cincinnati, O.;
- John P. Goring, Kansas City, Mo.;
- Harold Healy, New York City; John
D. Howard, San Francisco, Cal.;
- Bess Fashin, Charlotte, N.C.;
- Walter Kirda, Minneapolis, Minn.;
- John J. Maloney, Pittsburgh, Pa.;
- Fred W. McClellan, Philadelphia, Pa.;
- John P. McCollum, Buffalo, N.Y.;
- Paul L. Morgan, New Haven, Conn.;
- Hal Alger, Ottawa;
- N. K. Parkhurst, Salt Lake City, Utah;
- Norman Peel, Okla-
home City, Okla.;
- Herman Phillips, Washington, D. C.;
- H. Wayne Pierson, Atlanta, Ga.;
- Al Prine, Los Angeles, Cal.;
- Charles Raymond, St.
Louis, Mo.;
- Daniel Rocke, Chi-
tago, Ill.
- Washland H. Taylor,
- Seattle, Wash.;
- Fred E. Walters,
- Cleveland, O.;
- Leslie F. Wielen,
- Dallas, Tex.;
- Charles L. Winston,
- Boston, Mass. (temporarily).

"The best feature of the work of our department," said Exploration Manager Samuels, "is the fact that we have sold the exhibitors on the proposition. When we started in, not a few men were skeptical, and of these nearly all practically refused to be shown. But there were exhibitors, big ones, too, who welcomed the aid we offered them and gave their complete cooperation. The result of the work successfully accomplished by our men in putting over George Loose Trecker's 'The Miracle Man,' the first of our super-specials, was an eye-opener. So when Cecil B. DeMille's 'Male and Female' came along, we had a record to point to.

"What Happened? Where 'The Miracle Man' broke records, 'Male and Female' broke them again. The demand for the exploitation men increased a hundred per cent. Then came 'Everywoman,' and there were more new records set up. And what has been with 'The Copperhead,' 'On With the Dance' and the other super-specials. Moreover, the expansion of the department makes it possible for us to give personal attention to second and third-run houses, and in many instances houses of these class has duplicated the successes scored in the larger centers."

The Big Author in Filmland

Tamar Lane Decrees Practice of Preferring Authors to Stories

The following expression of opinion comes from Tamar
Lane, production manager of the Character Pictures, and centers around the question: Are "Big Authors" worth while in the picture industry? Mr. Lane says:

"It has been amusing during the past few months to watch the producer in their mind scramble to secure 'Big Authors,' vying with one another to get an imaginary corner on the imaginary market. It seems true that some one gave the infant industry a new bottle of milk and scratched up the surface a bit.
The producers, who are scrambling to get these 'Big Authors,' are merely covering up their inability to secure good stories by a camouflage of big names. The worst of it is, the exhibitors are paying dearly for
it.

"This does not mean that Character Pictures is averse to buying the works of successful authors and playwrights as we have already purchased several, but they were not bought because they were written by 'Big Authors' but because they were 'Big Stories.' And that is what the screen needs—'Big Stories.'
It matters not who they are written by."

"There is no reason for making such a big fuss over the 'Big Author,' as through the entire salvation of the silent drama depended upon them. We are all very glad to have as many brilliant men as possible turn their attention to the motion picture, but simply because they are well known and have done a success at writing fiction is no reason we should humbly prostrate before them."

"Before the 'Big Authors' are awarded such royal receptions and treated with such importance, they should first show, at least, a sympathy in their motion picture work and evidence an ability to write as well for the screen as we, our own original scenario writers."

Acquires New Authors
Goldwyn Adds Cynthia Stockley and E. P. Oppenheim to Its List

A DDED to the list of well-known authors whose works are being transformed into photoplays by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, are two more names that stand for the best in current fiction both here and in England, E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley.

Cynthia Stockley, author of "The Silver Horde," is the pen name of Mrs. Cynthia Stockley; her other books include "The Golden Horde," "The Victorian Bride," and "The Wild Honey." Her works are always marked by fast action and dramatic incident. Among her books published during the last ten years are "The Yellow Meadow," "The Amazing Partnership," "The Curious Quest," and "Her Life in South Africa." Her novels have been translated into all the major languages of the world.

E. Phillips Oppenheim, author of "The Amulet," "The Man in Shadow," and "The Englishman's Son," has had a large sale. She lived all of her early life in South Africa and most of her books deal with the Free State and its people.

Goldwyn has yet announced its selection of the first works of the two English novelists it has filmed.
Improve Screen via Scenario

That Is the Dictum of William LeBaron of Cosmopolitan

WILLIAM F. BARON, scenario editor for Cosmopolitan, recently issued a statement on the relation of the scenario writer to the screen of the future. To Mr. LeBaron, the improvement of the screen as a vehicle of original expression depends primarily upon the development of writers, whose objective shall be to write for the screen exclusively and directly and not for the screen via the novel or the stage play. Cutting from an authority of Mr. LeBaron’s caliber, this statement contains added force. He was formerly editor of the Courier’s Weekly and is well known as a playwright, two of his best known hits being “The Very Idea” and “Apple Blossoms.” Mr. LeBaron’s statement follows:

“The greatest need of motion picture producers today is to develop writers for the future-specialists in screen material—because only in that way will the motion picture ever attain the standing of true literature, the highest form of pictorial expression, which is its destiny.”

There isn’t any doubt in my mind,” said Mr. LeBaron, “that so far as the scenario department is concerned, the screen is still in its embryonic state. Nor, in my opinion, will the motion picture come into its own until it has established a steady source within itself. While we have today several scenario writers whose weekly salary amounts up to a thousand dollars, we have not one writer who is as expert in his or her field as any one of thirty or forty playwrights I can name is in the production of stage plays, or magazine writers in the production of magazine stories. I mean to say that playwrights and magazine writers have achieved a higher degree of excellence and perfection at their respective callings than have any of our scenario writers at the screen.

If, contrary to first impression, this is a rather hopeful condition because it shows that there are some playwrights and scenario writers at the screen, and the improvement lies with the producers. It is up to them.

“The idea, as I see it, is to encourage able writers to take up the screen. A magazine writer writer with the stage play, and a playwright with the stage. The playwright writes his play with the stage in mind. The writer of the play is vastly different from the technique of either of these. To adapt a magazine story or a play to the screen is not a job that can be done by any one, because it requires a thorough knowledge of the screen’s latitude and copes. We have playwrights who can take a magazine story and adapt it capably to the stage. But we have no one who knows the stage as well as the playwrights know theirs and who can turn out as good work comparatively.

“What we need is able technicians, writers who can adapt for the screen as successfully as playwrights for the stage. We must interest the playwrights in this new form of expression. We must make it profitable for them both from a literary and artistic point of view and in the financial point of view to devote their best energies towards the production and development of screen material. To do so we must compete with the stage. We wish some sort of bonus or reward whereby the writer will profit from his writings in accordance with their value as established by the public.

Perhaps a royalty arrangement like the playwrights’ will do.

But only when we succeed in establishing a field of able technicians who will be as thorough in their work as are the playwrights in their work we shall have right towards insuring and giving to the screen a high quality of photoplays.”

Former Universal Man Heads New Concern

Rockeet, for two years with Universal as purchasing agent, recently tendered his resignation, and last week he became president and general manager of a newly formed organization incorporated as the Ramona Film Corporation of California, with a paid up capital of $100,000. Other officers of the company are A. L. Rockeet, secretary; E. H. Christiansen, vice-president; and S. C. Buchanan, treasurer.

Bert Lytell Praised by Press Reviewers

Unanimous praise from newspaper reviewers greeted the showing of “The Right of Way,” starring Bert Lytell, on the occasion of its recent run at Tally’s Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles. Of “The Right of Way,” Henry E. Dougerty, writing in the Los Angeles Express, said, among other things:

“Mr. Lytell’s performance is so finished that I am sure his newest picture is going to prove a sensation. Those who see the picture will say that its threads have been carefully woven into a priceless fabric—a wonderful play—and through it all scintillates the personality of Bert Lytell.”

Border is Eager to See Pathe's "Rio Grande"

The Edwin Carewe production of Augustus Thomas's famous stage play, "Rio Grande," released by Pathe, is exciting the greatest interest in cities and towns along the Mexican border, and in the last week, one month before the release date, many theaters have wired for early dates on the production. The picture involved the use of several hundred cowboys and Texas rangers.

Among the houses that have already contracted for the picture are the Arizona, New Mexico; the People's theatre, of Port Arthur, Texas, and the Jewel and People's theatres, of Beaumont, Texas. Others have wired for contracts and will close in the next week. Many newspapers have commented on the filming of Mr. Thomas's story, as the public of the area are intimately concerned in the border situation.

Miss Kellerman Makes Underwater Scenes

Annette Kellerman and her company have been devoted the past week to the underwater scenes for her new comedy drama, which she is making with Sol Lesser. A pool of clear water was specially constructed, at Riverside, California, and with the aid of a huge diving bell some of the remarkable underwater photography was secured by the Kellerman cameramen.

During the making of the scenes J. D. Williams, president of the First National, and Sol Lesser, who controls the Los Angeles franchise for the organization, motored to Riverside on a tour of inspection.

Associated Exhibitors Engage Phil Ryan

Phil Ryan, who recently resigned his position as feature sales manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., has become connected with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., with which organization he assumes duties under General Manager F. C. Quinby, which will bring him into intimate touch with the holders of franchises and sub-franchises in the association. It is with the holders and prospective holders of sub-franchises that Mr. Ryan will be concerned most directly.

Pathe Reviews Its Year's Work

WHILE Pathe's feature business during the first three months of this year has been good, for the rate to carry the total figures beyond the best total for any three months in 1919, a consistent effort has been made by officials of the great releasing organization to improve the merit of its product. The success attending some of these efforts was shown by the successful productions of the year, namely, "Other Men's Shoes," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Fighting Cressy," "Smoldering Embers," "Tarnished Reputations" and "The Deadlier Sex.

During March, "Bruno Annivesary Month," when all feature sales and collections of a similar period were shuttered, the releases were "In Walked Mary," starring June Caprice; "Tarnished Reputations," with Dolores Costello, and "The Deadlier Sex," with Blanche Sweet's name billed as the big attraction.

Producers Are Thanked by Capitol Manager

THE following letter was addressed by Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, to the Cosmopolitan Producers:

"At the end of the week of Marion Davies in 'April Folly,' the first of your productions which we have exhibited in the Capitol, I want to thank you for the splendid co-operation you have given us and for the magnificent box-office result.

"As you know, this is Holy Week and we had every reason to anticipate the customary decrease in gross receipts, due to the Lenten observance, but it may gratify you to know that our receipts for this week instead of showing a decrease have shown a very material increase.

"With thanks and appreciation, I remain, Very truly yours, Edward Bowes, Managing Director."

Feature Business for Three Months Beats Previous Year

Each of these productions has been selling at a rate calculated to far exceed the quotas set for them by Pathe.

In the preceding month, "Other Men's Shoes," was the distinguished among the finest Pathe has ever released. In the first month of its existence, the House of Edwar Lewis production went into the discard booking records established by "The Thirteenth Choir" and "Common Clay," which had stood at the top of all feature business.

During February, in addition to "Other Men's Shoes," there was also released "Smoldering Embers," called by some exhibitors and critics the best picture ever produced by Frank Reichen with the execution of "The World Aflame." Another issue was J. Sibbi Blackton's "Respectable by Proxy" starring Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, ranked next to "My Husband's Other Wife" and "The World Aflame." Incidentally the latter production inaugurated the year for Pathe, being the first feature release in January. It recalled to exhibitors some of the great productions made in the past by Comed makers like Bleach and did, and is still doing, a business in proportions exceeding Pathé's expectations by many thousands.

During the first month, "Fighting Cressy" and "The Web of Deceit," and "Miss Shadow," and Dolores Costello were other releases, and they, too, proved not only their class, but became established as the period office attractions of the period.

"Flying A" Picture Named

"The House of Toys" Taken From Novel by Henry Russell Miller

THE forthcoming American super-special is to be called "The House of Toys," a visualization of the novel by the same name, written by Henry Russell Miller, who was made famous by "The Man Higher Up," published by the Bobbs Merrill Company in 1910.

This new "Flying A" drama is one of romance and ambition which rarely misses being a domestic tragedy. In it the doll house dream of the wealthy society girls comes to grief when she marries a talented but the poor architect, and faces the realities of economical home-making, but in the end she reaches the conclusion of a true heroine just before her husband's dream of love is forever shattered.

"The House of Toys" is being directed by George L. Cox, and an unusually well balanced cast has been selected. For the big role of the heroine, "Shirley Lord," Scena Owen has been secured, with Poll Thomas as leading man and Helen Jerome Eddy in a very prominent part. In the cast also are George Hernandez, Lillian Leighton, Marian Skinner, Stanhope Wheatcroft, William Buckley, Henry Barrows and Perry Banks.

Next Clara Kimball Young Issue Discussed at Chicago Meeting

Nazimova Establishes Record

NAZIMOVA established what is for her a speed record in a belting role when she completed her newest Metro picture, "The Heart of a Child," in less than a month. Seven weeks after the public scene that began the play were photoshopped at Silver Lake, Cal., the final scenes were "shot in" at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The leading star carried the role of Sally S nurse. Lamplighters, though, sped up her production to fullest notwithstanding, she was ill with a cold for three days during her period, making as the result of working all night on location in extremely cold weather, Metro declare.

Nazimova played blinkman's buff and other outdoor games during the last days of production. A bank holiday picnic of the employees of a London jam and pickle factory was the occasion, and the scene was supposed to be a pretty stretch of country near London, the British metropolis. Sally S nurse, the little girl in the role of Sally S nurse, is in Frank Vandy's novel, is on the move in the factory and a number of the workers.

Silver Lake is outside of Los Angeles. It is a favorite spot for local photographers, and the possibilities for artistic motion photography were taken full advantage of by R. G. Gomberg, cameraman for the Nazimova production. In "The Heart of a Child" the woodland picnic comes in pleasant contrast to the world Linwood singe.

Sally S nurse is橙色 unrounded except by a large marble of which, at one end of the room, borders a circular pattern. Nazimova is in one of the scenes of her new Metro picture, "The Heart of a Child."

Gladys Brockwell Is Keeping Busy

Completing work in "Rene of Nome," an Alaskan story, written especially for her by Barbara DeMarr Deedy, and the film was directed by the veteran Edward J. Lesaint, Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, stepped over to the studio in the role of Elmo Delane, central character in "Sister to Salome," on the same day she finished her previous vehicle.

"Rene of Nome" was finished by Lesaint in the morning, and the scenario was written by a Wednesday and directed by J. L. Pritchard of the studio, and the star and director studied the story of "Sister to Salome" at the same time. "The Huck Finn picnic" was the dress room and demanded her make-up for the role of "The Huck Finn picnic," by which story was written by C. G. Furtman, who is a recent addition to the Fox scenario staff in California.

Pioneer's "Jekyll and Hyde" Film a Hit

Sheldon Lewis in Pioneer's version of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde is enjoying a bigger box office than almost the same period. It is said that in the New York territory the demand for this picture has been so great that several additional prints have been ordered to fill all the first run contracts, according to Pioneer reports.

Reports from Herman Richlin of the Eastern Feature Company of Boston, who holds the Pioneer franchise for the country, indicate that "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the greatest success that has ever been shown in that territory under the Pioneer flag.

Every exchange of the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System has doubled its order for prints, it is stated, and the result that the laboratories, handling the Pioneer work, are running night and day.

Educational to Own Exchanges

CONTRACTS involving the expenditure of more than a million dollars, signed during the last week, represent some of the recent exchange transactions of the Educational Films Corporation, according to announcement of the company.

Arrangements are progressing with the rapidity consistent with careful selection of representatives for opening of Educational exchanges in principal centres. These will be controlled directly by the company and will handle nothing but short subjects.

During the week contracts were signed with some of the most important educational interests of the country for the establishment of exchanges. Several of the largest centres are already announced for locations of the offices; in addition, are set near the signature point with several others, while a few territories remain open.

While Educational will maintain the controlling interest in each exchange, it is adding a policy whereby men of high standing are interested in this ownership. In almost all cases there are men who have large exhibitor interests and who have been led to become associated with the company because of their knowledge of high quality of Educational product.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, this week outlined the exchange plans for the first time. For the five years of Educational Films Corporation's existence it is stated, "it has been distributing through independent exchanges. For some time we have realized the imperfections of this system. In the first instance, these arrangements have prevented the direct supervision of sales and exploitation that we have desired. While this plan has made money for us and each exchange, we have been satisfied that we are unable to afford the degree of service we desired to give."

"This is no reflection on the men who have been handling our product in the various territories. The chief fault has been the same found in every exchange that handles 'mixed' products—hurried and short subjects. It is natural that exhibitors should devote the greater portion of their time to selling and exploiting pictures that bring the greater volume of revenue. Confined to the handling of short subjects is absolutely essential. We have been convinced for some time that they should be handled by absolutely separate exchanges, and this will be our policy hereafter."

"We believe that our new policy will bring about the three things necessary for a good exchange system: First, the exchange will handle nothing but short subjects, enabling full exploitation in this product that at present it's getting no exploitation at all. Second, we will be able to exert direct control of the exchanges and provide sales arrangements and exploitation aids that will be of direct aid to the exhibitor. Third, the management of the exchange will have financial interest in its earnings, and in its permanency, and therefore there will be no urge for fair business dealing, the failure of cooperation with the exhibitor, and the expectation of a certain volume of business that is bound to have its reflex in the quality of product."

"Some of the leading interests of the country have signed contracts. Other important territories will be closed in hand the Western and Northern number remain open until we get in touch with men whose consideration we consider desirable."

Tarkington Signs Contract
Author to Write Screen Stories for Baker During Current Year

BOOTH TARKINGTON, the well-known fiction writer, has affixed his signature to a contract whereby he agrees, during the current year, to write, directly for the screen. Tarkington, Baker, who has just resigned as general manager of production for Universal, to start his own company, is the man who signed up the famous novelist. Mr. Baker is the author's cousin.

Up to the present time, Mr. Tarkington has beenverse to writing for the screen. It was his judgment that motion picture producers were too much inclined to sacrifice all other considerations to plot alone. He deplored the fact that characterization played, as he saw it, only an insignificantly part in screen productions. "No limitations have been placed on Mr. Tarkington's efforts," states Baker. "He has a free hand. As a result he means to put into his work all the genuineness and enduring characteristic of his plays for the stage. I haven't the remotest idea what he will write about. That is up to him, and I only know that he will write directly for the screen and bring to his credit new fame and glory.

Mr. Tarkington, it is announced, will sign similar contracts with at least three more authors of world-wide prominence. "I believe in the story," Mr. Baker has declared, "Silk purses aren't made of sow's ears; good pictures aren't made out of no good material. The time has come when the author will come into his own with discriminating audiences the country over."

Mayflower Keeps Busy Pace
Isaac Wolper Denies "Split" Between Mayflower and Realart

"split," as the papers choose to call it.

According to Mr. Wolper, several days ago he was warned by a message from Mr. Dwan that the manner in which productions presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation are to be released. As yet, however, no declaration has been closed and consequently nothing definite can be said about the impending arrangement. Mr. Walsh has been working diligently at the Paragon studio on the film version of Paul Armstrong's and Wilson Mizner's famous play and expects to deliver the film to Realart in the next few days. Charles Miller's screen interpretation of Service's classic poem is now being cut and mailed and delivery of the finished picture will be made shortly. Both pictures are scheduled for release through Realart on May 13. Mr. Miller is now looking for another story, and Emil Chahine, producer of the opening work on his latest production, as yet unnamed, Allan Dwan expects to start work on his sixth and last production to be presented by Mayflower the first of next week. Sidney A. Franklin, who is filming Robert W. Chambers' "Madame X," at the Brinon studio, Los Angeles, is well along on production now, having been shooting for the past three months. Having completed "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh is now engaged to be shooting for another story. It is very likely, according to reports, that he will decide upon a vehicle dealing with city life.

Agnes Ayres Is Made Star

FOLLOWING the announcement of the co-operative production alliance between Marshall Neilan and Albert A. Kaufman comes the news of the signing of Agnes Ayres, the beautiful and talented screen actress to a long-term contract by Mr. Kaufman under the terms of which Miss Ayres is to be starred in a series of special features which it is freely predicted will soon bring her into the limelight as one of the really great stars of the photoplay.

Miss Ayres is a girl of remarkable beauty and screen personality, and with several years' experience as "leading lady" of recognized ability, she has all the necessary requisites to enter stardom with an assured success.

After her graduation from high school in Chicago, Illinois, Miss Ayres was intent on entering the University of Chicago to take up the study of law or medicine as a profession. While on a visit to the Essanay studio, however, her attractiveness was noted by the director and she was asked to play a small part in a picture which she did in a capable manner. A permanent engagement was then offered her, which she accepted.

The fascinating thought of a motion picture career offset her ambition and she determined to make the screen her life work.

By coincidences application to the Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., one of the oldest and largest distributing organizations in Great Britain, arrived Saturday on the Lusitania for London after spending several weeks in New York studying American motion picture conditions in general and especially familiarizing himself with the activities of Educational Films Corporation.

Sailing on the Lusitania also was William Davis, managing director of Educational Films, Co., Ltd., of London, which is one hundred per cent owned by Educational Films Corporation.

New Studio To Obviate
Editorial Troubles

The new Famous Players-Lasky studio, now nearing completion at Mount Lodi City, L. I., will be able to boast one of the most efficiently organized editorial departments in the country, it is reported. Gardner Huntting, western production editor, outlined the company's plans in a recent interview.

"For some time past," Mr. Huntting said, "the task of editing our productions has been surrounded by difficulties. Owing to the crowded studio conditions and the consequent lack of office space, we have hitherto been compelled to distribute the various units of our department around in our different studios; which, in spite of the best of cooperation, has not always had the tendency to produce entirely satisfactory results. In our new plant, all undesirable features will be eliminated for we shall all be housed under one roof."
Carmel Myers Will Be Starred by Universal

Her first picture is not chosen yet, but Universal expects to have it ready for her when she reports at Universal City several weeks hence.

Bert Williams Signed by Tarkington Baker

That Tarkington Baker's plans are rapidly coming to a head is evidenced in his announced signing that he has signed up Bert Williams to star in a series of two reel comedies. This is believed by some critics the most popular comedian on the American stage. In recent seasons he has been featured in the Zigfield Folies.

Mr. Baker announces that some of the Williams pictures will be made at the coast. Later, when the comedian appears as a star on Broadway, the picture production offices will be transferred to New York City.

We have also played 'Lombardi, Ltd.;' 'Please Get Married'; 'Pitts with Warner'; and 'Should a Woman Tell?' and Metro can point with pride to the culture of these releases.'

All New York Likes Lloyd

Comedian's Second Series Booked at Capitol and Strand Theatres

HAROLD LLOYD's meteoric rise to the foremost ranks of screen comedians is reflected in the flying start made in the booking of his second series of two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe.

Broadway's two large houses of entertainment—the Strand and Capitol—will play the new Lloyds day and date. The Pathe star is new to the Capitol patrons, but his entire first series has been featured and widely exploited by Managing Director Jack Eaton of the Strand. It was only after spirited bidding that the Capitol was enabled to hand Lloyd Edward Bowes, manager of the cinema palace, was determined to get him and paid the highest price he ever gave for a comedy series.

No concerted effort has been made by the New York branch or any other office of Pathe Exchange, Inc. to book the second Lloyd series, yet virtually every important theatre in the metropolitan district has signed for the new comedies. The success that greeted Lloyd's first two-reelers was so great that exhibitors have booked no delay in tying him up for the second series. The new comedies will be played over the entire Marcus Loew circuit in the metropolitan area, and in five of B. S. Moss's leading houses.

The Loew theatres that will play the subjects include the Victoria, Grecy Street, Corona, Church, American, Orpheum, Boulevard, National, DeKalb, Fulton, Delancey Street, Palace, Avenue B, Warwick, Circle, New York, Forty-secon Street, Broadway, 116th Street, Eighty-six Street, Seventeenth Avenue, Bijou, Burland, Brevoort, Hoboken and Metropolitan.

Motion Picture News

Bessie Barriscale has a central role in the new Robertson-Cole production, "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."
THE unique selling campaign conducted by the field forces of Realart Pictures Corporation in behalf of Wanda Hawley's first production has resulted in contracts from big exhibitors and circuits in such numbers that the machinery to approve and inspect them has been kept busy. The stamina to close contracts on the new Realart artist, according to Realart officials, is without parallel in their memory.

Southern Enterprise, Inc., has closed for "Miss Hawley" for their three "key city" houses, and the balance of their large circuit. In a letter to Realart they call Miss Hawley "one of the films' fairest", and say they waived their customary rule of seeing a picture in advance of booking in her favor.

Sam Harding, of the Lovely theatre in Kansas City, Mo., wrote to the company that "I am wasting no time taking no chances, but instead have signed contract on "Miss Hobbs."

W. D. Duee, general manager of the H. C. Moor Theatrical Enterprises, wrote that he knew "Realart had picked a winner" when they signed Miss Hawley, and speaking of the proportion under which her first picture was offered, said, "I have never heard of its equal in the history of the industry."

The Central Circuit in Pennsylvania and the Chauncerie Circuit have booked "Miss Hobbs" among others, according to advice from Jay Emanuel, Realart's manager in Philadelphia. Tomy Moore has taken a contract for the picture for the Risilo theatre in Washington, and a flood of contracts arrived from the Boston office which officials of the home office were unable to examine this week.

Five Reeler Heads Program

"Five Foot Highness" Leads List of Universal's Weekly Releases

Among the releases on Universal's program for the week of April 19th, is a five reel special attraction, "Her Five Foot Highness," featuring Edgar Roberts. The subject is taken from a story written by Tarkington Baxton. It is directed by Harry Franklin. In the telling of this clever mixture of comedy and drama Miss Roberts has excellent support from Katherine Kirkham, Harold Miller, Leonard Chasnop, Ogden Crane, Stuthope Wheatero, Leo Larque, Rudolph Christians and many others.

"The Lion Man," the Universal serial with Jack Perrin and Katherine O'Connor, is now in its seventeenth episode and as it only has one more episode to run, every foot of film is full of vital action. Another serial is "Elmo the Fearless," starring Elmo Lincoln. The release for this week is the eleventh episode, entitled "The Temple of the Dragon."

An Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy entitled "Somebody Lied," and a Rattler comedy, "A Jazzy Jantig" featuring Pinky Monty, Virginia Warwick and William Irving, are the fun rollickers for this week.

A two reel western entitled "One He-Man" with Jack Perrin and Josephine Sali, International News Numbers 19 and 20, and the Universal New Screen Magazine Number 62 round out the program of releases.

New Features in Studio

Innovations in Electrical Equipment in Famous Players Studio

The electrical equipment, which is now being installed in the new Long Island City studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is to include a sub-station in the studio which will allow 7,600 volts, alternating current to be received direct from the Central Station. Special permission had to be obtained before this could be put into effect. Seventy-six, one hundred volt synchronous motor-generator sets will apply the direct current for studio lighting. The general lighting and power will be obtained from a step-down transformer connected to the 7,600 volt primaries. The entire plan is automatically controlled.

On account of the life hazard which is involved, safety features of many different kinds have been installed. In the event of a breakdown of a transformer or motor generator it becomes automatically disconnected. All high tension connections are enclosed in a high tension concrete vault which is two stories high. A network grounding system, with shafts sunk twenty feet into the ground, has been provided as a precaution against accidental grounding, in case of faulty insulation.

Another departure from convention is to be found in the direct current feeder system for lighting the studio stage. It consists of stacks of bare but barbs, run from the main switchboard to the generator room, up studio walls and across the girder space of the main studio to feed the various switchboards.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America has entered into a contract with the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company whereby the entire organization has been visualized.

Educators Considering Film Possibilities

That the foremost educators of the country are ready to consider, actively and systematically, the educational possibilities of motion pictures, was amply evidenced last week when Dr. Rowland Rogers, director of the Educational Department of Bray Pictures Corporation, appeared before the Faculty Club of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at the Walker Memorial hall in Cambridge.

The address by Dr. Rogers followed the showing of Bray Pictures covering a variety of subjects.

Von Tilzer Song Sids "The Harvest Moon"

That another of the W. W. Hodkinson releases has been the inspiration for a ballad of tremendous appeal is revealed in the announcement by Harry Von Tilzer, of his newest song hit, "When the Harvest Moon Is Shining," based on the new Gibralter picture, "Augustus Thomas." "The Harvest Moon" starring Doris Kenyon. The ballad, dedicated to the star, is sponsored by Mr. Von Tilzer and Andrew E. Sterling, author of a string of song successes, the Von Tilzer organization declaring it the finest sentimental number since "When the Harvest Days Are Over, Jessie Dear," also a Von Tilzer triumph.

vant" would enjoy a tremendous success as a result of its extra-

"Sex" Booked by Big Houses

J. PARKER READS. Latest production, "Sex," is made the subject of a lengthy report, just issued from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The booking of the feature by some of the leading first-run houses of the country is especially emphasized in the Hodkinson announcement, which follows:

The prevailing angle of the picture business is that when a picture's big by seeing which exhibitors book it, holds especially true with regard to J. Parker Read's sensational Louise Glahn production, "Sex," by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Fred Nibs. The W. W. Hodkinson sales organization is now feeling all of the thrill and satisfaction that a distributor has when he has a tremendous winner on his hands.

"Right from the jump Louise Glahn in "Sex" has demonstrated that producer Read and herself have a "stamped picture," one that everybody wants—one that displaces previously booked pictures in the week because the exhibitors themselves are so full of enthusiasm that they defer other pictures to get "Sex" played instantly and on release date."

"This, for example, is what Jacob Lorrie, owner of the Modern, Beacon and Park Theatres, Boston, did to start "Sex" playing on April 11, "Sex" goes into the Modern and Beacon plays a full week and date in each house on its national release date and it is the first production in months to open with full page advertising announcement straight across the entire field of Boston daily newspapers.

"Close by, over in Springfield, Mass., Abe Goldside is opening his new Capitol theatre and "Sex" will be the second attraction to play in his fine new theatre. Mr. Goldside also has booked "Sex" for his Empire Theatre, Portland, Maine.

"Frank L. Newman and his manager, M. H. Feld, dispensed another picture to put "Sex" in the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, on release date as Leo Landau at his peculiar Butterfly Theatre in Milwaukie."

"After its first run under W. C. Dicken in the Harry Mor Theatre, Chicago, with two weeks at the Syropy Skorins chain of theatre protection, "Sex" opens on April 11 in Chicago in the Elgin & Therry Circuit theatres and similar dates in other neighborhood first run houses in all sections of the city. On April 15 fifteen prints will be working day by day in the city limits of Chicago, and all of these prints are booked solid from that date onward for sixty days in Chicago. To date one hundred and three theatres in Chicago have signed contracts for "Sex."

Miller Overrode Precedent

Realart Says He Got Local Color Without Use of Usual Expedients

PRECEDENTS that have never been completely disregarded by Charles Miller in making the "Law of the Yukon," the first of his series of specials for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Realart Pictures Corporation, the picture is about completed and will be released within a short time by Realart Pictures Corporation. The story is inspired by Robert W. Service's famous poem in the volume, "The Spell of the Yukon," published by Barse and Hopkins, New York City.

More than 100,000 feet of film were exposed, it is said, in making the picture, this winter at Port Harris, N. Y. This amount was used in the two takes of all scenes and presented a heavy task to Mr. Miller in cutting to the required 6,000 feet for the final negative.

Regarding the cutting of the finished picture—Realart states:

"In making the picture, Director Miller flung precedent aside in the interest of cleaner pictures. He has proved, according to Mayflower officials who have seen parts of the picture during the process of assembling, that atmosphere in a dance hall need not compare with that of atmosphere merely suggested can be made as effective as those actually represented.

"The atmosphere, which he has injected into the scenes, resembles more a reality than a reproduction, it is said.

"Mr. Miller has achieved these results without resorting to the banalities associated with dance hall scenes since the early days of motion pictures. Not only does it seem to be taken, Gambling is subtly suggested, not pictured. The female attachments of the place disappear themselves with an abandon tempered by discretion. There is a danger, but not the customarily long drawn out, rough and tumble affair, it is brief but thrilling.

"Director Miller is reported to have handled the scenes of tempestuous whirls of pleasure in the Alaskan dance hall so that they glow with life and color, and yet are free from anything that might be considered objectionable."

Happy Combination in "Treasure Island"

"Seldom has a happier combination of author, director and cast joined in the production of a motion picture than in "Treasure Island." Mausoleum's Paramount Artcraft super-special, which is released April 6, announces the Famous Lasky Corporation. The production is founded on the well known adventure story from the pen of Robert Louis Stevenson and working under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, the cast includes such film celebrities as Shirley Mason, Leon Chaney and Charles Ogle."

With the completion of this pro-triumphant comedies to exhibitors.

In last release, "Haunted Spooks," he attained his greatest success.
From every section of the country, exhibitors are heaping praise upon Lloyd for his work in this picture, and in many quarters it has been hailed as the best and most whole-

Rivoli Books Its Third Realert
Production, "The Stolen Kiss"
THAT large body of exhibitors who have a line on "what's what" from things shown in New York City, will find some food for thought in the Rivoli Theatre's book on Constance Binney in "The Stolen Kiss" for the week of April 4th.
Not only does this booking make it mine straight for Realert Pictures Corporation in the big Broadway houses, but it emphasizes the fact that the Rivoli has booked its third Realert picture. Others previously shown were "The Fear Market" and "Anne of Green Gables."
"The Stolen Kiss" is an adaptation of the novel, "Little Miss The Day," by Lucille Van Slyke. It is the story of a little Brooklyn girl, who is kept in sheer ignorance of the simplest things of life by an af-father. There is a kiss over the garden wall and a romance in which fate is untangling.

In the production Constance Bin-

Barker, Richard Carlyle, George
Voylan, Dave Davis and Ada

the photography. The scenario was the work of Kathryn Smart.

Metro Plans Special Aids
New Department to Give Special
Exploitation Service Under Way
SPECIAL exploitation service, in addition to the many valuable suggestions embodied in its various press books, is now being devised and supplied to exhibitors by Metro
Pictures Corporation, it is stated.
At present this special exploitation service is taking the form of minio-graphed sheets containing from eight to a dozen out-of-the-ordinary "starts" carefully explained and exhibited by a department of expert film salesmen who know the problems that confront exhibitors of motion pictures.
"This new department in the Metro-Low" organization will be to rapidly expanded to cover all exploration needs on the part of exhibitors and to give them every assistance in putting over Metro-Low's special productions for their full box-office value," is the an-mouncement from the Metro offices.
"Low-Metro recognizes that the company's responsibility does not end with the rental of a film production; that local conditions and other circumstances frequently present problems to individual exhibitors that can and should be settled by expert advisers to insure the biggest money returns with the picture.
"Even in advance of the organization of its new department, however, Loew has been and is supplying exhibitors with invaluable assistance in the matter of exploiting the Loew-Metro productions. It is pointed out, as one specific example, that Loew-Metro accessories include more lithographed paper than is supplied by any other company in the industry. The Loew-Metro poster accessories embrace a smashing three-color, twenty-four sheets two handsome six-sheets, three three-sheets and a half-sheet size window card for display in shops."

Dick Kennedy, a well-known cartoonist and one of the most popular contributors during the war to "The Stars and Stripes," the official newspaper of the American Expeditionary Force, will supply a new animated comic strip for Universal's proposed Novelties Reel, "Mickey the Wartime Wonder." Kennedy's brother, Hal
Hede, who will edit the reel. Kennedy was the creator of Mickey, the Dum Family, Binks and other popular "comic" characters syndicated throughout the country. He drew for the Hearst papers for several years preceding the war.

"Miracle of Money" Has Spinster Roles

An ab toute story as an American life, with two murderers in the principal parts, has been filmed by Holbrook Hobbs under the title "The Miracle of Money". This is the tale of the life of Miss. Hobbs' latest picture, and it is an adaptation of the famous story "The Marrying of Mammy" written by D.W. Grimes. All who have seen the film have pronounced the first scenes of the completed picture are said to have been deeply impressed by the strength of the story. A minor appeal it makes to all women.

Care Taken in Details of "Harvest Moon"

The costumes of the Hunters in "The Harvest Moon", the Angier play to be filmed by Selznick Pictures, were made for the Broadway production of Hunter's "Their God Is the Sun of the Hunters", which was written by the author of "Varsity Girl". The result has been to give the picture complete inaccuracy in costuming. The interiors, also, are remarkable for the excellent lighting and drawing of detail, which have been drawn from scenes of the same source.

Teachers' Contest Has Proved Successful

With an ever-increasing number of students and teachers all over the United States, "The Literary Digest" has found that their efforts to illustrate the "Better Pay for Teachers" movement is running smoothly along.

The contest closes on April 3, and contestants should mail their stories to the contest, before that date to "Teachers' Tops", The Literary Digest, New York City.

Bronx House Filled by Triple-Play Campaign

Sydney S. Cohen, prominent New York showman, featured Hudsonkin that releases the entire week in his 2,000-seat McKinley Square theatre, the Bronx, last week to capacity crowds, attracting and no small measure by the triple-play exploitation, which upon Louise Glenn in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter", "The Captive", starring Leah Baird and the all-star production, "The Temporary Wife".

Goldwyn Negotiates Foreign Deals

Arthur Zehm, manager of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's foreign sales department, who is directing the marketing of Goldwyn Pictures in foreign countries, reported the closing of two important deals last week, one through N.A. Reichlin, Goldwyn representative in Mexico and South America, and the other through Geoffrey Nye, who is making a tour of the Far East. Both of the Goldwyn representatives reported that the outlook for the film industry in their respective districts was very satisfactory.

"The Silent Avenger" Does Big Business

Vitagraph reports this week that its exchange have topped three weeks off the normal selling time required for the booking of serials. The fact has been accomplished in behalf of Vitagraph's new super-serial, "The Silent Avenger".

Burton King Starts on Second Production

Having completed "The Road to Araby", Burton King is preparing for the second production "The Hidden Path".

Anita Stewart Turns Vamp

For the first time in her screen career, Anita Stewart will be seen as a vamp when her latest R.B. Mayer production, "The Yellow Typhoon", is released through First National channels.

Miss Stewart has two roles in the picture, playing the part of twin sisters of widely contrasting natures. Hilda, a hard and determined woman with a sweet, wholesome girl, well-educated and refined and devoted to the care of her invalid mother. Both roles are guided by an insatiable desire for wealth and luxury. During her meteoric career, she rebels and deserts several men, only turning a new victim into her net each time by her great beauty and personal magnetism.

Taken all in all, Anita Stewart became a very dangerous vamp on her first trial. She said that she got a lot of fun out of portraying the part as it was in such great contrast to her other role in the picture and so different to any character she had ever had.

"The Yellow Typhoon" was directed by Edward Jose and photographed by Rene Guissart. Supporting Miss Stewart are Ward Crane, Joseph Kilgour, Donald Macdonald, E.J. Brady, George Fisher, Mrs. Ormond and Frank Tokunaga. Monte M. Katzebschild prepared the screen version.

Louise Gauma Picture Wins Big Bookings

What may be considered proof of the popularity of Louise Glenn in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter", productions are found in the announcement of the W.W. Houdlister Corporation that "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is fast nearing the black mark set by the artiste's "Sahara". Within the past week the great volume of business done on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" has necessitated a second edition of press sheets and other accessories.

Buys Employees' Tickets

Big Manufacturer So Pleased By Picture, He Will Treat All Hands

I will purchase five thousand tickets for my employees to see "Dangerous Hours" because I consider this production a most powerfully appealing picture for fairness, sparseness and truthfulness and the very best method with which to combat the most dangerous evil that has confronted America since the subjugation of the biblical "Hunt". This spoke George H. Hamann, president of the Saginaw (Mich.) Manufacturers' Association, director of the Board of Commerce and general manager of all the General Motors Corporation interests in Saginaw, when asked for his opinion as to the effectiveness of "Dangerous Hours".

The two associations have been waging a determined fight against the Red Menace and other turbulent elements whose activities through-out the country have aroused the vigilance of Government officials. The members who spoke stated that in their estimation there could be no better way to deliver a crushing blow to this menace than to show "Dangerous Hours" to the people, and each and every one backed up his opinion by ordering in advance of the Saginaw engagement admission tickets for all their employees.

Metro has obtained the rights of Frank Davy (Mrs. Julie Franklin) for their "fewer and better" productions. "The Heart of a Child," the Naumann picture, was written by Mrs. Franklin.

It is promised by the Kremer organization.

Director Broke Record in Recent Serial

How Director E. A. Martin saved "The Lost City," might be the title of a short story of efficiency and ability if the full account of his efforts that serial were chronicled. He had been ill for six weeks when called from his bed on October 15th by the news that Juanita Hansen, starring in the big serial, had signed to go with Pathé on January 1st. Realizing that it would be necessary to complete all the scenes in which she appeared, at once, Mr. Martin relegated twelve episodes, segregated her scenes, and had the filming completed by December 22nd.

Treats Current Problem

“A Child for Sale” Is Said to Be Effective Presentation of Topic

The evils in our modern social structure that give rise to certain practices as the rule of young children by their parents to save the youngsters from grim want are graphically depicted in Ivan Abramson’s latest picture, entitled “A Child for Sale.” In a statement just issued by the producing forces, Mr. Abramson is credited with having achieved a really notable production and one that is due to attract the attention of the thinking public to this problem of modern life more effectively than any other agency thus far perfected. The preview, says the report, is rather a daring piece of work, and Mr. Abramson did not stop a minute to think whether he would be praised or condemned. Every angle of the problem, not sex, is the story set forth in unerring precision in the various situations with the result that rarely a work, be it oral, literary, or a feature picture, has been witnessed that has so perfectly accomplished a “A Child for Sale,” Mr. Abramson possesses one big advantage over other producers, in that he is his own manager, author, scenarist and director and in this way is enabled to put his ideas upon the screen exactly as he conceives them.

One of the remarkable accomplishments of this picture is the evolution of Creighton Hale into a dramatic artist of high order, as critics of the press have carefully noted. This young man herefore essayed juvenile roles, invariably playing the young lover, but this time the director of a serious role that is called for entirely different kind of screen acting.

Adapted from the novel of the same name by Charles Tenney Jackson, Truman van Dyke in the role of Harlan Van Hart will play opposite Miss Love. In the role of the picturesque editor of the town newspaper, Lloyd Bacon, a film actor of long experience, brings a dramatic finesse to a highly colorful part. Playing the parts of Judge Van Hart and Mrs. Van Hart, the pillars of this small town society, are Sidney Deane and Frances Raymond, both qualified by considerable experience in similar roles to adequately portray the narrow philosophy and snobbery of this particular upper class. Butch Hendricks, Jack Donavan, J. Norman Hammond and Curt Ralhefield complete the principal cast.

The Miss Love Company will leave soon for location work in the north of California, after completing several interior scenes in the Los Angeles studios. A portion of the story will be made in the very locale around which the narrative was written, the Mississippi Valley, and for this purpose Miss Love will take her entire company forward in the near future.

Bacon to Film Three Popular Plays

Gerald F. Bacon, producer for both stage and screen, announces that early June he will start production on three popular stage plays, including a screen version of “The Midnighters,” by A. J. Callaghan. The announcement this week of the completed cast of “The Midlanders,” the first picture which Miss Love is making for the Bacon, J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., is said to assure the star the support of a capable cast for her forthcoming independent productions.

Following the acquisition by the Callaghan organization of Joseph de Graas and Ida May Parker to direct Miss Love, the producing company announced its intention of obtaining the services of a high-class supporting company to assist the star in putting over a noteworthy film version of her first vehicle, “The Midlanders,” which is being

Garsson’s Picture Scoring

Says “A Dream of Fair Women” Is Winning in South and Mid-West

MURRAY W. GARSSON, general manager of the Fountun Film Company, has returned to New York following a trip through the South and Middle West in the interest of “A Dream of Fair Women,” the two-reel special, featuring the two winners of the “Fame and Fortune” contest of Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Shadowland, which he is releasing on the state rights plan. Mr. Garsson reports that enthusiasm, in the various sections that he has visited, is such that the salesmen report an increased interest in the picture. The principal result of “A Dream of Fair Women,” according to Mr. Garsson, is the opportunity that it affords the fans to see four of the most beautiful girls in the United States, and also to see the latest in motion picture photography.

Release Date Is Advanced

“Screen Snap Shots” to Be Ready in a Few Weeks Announces Cohn

FOLLOWING his conference with leading independent and state rights buyers, during which they demanded more short subjects for the independent field, Jack Cohn, president of the firm of Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall Roan Boys comedies and other single and double reel subjects, has determined to advance the release date upon the first issue of Screen Snap Shots.

Independent buyers who have seen previews of this interesting release are said to be enthusiastic in its praise. Its purpose is to escort patrons of the country’s photoplay homes through the mysteries and intricacies of motion picture production in the West Coast studios. Not only does it do this, but it brings the private life of the most famous stars to the patrons of every theatre which books the release.

The first issue will be released within a few weeks, according to Mr. Cohn, and if promised to help fill the shortage of quality short subjects available to independent buyers, and will contain studies of Norma Talmadge, Bessie Borrisscale, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, J. Warren Kerigan and others well known in pictures.
FILM A careful study of the independent field W. F. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, made the rights to the new special productions that company now has ready for the independent field, according to an announcement made this week.

“Love’s Protege,” in which Ora Carew is featured, was released in the interest of Indian affairs. The movie, directed by Mr. Roberts, is a story of a beautiful mountain girl, Ruth, portrayed by Mrs. Carew, whose lover and Indian, was killed by the whites.

The Arrow Film Company also recently acquired the rights to “The White Man’s Cave.” No more unusual picture was ever offered state rights buyers and others who are interested in an ideal vehicle for road show work than this feature, it is claimed. The special feature tells a story of a tribe of Indians, before the days of the white men in the Old West.

The story is offered by a cast composed entirely of Indians. The impressive scenes and panoramic views are of the New World have never before been so vividly told. The story is one of the most unique and interesting stories ever told. It is a story that will appeal to all audiences.

To Form Aid Association
Help for Needy Studio Workers
To Be Object; Big Ball Planned

FOR a long time J.N. Nauhy, general manager of the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been considering the possibilities of establishing an association to aid the studio employees when in need. As a means to raise the necessary funds an association was formed to give a ball, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the formation of this benificent association. The organization in charge of the ball, which is known as the Eastern Studios Ball Association, is headed by J. N. Nauhy as president, Gardner Hart as vice-president, M. Healy, and J. McFarland, secretary.

The Commodore Hotel ballroom has been engaged for Wednesday, April 28, and committees to handle the arrangements have been formed. The plans now under consideration are for vaudeville to occupy the evening between the time the doors open at 8:30 until 10 o'clock at which time dancing will begin and last until twelve. The grand march will be at twelve, and after the grand march—more dancing. Plans for some form of entertainment between these periods are being made. A buffet supper will be served.

The souvenir of the evening will be a program, the front cover of which will be done in colors by one of the members of the art and decoration department. Photographs of the stars done in sepia, with a perforated edge, so that they may be removed for decorative purposes, will be part of the program.

The attendance of everyone prominent in the motion picture business, including as many stars as will be in town at that time, is expected. Two bands of twenty pieces each have been engaged to supply music for the entertainment and dancing.

"You Get What You Give"
So Says Henry Kolker in Speaking of Director's Handling of Actors

HENRY KOLKER, who as associate director produced "The Third Generation" with an all-star cast for Brasswood and who is now directing "Asa Pitts" at the same studio with marked success in the second of a special series of Kolker-Pitts pictures, is a very firm believer in the Biblical maxim "as ye sow so shall ye reap." In the course of a chat with the western representative of Robertso-Cole Company, Mr. Kolker said, "I do not think a director can get the best results out of his players by assuming an attitude of omniscient aloofness and requiring each player rigidly to adjust his conception of the character he is to portray to that of the director. Real artists of the stage or screen are such because of the brain, soul and experience they have. They must be given all reasonable latitude of expression. Otherwise their performance will be stiff, stuff and wooden. "I feel that in proportion as the director encourages the co-operation of his players so he frees them within their own interest or sympathy which alone marks the difference between a rigidly exact and a heart appealing performance. Spontaneity and originality can only be expected from the player whose mind and body are relaxed and invted into the spirit of the play by the genuine sympathy and hearty co-operation of the director. "In short, I feel that a director gets just what he gives, either a performance which gets across by the very hauntness of its appeal or a stiffened though perhaps technically correct portrayal, according to the degree in which his own attitude either invites or repels the sympathy and sincere co-operation of his players."

be fairly comfortable in the zero weather of New Hampshire. Then after surviving seven days under the studio lights and steam heat, in heavy fur, she was called for a few outdoor night scenes in the cheerless evening gowns. She thinks that it “The Timber Wolf” doesn’t prove the best picture she has ever done, but it isn’t because she hasn’t been truly self-sacrificing.

Bessie Love, who has won popularity during the past two years as an actress, now proves to have a chance to make the most of her talents in a variety of roles. The Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., are planning to present her in some big stories that will allow her generous scope for versatility that they believe she undoubtedly possesses. Miss Love is to have two directors, Joseph de Grasse and Fred Mac Park, in order to introduce both the feminine, subtle and keenly humors temperament that is attributed to Miss Park, and the dramatic and emotional color that Mr. de Grasse can inject into actions. The Andrew J. Callaghan Productions are expecting great results from this idea.

Annette Kellerman is besieged with the feature she is making for Carl L. Jossey, the title of which has been chosen, but is not to be kept a dark secret until the film is released, and ready for release. Warner Colman holds the supporting cast, and the whole company is reported to have been selected all over California. According to Mr. Jossey, the picture will be a different sort of production from anything Miss Kellerman has yet done; it will show her not only as a marine Venus, but as a unique American girl with all round athletic ability. It is a comedy drama of to-day with a strong melodramatic climax.

William J. Taylor, the Paramount director, sees great significance in the statement made by New York theatrical reviewer that John Barrymore has shown in his stage work beneficial effects from his screen experience. Barrymore is now playing Shakespeare’s tragedy, “Richard III,” in New York with sensational success.

The critic referred to declared that the actor shows a sureness, ease in method and a repose that never characterized his work until recently. “These virtues,” said Mr. Taylor, “are due to come from experience before the camera. I know not only from observation but as a former doer of the same work.”

But Barrymore is now showing the hemelians under which the player of the footlights labors. The most thing about the screen, from the actor’s standpoint, is the privilege it gives him of scrutinizing his own work.

Time Must Be Given
Continuity Writer

Philip Lonergan, who is doing the continuity of “The Girl With the Jazz Heart,” which Goldwyn will soon produce with Madge Kennedy in the title role, believes in plenty of time for proper preparation of scripts.

“All people think of a builder," Mr. Lonergan says, "who must conscientiously turn upon the steel framework of a skyscraper, trusting to the brick and stone-work to keep the building from crashing down upon the passing thousands. Yet that is exactly what producers do when they make a continuity writer rush a story through in a few days and then expect the director and star to get the production over. It isn’t fair to the star, the director, the writer, or—the public.”

Metro Obtains Control of Dallas Exchange

Metro Pictures Corporation has come into full ownership of the Dallas, Texas, exchange formerly controlled by E. H. Hubbell interests. This exchange reaches virtually the entire southwestern motion picture territory.

Abortion of the Dallas exchange, following Metro’s purchase of its New Jersey exchange from Herman Janssen a few weeks ago, leaves only two offices among those handling Metro pictures in the United States, still under independent management. These are in Boston and Philadelphia.

Made Suggestions on Stills for Katherine MacDonald’s Production

With the completion of the finishing touches which represent cutting and assembling, Miss MacDonald’s latest attraction is ready for public view. The editors will be forwarded to First National Exhibitors’Circuit for distribution as provided by her contract with that organization.

The large number of California exhibitors who are said to have attached a personal interest in the various steps leading up to the production of this picture is definite evidence, according to Miss MacDonald and her studio associates, that “Passion’s Playground,” in addition to relating a story that maintains remarkable human interest, will meet with the same success enjoyed by such productions. All the exhibitors are reported to have made personal visits to the MacDonald studios during the filming of the picture, and their suggestions as to stills which may be made into attractive lobby novelties, newspaper ads and even into twenty-four-sheets guided the studio manager and director in the shooting of stills.

The release of “Passion’s Playground” marks the fourth production of Miss MacDonald following her rise to individual stardom upon the formation of her own company and the distributing negotiations entered into with First National. In the “Thunderbolt” and “The Beauty Market,” she scored great successes and was given the sobriquet of “The American Beauty.” In “The Taming Point,” her own beauty amidst the choice settings and romance of Robert W. Chambers’s court won her added admirers. But in “Passion’s Playground” she is declared to have attained a perfect vision of how to use natural beauty and charm, emotional, masterful direction and loyal work on the part of a supporting cast are regarded by First National.

Miss MacDonald claims that a large amount of credit for the success of her latest is due to Norman Kerry, Neil Craig, Edwin Stevens, Virginia Alworth, Rudolph Valentino, Clifford batter, Howard Gaye, and Walt Whitman.

Projection—Camera—Music Hints and Ideas About “New Theatres” Pages 3523-3550

The locations of loges and projection room in the Queen theatre, Dallas, Texas, are worthy of attention.
Facade and cross-sectional view of proposed Palace theatre to be built by the Allen interests in Montreal. The theatre was designed by C. Howard Crane of Detroit.

It is intended to incorporate in this house many improvements found desirable from the performance of the many other theatres in the Allen chain.

Seven other Allen theatres will be opened within the next six months.
C. Howard Crane Has Finished Plans for Latest Allen Theatre in Canada

The Palace Will Be Located in Montreal

A NNOUNCEMENT was recently made of the plans for the big motion picture theatre, which is being erected in Montreal on St. Catherine street, opposite Victoria street and extending back to Cathcart street. The builders, Messrs. Juel and J. J. Allen, have issued a statement promising that this will be the finest cinema establishments in all Canada.

Allen's Palace Theatre, as it will be called, will cost a half million dollars for the house and decorations. It will be entirely fireproof and equipped with every convenience and accommodation that is known in modern houses.

The entrance on St. Catherine street will be twenty-five feet wide and this will run back to the main auditorium, which will occupy a plot ninety feet by one hundred and seventy-five. The seating capacity will be approximately three thousand, including two thousand seats on the ground floor, eight hundred in the balcony and two hundred loge seats. The front of the building will be constructed of glazed terra cotta and will be very ornate. There will be an ornamental iron marquee extending to the curb, the full length of the house. Special arrangements have been made for the protection of the patrons so that there will be ample lobby space and ticket selling booths, which will protect from the weather. The floors and walls of the lobby will be of white and green marble. There will be unusual decorations followed in the frieze and the ceilings.

When one enters the theatre there will be a striking scene presented with the foyer luxuries. Here there will be provided comfortable seats for parties desiring to meet, and leading from this there will be dressing rooms for the ladies and smoking rooms for the men, equipped with every possible comfort.

Directly over the foyer, and between the ground floor and the balcony there will be a mezzanine lounge which promises something distinctive in Montreal theatre construction. This will be treated in the form of an eclipical well opening, giving the patrons a sight of the foyer. This will be constructed largely as a lounge room.
